No injunction can ordinarily be granted at the instance of an unsuccessful candidate for Municipal election restraining his duly elected rival from taking his seat in the Municipality, pending the disposal of civil proceedings regarding the election. [ibid.]

Quære.—Whether the High Court has jurisdiction to grant injunction in such a case as the above? [ibid.]

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an injunction restraining the second respondent herein from taking his seat as Councillor in the Municipal Council of the Municipality of Madura Town pending disposal of C. R. P. No. 182 of 1924 presented to the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in O. P. No. 59 of 1923.

Messrs E. L. Thornton for Messrs. C. Krishnaswami Rao, A. V. Visvanatha Sastri and A. Raghunatha Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Raja Aiyar, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is a petition for issue of an injunction restraining second respondent from taking his seat as Councillor in the Municipal Council of Madura pending disposal of C. R. P. No. 182 of 1924.

Petitioner and respondent were rival candidates in a Municipal election; petitioner was declared, and has since been unseated after the inquiry in O. P. No. 51 of 1923 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, and C. R. P. No. 182 of 1924 is preferred against that decision.

I am doubtful whether this Court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction in such a matter. No such power lies with the Judge who holds an inquiry under the election rules, and it is not clear that the High Court acting in revision has any extended power. If a suit is transferred to the High Court, its powers are confined to powers which but for the transfer might have been exercised by the original Court: Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1). However the Calcutta High Court has held that it has general power of granting injunctions: Rash Behary Dey v. Bhowani Churn Bhose (2) and Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (3) and I will proceed on the assumption that the Court has jurisdiction.

Obviously an injunction of the sort prayed for, which can only be based upon a prima facie consideration of the case, must be granted with circumspection. It is impossible to lay down an exhaustive rule but generally speaking such injunctions should be confined to preserving the status quo ante, to preventing irremediable damage or loss to the property in the suit, or to averting substantial injury. None of these conditions arise in the present case. This Court is not moved to reinstate the unseated Councillor, but to unseat the Councillor declared elected in his stead, and thus create a vacancy in the Municipal Council and an entirely new situation. It may be noted here that in Aslatt v. Corporation of Southampton (4), the leading English case which warrants the interference of the Courts in these matters, the Courts' order of injunction preserved the status quo ante. Compare also Wallace, J., in Sarvothama Rao v. Chairman, Municipal Saidapet (5), "the ordinary Civil Court has the right to grant a proper temporary injunction restraining matter in status quo ante until the suit is tried". Nor is there any question of irremediable damage, or indeed of any damage at all. The injury which is contemplated can at most only be such injury as an inhabitant of Madura town may suffer owing to a Councillor who will ultimately be proved not to have been duly elected temporarily taking his seat in the Council. It is difficult to conceive the circumstances which would give any substance to an injury of this sort; and there is no special allegation to this effect.

Accordingly I see no reason to grant an injunction, and dismiss this petition with costs.

Memorandum of objections will follow.

Landlord and tenant—Rent not enhanced for long period—Inference—Holding held at fixed rent in perpetuity.

The fact that a holding has been held for a long period at a rent which has not been changed is a factor to be considered in deciding whether the holding is held in perpetuity at a fixed rent, but the fact that a landlord may not have thought fit to enhance the rent for a long number of years does not by itself make the inference inevitable that the holding is held at a rent fixed in perpetuity. Greaves, J.—This is an appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Mukerji, dated the 24th March 1924. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff to eject defendant No. 1 from the land in suit as a trespasser. Defendant No 2 is the malik of the land and he granted a permanent lease of the land which consists of two plots to the plaintiff. The plaintiff went to take possession of the land and found the first defendant in occupation of the land. The first plot consists of two bighas and 13 cottas odd and the second of some 11 cottas and 15 chhataks. Both are situated in the town of Hooghly and the main contentions addressed to us in this appeal have been with regard to the first plot because I understand that the appellant admits that if he fails in his appeal with regard to the first plot he cannot succeed with regard to the second plot as his contentions with regard thereto are not so strong as with regard to the first plot. The first Court dismissed the suit and held that the Transfer of Property Act applied and not the Bengal Tenancy Act. He held that the bigger plot had been in possession of the appellant or his vendors, for some seven generations at a rent which had not been changed for a period of over 50 years and that the origin of the tenancy was unknown and he finally came to the conclusion that the rent was fixed in perpetuity and that the plots were transferable. The lower Appellate Court held that the Transfer of Property Act did not apply, that the land was udbastoo bagat land which means "outside the bastoo" and that although the rent had not been changed for a long period as it had not been let out for residential purposes there was no presumption as to the permanency of the tenancy and decreed the suit. Mr. Justice Mukerjee in the appeal to him dismissed the appeal and I understand that the main complaint with regard to his judgment is with regard to his finding on the question of recognition. After coming to the conclusion that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point was not sufficient the learned Judge examined the evidence for himself and it is said that instead of so doing he should have remanded the suit for a further finding with regard to recognition.

Three points were urged before us in this appeal. The first is that the Transfer of Property Act applied and not the Tenancy Act and that accordingly, the appellant could not be ejected without notice. Secondly, it was urged that on the facts, namely, holding of the land for some seven generations at the same rent it should have been held that the rent was fixed in perpetuity and that, therefore, the holding was transferable. The third point is with regard to the course pursued by Mr. Justice Mukerji which, it is stated, is unjustifiable.

So far as the first point is concerned the land is described in the plaint as udbastoo bagat land and it is urged before us that it formed part of the compound of the bastoo and that the mere fact that vegetables and trees were grown there does not make it a horticultural tenancy but that it was really a part of the homestead and that the Judge in the lower Appellate Court was wrong in saying that the word "udbastoo" meant 'outside the bastoo' and that it should have been held that these words connote adjoin a 'bastoo' as a part thereof. It is necessary to turn to the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court on this point, which to my mind, whether it is right or wrong, disposed of this question as the finding is binding upon us. That finding is that the tenancy was not for residential purposes but that the holding was a horticultural holding governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and there is this further finding that the evidence does not show that it was let out or even used for homestead or for residential purposes. Having regard to these two findings by the lower Appellate Court we think that the first point is concluded by the findings of fact of that Court.

So far as the second point is concerned we were asked to apply by analogy the provisions of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to say that from the fact that the rent had not been altered for a period of 59 years the holding is held at a rent fixed in perpetuity and is, accordingly, transferable. There is no doubt that the fact that the holding has been held for a long period at a rent which has not been changed is a factor which must be taken into account. As has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Mukerji with regard to the two cases, referred to by Mr. Justice Manmatha Nath Mukerji, reported in 22 and 23 C. W. N. this is not the only inference that could be drawn from the holding having been held for a long period at the same rent for as Mr. Justice Mukerji points out in the case in 22 C. W. N., the fact that the landlord may not have thought fit to enhance the rent, as appears in that case for a period of 40 years, does not make the inference inevitable that the holding is held in perpetuity at a fixed rent. If one turns again to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it will be found that a good deal of light is thrown upon the question by the findings of that Court. What the Subordinate Judge says is that in the present case it may be observed that there were good reasons why the rent was not sought to be varied and this fact will appear from the Santra's own evidence and the evidence of the Ghosh defendant's brother that for 25 or 30 years the Santras had left the place and the land became overgrown with jungle. Therefore, we think that the lower Appellate Court was justified in saying that it could not draw the inference that it was asked to draw from the fact that there was no change in the rent for a period of over 50 years. Upon the facts and circumstances of the present case no inference can be drawn from that so as to establish that the rent had been fixed in perpetuity and, therefore, if instead of referring to cases upon different facts the facts of the present case are examined it will be found that the lower Appellate Court was justified in the finding at which it arrived on this point.

Then we come to the third point, namely, that there should have been a remand and that the learned Judge should not have investigated the facts for himself. After so doing, Mr. Justice Mukerji came to the conclusion that there was no recognition by the landlord of the present appellant and he stated his reasons for the conclusion at which he arrived. Here again I should like to refer to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court once more on this point and with all respect to Mr. Justice Mukerji I think myself that this judgment is sufficient to dispose of this point of recognition. What the learned Judge says is this: "The evidence regarding recognition consists of the several dakhilas obtained on payment of rent after the defendant's purchase. These show no substitution but acceptance of rent as gujrat. This appears to have been done after the transfer and the gomasta had possibly notice of the transfer. The evidence of Moulvi Izad Bux (father of defendant No. 2) is that when the defendant began to clear the jungle he went there and asked the defendant to take settlement. It appears from the letter of the defendant to the Moulvi that the defendant must have taken time to consider about the matter and finally expressed his willingness to be recognised on payment of Rs. 25, nazar simply without any agreement to pay any enhanced rent as demanded. The Moulvi preferred to make the substitution. The receipt of rent under such circumstances as gujratdari or marfatwari does not constitute recognition. The Moulvi says that he took his gomastha to task for having granted such dakhilas without his knowledge and at the earliest opportunity he refused to recognize the transfer. These facts clearly show that there was no recognition. The utmost that can be said is that the rent was taken with the prospective hope of getting kabuliyat, selami and enhanced rent and not in recognition of the transfer as creating any tenancy in favour of the transferee." Here again we think that we have a sufficient finding of fact that the so-called recognition was not in fact a recognition of the appellant as a transferee of the holding and we think that that finding disposes of the third point.

One further point remains with regard to the smaller plot. In this case the rent had only been paid at a uniform rate for a period of ten years. But it is stated that one Ekkari Ghosh from whom the appellant had purchased was recognised as a transferee and it is consequently urged that that recognition enures to the benefit of the present defendants. But as has been pointed out that recognition is merely a recognition personal to Ekkari and had nothing to do with the general question of recognition or the transferability of the holding.

For the reasons I have indicated the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Lease for period exceeding one year—Registration, absence of —Possession delivered to lessee, effect of—Part performance, doctrine of, applicability of.

Plaintiffs were the owners of a certain mahal. Their agent addressed them a proposal in writing for granting a lease of the mahal on certain terms to certain persons who had approached him for such lease. Plaintiffs authorized their agent to grant the lease and to issue a parwana to the lessees. A parwana was eventually issued to the defendants purporting to grant them a lease of the mahal on the terms accepted by the plaintiffs for a period of five years and the defendants were put in possession of the mahal. Plaintiffs subsequently brought a suit to eject the defendants from the mahal on the allegation that the parwana being unregistered did not operate as a lease and that the defendants were consequently trespassers:

Held, that the doctrine of part performance applied to the case and that the plaintiffs were bound by the terms of the lease which they had authorized and could not eject the defendant from the mahal. [p. 825, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 15th July 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Bhagalpur, dated the 22nd April 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This is a second appeal. The appellants were the plaintiffs in an action which they brought against a number of defendants for a declaration of their (the plaintiffs') right, title and interest to the extent of two-thirds share in a mahal called aratghat; they also applied for recovery of khas possession to the extent of their share and they asked for an adjudication that the defendants first party were trespassers and had acquired no title as lessees to the ghat by virtue of any valid settlement made to them on behalf of the plaintiffs. The facts in the case are extremely simple and the large majority of them are not even in issue. The plaintiffs were the owners of two-thirds share in this mahal; the principal value of this mahal appears to have laid in the fact that there was a ferry and that tolls were levied and collected at the ghat. It was the usual practice to let out the ghat to a lessee but it is said that sometimes the proprietors kept it in their own hands. Now, there is no doubt that the defendant second party was until some time in 1918 the Naib or manager of this property on behalf of the plaintiffs or some of them. In 1917 this Naib the defendant second party whilst in the plaintiff's employment made a proposal to the plaintiffs with regard to the future letting out of the ghat; a written application or proposal appears to have been made by the Naib to the proprietors saying that he had the opportunity of effecting a lucrative lease with some persons whom he knew were anxious to acquire the rights in the ghat. The proposal contained the suggestion that these applicants would give Rs 200 annually (which was considerably more than what up to that time had been paid) and that the lease should be for five years. The Naib asked for instructions and orders. This seems to have taken place on the 15th July 1917. Now, on the 31st July of that year an order was passed by the proprietors in connection with this application; it was simply to the effect "Naib will do the needful". This was followed later by a formal letter from the proprietors to the Naib definitely accepting the offer and telling him to issue a parwana to the new lessee. On the 1st October 1917 it seems that the Naib did give a hukamnama or parwana to the new lessees.

The Munsif found all these circumstances as facts. He found definitely that all these transactions had taken place. He found that the lessees had actually been put into possession; he found that a quarrel had arisen between the plaintiffs and their Naib and that they had alleged that he had fraudulently granted this lease with their assent. This, however, he did not believe and he would undoubtedly have given judgment for the defendants had it not been that he was led to form an opinion upon a point of law which is the only point which has been seriously argued before this Court. This point was that the defendants relied upon the parwana to which I have already referred. It was urged before the Munsif that the lease or parwana must be registered as it purported to be a lease of immoveable property granted for five years and that, as it was not registered, it was impossible for it to be referred to or looked at by the Court and that in consequence the defendants were unable to prove that they had got any title. The Munsif remarking that he could not see his way to invoke any equity in favour of the defendants held that there could have been no valid settlement by lease and in consequence he decided in favour of the plaintiffs and ordered that their suit be decreed with costs.

Now, this decision of the Munsif of Bhagalpur which was dated the 22nd April 1921 was the subject of an appeal to the Subordinate Judge of that place who by his judgment of the 15th July 1922 affirmed in every respect save one the decision to which the Munsif came. He, however, was of the opinion that it was not impossible to invoke equity in favour of the defendants and he came to the conclusion that it was necessary and proper to do so.

In consequence, as a matter of course, he had to reverse the judgment of the Munsif, he allowed the appeal and ordered that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed.

The point to which I have referred is the only point which is of any importance in this case. It has been argued very strenuously by the learned Counsel who has appeared for the appellants that it is impossible to invoke equity in favour of the defendant. He bases his argument upon s. 49 of the Indian Registration Act. This section reads;—

"No document required by s. 17 to be registered, shall—

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein, or

(c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power, unless it has been registered."

Now, it is admitted here that this lease for five years ought to have been registered. The learned Counsel has suggested that as under the provisions of s. 49, sub-s. (c) a document required to be registered shall not unless registered be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power, this hukum-nama could not be looked at at all by the Court nor could any equity be utilised as arising from it in favour of the defendant. He refers in this connection to an instructive case Sanjib Chandra Sanyal v. Santosh Kumar Lahiri (1). The learned Judge (Mr. Justice Rankin) who decided that case held that he could not permit a document which was not registered but which ought to have been registered to be received in evidence as evidential of the title of a plaintiff who was seeking to enforce his rights under that unregistered document. On the other hand, however, a case of equal importance Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2) has been brought to our notice. That was a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council and there it was laid down very specifically that "when the actings and conduct of the parties are founded upon, as in the performance or part-performance of an agreement, the locus penitentiae which exists in a situation where the parties stand upon nothing but an engagement which is not final or complete is excluded. For equity will support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon". Now, it is, of course, difficult to say definitely that equity will override completely the specific provisions of ss. 17 and 49 of the Indian Registration Act and in the case of Nilkanth Bhimaji v. Hanmant Eknath (3), Mr. Justice Heaton in referring to the Privy Council case which I have just mentioned draws attention to the necessity of guarding oneself in stating definitely that the decision of their Lordships was intended to affect adversely the proper construction or maintenance of those sections of the Registration Act to which reference has been made. His Lordship says:—

"I feel quite certain that their Lordships of the Privy Council in giving judgment in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2) did not intend either to modify or to limit that part of the enactment of the Indian Legislature which appears as ss. 17 and 49 of the Indian Registration Act, nor do I believe that the Privy Council ever have intended by their judgments to modify or limit that which has been enacted by the Legislature in India. So the effect of ss. 17 and 49 of the Indian Registration Act remains as totally unaffected as before, by anything that is said in the case of Mohamed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2)."

Now in this case before us it seems to me that it can be dealt with quite unhampered by any question of admissibility of this document. Personally I think that it is admissible and that equity can be invoked from it although it should have been registered and that we could draw an equity in favour of the defendant. But even if it was not admissible there was ample material upon which a Court may come to the same conclusion to which the Subordinate Judge has come, namely, that the equity here is clearly in favour of the defendant and must be given to him in relief. What have we here in coming to the same conclusion from another point of view? We have findings of fact which show clearly that the Naib, that is to say, the manager of the plaintiffs asked for their consent to grant a lease for five years at Rs. 200 per annum to the lessees. He got this permission in a very definite form from the proprietors and he actually put the lessees into possession. The terms upon which the lease was to be granted appear clearly not only in what he offered in the application for instructions which the Naib made to the proprietors but in the proprietors' letter authorising him to grant the lease. How it can be seriously suggested after that that there was not a completed transaction not only on the face of the papers themselves but by a part performance, namely, the induction of the lessees into actual possession, I cannot understand. To allow the plaintiffs to succeed against their own nominees simply because the document which was given by the plaintiffs' agent to the new lessee did not comply with the provisions of s. 49 of the Registration Act, would appear to me most inequitable. In these circumstances I think that in this case the Subordinate Judge has taken the proper course. He has come to the conclusion that there was no ground for allowing the plaintiff to eject the defendants who were their own lessees. They could not take advantage of some flaw in a document, which has been produced by the defendants in order to show that their lease did not comply with the terms of the Registration Act nor could it be allowed that the lease which the defendants possessed against their own landlord should be defeated at his application.

I think, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 16th August 1924.

Messrs. Ram Bharose Lal and Raj Narayan Shukla, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Sheo Bakhsh left a son Ganga Singh and on the death of his son his mother Musammat Pohap Kuar succeeded to the estate of a separated Hindu as mother. This happened in 1897. Subsequently a childless widow of Sheo Bakhsh's brother Ranjit Singh died in 1906 and half the property held by her was taken possession of by Musammat Pohap Kuar. The defendants are the daughter's sons of Musammat Pohap Kuar.

On her death the plaintiffs who are the grandsons of another brother of Sheo Bakhsh by name Parwan Singh sued for possession of the property. Their suit as regards the property was decreed and hence the defendants have appealed.

There is some matter relating to two items of money taken by the defendants' father. That matter will be considered subsequently.

There can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the property, which Musammat Pohap Kuar held as mother of a separated Hindu. The defence of defendant No. 1 Drigbijai Singh was that he had been adopted by Ganga

Singh. Ganga Singh was young in 1897 when he died and had a young wife who survived him. There was no reason why he should adopt at the time. If there had been an adoption the defendant Drigbijai Singh would not have gone to the trouble of obtaining an admission of adoption from the plaintiffs' father Badri Singh (Ex. A-4). It appears that Badri Singh in a hurry to get half a loaf for fear the whole loaf may not come to him in his lifetime took half the property of the widow and made a declaration with respect to the other half that it belonged to Drigbijai Singh as adopted son of Ganga Singh. At the same time he professes to relinquish his rights. In reality he would have no rights to relinquish if Drigbijai Singh was really the adopted son of Ganga Singh. The adoption is merely a device.

Nor is the deed of gift by Musammatt Pohap Kuar binding on the plaintiff because of the admission of their father. The father had no interest in the property at the time and the plaintiffs claimed as reversioners in their own right and not through their father.

The question regarding one-sixth share of property, that is one-third of the property in suit, is of some difficulty. To make it clearer the property which Musammatt Pohap Kuar took possession of on the death of Musammatt Talik Kaur in 1906 was one-sixth of the various shares in villages noted in para. 12 of the written statement. This is admitted here by both parties. In deciding this issue I shall be dealing with that property and no other.

The case for the plaintiffs was that Musammatt Pohap Kuar took possession of one-sixth of this property under a family arrangement to remain in possession for the period of her life, the property then reverting to her son's reversioners. The defence was that she was in adverse possession. On this point the lower Court has decided in favour of the defendants that Musammatt Pohap Kuar was in adverse possession. On the evidence this was the only decision possible. There is no evidence of any family arrangement in 1906. Musammatt Pohap Kuar was entered as proprietor in the village records and she had no right to succeed to the property. The conclusion is that she held adversely to the father of the plaintiffs.

The second line of argument adopted on behalf of the plaintiffs was that even if Musammatt Pohap Kuar was in adverse possession she held adversely for her son and that property also became the estate of her son. On her death, on this reasoning, the plaintiffs became the heirs of this property. The defence was that the adverse title was in herself and the defendants the daughter's sons of Musammatt Pohap Kuar were the rightful heirs.

I do not think that the interpretation put by the lower Court on the Privy Council case of Lajwanti v. Safa Chand (1) is correct. In that case though Jawahar Mal had a son Jawahar Mal's widows were put in possession of certain properties as widows of Jawahar Mal. Under a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab the widows were put in possession in their right as widows of Jawahar Mal as against the next reversioners to the property of Jawahar Mal. Under these circumstances their Lordships held that their adverse possession was as widows and that these ladies had a widow's estate in their deceased husband's estate. At page 176* of the report they observe:—

"If possessing as widow she possesses adversely to any one as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan, but she makes them good to her husband's estate."

Here the succession did not raise any dispute on the death of Musammatt Talik Kuar which may be said to have been decided in favour of Musammatt Pohap Kuar as holding in right of her being a widow of Sheo Bakhsh Singh or mother of Ganga Singh. She took possession in her own right and the adverse possession enured in her and was not referable to her husband's or to her son's estate. The circumstances of the case of Lajwanti were different. Reference may be made to the previous Privy Council ruling in the case of Sutgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (2). There Musammatt Dalla Kuar was the widow of one Bhawani Dayal who predeceased his brother Basant Lal. On Basant Lal's death his two widows succeeded as life-holders and on their death Musammatt Dalla Kuar took possession, which possession was held to be adverse by their Lordships of the Privy Council. This adverse possession was held by their Lordships to render the suit by the next reversioners of her husband on her death to be time-barred and the suit of the next reversioners was dismissed. Under the circumstances of that case their Lordships did not hold that Musammatt Dalla Kuar held adversely as a Hindu widow in that she did not acquire the property as istirdhan but made it good to her husband's estate. If such had been the conclusion of their Lordships, the plaintiffs the next reversioners of Bhawani Dayal would have succeeded and not Satgur Prasad who had no interest as heir of Bhawani Dayal as he was the son of Bhawani Dayal's daughter's daughter. The appeal must succeed with respect to the property mentioned above.

As regards the amount of money made payable to the plaintiff by the defendants the findings of the lower Court are correct. A technical objection was raised that the money was taken by the defendants' father. This, however, does not appear to be the fact and even if it were the fact, there appears to be no doubt that the defendants have sufficient assets of their father in their hands to meet the claim.

I decree the appeal for one-sixth of the property mentioned in para. 12 of the written statement dated 13th March 1923. The property shall be detailed in the decree of this Court. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed. The appellant shall declare the relative valuation and in this Court parties shall receive and pay costs according to their success and failure. The lower Court's order as to costs of its Court is maintained.

Defendant purchased certain property in execution of a rent-decree and took possession of it through Court. Plaintiff made an application under r. 100 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., for restoration of possession but the application was dismissed. More than a year after the date of the dismissal of the application plaintiff instituted a suit to recover possession of the property:

Held, that the suit was one under r. 103 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., and was barred by the operation of Art. 11-A of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 828, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court is bound to dismiss a suit if it finds that it is barred by limitation, even though limitation has not been set up in defence. [p. 828, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—In this appeal by the defendant two points have been taken: (1) that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation and (2) that the learned Subordinate Judge of the Court of Appeal below has not considered the question raised and decided by the Trial Court with regard to the identity of the land in suit with the jama alleged to have been purchased by the plaintiff.

With regard to the first point, the defendant in his written statement took the plea of limitation on the ground that the defendant had been in possession for more than 12 years and also on the ground that the suit was not brought within one year after the dismissal of the claim case. On these pleadings the 4th issue raised in the Trial Court was,—Is the suit barred by the law of estoppel. In deciding that issue the learned Munsif observed as follows: This suit has been brought within one year from the order under O. XXI, r. 100, C. P. C. He, however, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit upon other grounds one of which was that the plaintiff was out of possession for more than 12 years and also on the ground of special limitation of two years as the landlord had through other tenants kept the plaintiff out of possession for more than that period. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge considered the question of limitation only with reference to the finding of the lower Court of the plaintiff not being in possession within 12 years of the suit and having come to the conclusion that the plaintiff succeeded in proving his possession within the statutory period and also finding title in favour of the plaintiff decreed the plaintiff's suit. The question of limitation on the ground that the suit was brought more than one year after the decision of the claim case does not appear to have been raised in the Court of Appeal below. But it has been argued before us that we ought to consider this question as it is a pure question of law. We have accordingly gone through the papers and they no doubt show that the present suit is barred by limitation. According to the plaint filed in this case it appears that the defendant took possession through Court of the property in suit as purchaser of the jama in execution of a rent-decree against another person. He obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 3rd May 1918. The plaintiff, therefore, made an application under O. XXI, r. 100 which was registered as Miscellaneous Case No. 52 of 1918. That application was dismissed on the 23rd December 1918 and the present suit was instituted on the 2nd January 1920.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant that under Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act the suit ought to have been instituted within one year from the date of dismissal of the plaintiff's application under O. XXI, r. 100, namely, on or before the 23rd December 1919 and it not having been done so it is barred by limitation. I think this contention ought to prevail. Under Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act a suit has to be brought under O. XXI, r. 103 within one year from the date of the order upon an application by any person dispossessed of such property in the delivery of possession thereof to the decree-holder or purchaser to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property comprised in the order. By a year as we find in the General Clauses Act of 1897, is meant a year according to British Calendar. Under s. 12 of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the day from which such period shall be reckoned shall be excluded; so that the date of the order, namely, the 23rd December 1918 should be excluded and time should be computed from the 24th December 1918. The calendar year commences from the 24th December 1918 as the first day of the year and will end on the 23rd December of the following year. The learned Vakil for the respondent, however, argues that as the year was completed on the midnight of the 23rd December, the following day, namely, the 24th December should be the last day for the institution of the suit and the Court being closed from that date till the 1st January, he was in time in filing the suit on the 2nd January 1920. This argument to my mind is groundless and no authority has been cited in support of it. It is clear that the order having been passed on the 23rd December 1918 a calendar year ended on the 23rd December 1919 on or before which date the suit should have been brought. The 23rd December 1919 was not a close day. It is, however, argued on behalf of the respondent that this point was not raised in any of the Courts below and, therefore, we should not entertain it. I have referred to the observation of the learned Munsif on this point; but as it is a question of limitation which we are bound to take cognizance of under s. 3 of the Limitation Act, I have gone into the facts of the case in determining this question. Section 3 says that every suit instituted after the period of limitation shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. This suit, according to our judgment was instituted after the period of limitation and, therefore, we are bound to dismiss it.

It is next argued that this question involves some consideration of fact, namely, it is possible that the plaintiffs' application was dismissed for default or non-prosecution and, therefore, Art. 11-A should not apply. Without deciding whether or not Art. 11-A is applicable if the plaintiff's application under O. XXI, r. 100 was dismissed for default or not I find that the allegations in the plaint are quite explicit on this point. In para. 1 the plaintiff states that on the defendant taking unlawful possession of the property in execution of the decree, the plaintiff filed an application under O. XXI, r. 100 to recover back his possession which was registered as claim Case No. 52 of 1918, but owing to his misfortune that claim case was rejected in a summary trial. That being so, there is no question of fact involved which may necessitate a remand to the lower Appellate Court. In this view I hold that the suit instituted by the plaintiff was barred by limitation. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider the other points raised in the appeal.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Duval, J.—I agree.

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Charitable trust created by Will—Undivided sons appointed trustees—Sons, whether take as joint tenants or tenants-in-common—Will, construction of.

When a Hindu father makes a gift of self-acquired property to his sons who are members of a joint family, unless a tenancy-in-common is inferred from the grant, the presumption is that the sons take as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. This principle applies with greater force to cases where the father creates a trust and appoints his sons as trustees with hereditary rights, since the presumption is that in cases of trust property, trustees are to be ordinarily treated as joint tenants. [p. 830, col. 1.]

Case-law considered.

A Hindu by his Will bequeathed certain properties to charity and appointed his two sons who were members of a joint family as trustees thereof. The Will provided that "the lands mentioned herein as relating to the said charities should not in any way be alienated by the above-mentioned two persons or their heirs by means of sale, etc., but they should enjoy them hereditarily and conduct the above-mentioned charities," etc. There was a partition by the brothers later by which the management of the trust properties was to continue as before :

Held, that on a construction of the Will, the sons took the trusteeship and the management of the trust properties as members of a joint family with rights of survivorship and not as tenants-in-common. [p. 830, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in O. S. No. 78 of 1922.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and P. S. Chandrasekhara Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which relates to the trusteeship of a charity founded under the Will of one Sappanimuthu Nadar who died leaving two sons. The material portion of the Will so far as it relates to the trust properties runs as follows:—

"The lands mentioned herein as relating to the said charities should not in any way be alienated by the above-mentioned two persons or their heirs by means of sale, otti, hypothecation, security, partition, etc., but they should enjoy them hereditarily and conduct the above-mentioned charities."

After the death of the testator, his two sons were conducting the charities. One of the sons died leaving a minor son who died leaving the plaintiff, his mother as his heir. This suit is filed by the plaintiff who was the widow of one of the deceased sons and whose right is as mother of her son for a declaration that she is jointly entitled as trustee, to conduct the management of these properties.

The defence is that on the death of her son the first defendant who was the only male member of the undivided family was entitled to the office and that plaintiff has no right to succession.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right as the office was a joint office and that the first defendant was entitled on the death of his brother and brother's son. After the testator's death there was a partition deed executed between the two sons which it is necessary to consider before dealing with the contentions raised. This deed refers to properties which they got under the Will and so far as the trust properties are concerned the only reference to them is in cl. 6 which runs as follows:—

"In respect of the properties mentioned in the D schedule we shall act in common as stated in the Will."

The question is, having regard to the terms of the Will, whether the two sons of the testator took the trusteeship and the management as members of a joint family or whether each of them took separate interests in it as tenants-in-common. So far as gifts by a father of self-acquired property to his sons by Will are concerned, the decisions of this Court are to the effect that in the absence of a contrary intention expressed or implied from the terms of the Will, the sons must be presumed to take the property as joint tenants. The reason is that in the case of a grant to two persons who form members of a joint family the ordinary presumption is that the grant to them is as co-parceners. I may refer to Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (1), Yethirajulu Naidu v. Mukuntha Naidu (2), Venkataramaiah Pantulu v. Subaramaniam Pillai (3), Indoji Jithaji v. Kothapalli Ram Charlu (4) and Rajarajeswara Dorai v. Sundarapandiyaswami Thevar (5). There is no doubt a conflict of authority between the various High Courts on this question. The view taken in Allahabad and in Bombay is that, where property is given to persons without stating what interest they are, to take, they are to take as tenants-in-common. This question as to the presumption to be raised in cases of gifts by a father to his sons recently came before the Privy Council in the case of Lal Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh (6) and their Lordships state the rulings of the various High Courts. As regards Madras authorities this is what their Lordships say: "In Madras upon the whole, the view seems to be that the father can determine whether the property which he has so bequeathed, shall be ancestral or self-acquired on the principle of cujus est dare ejus est disponere and that, unless there is expression of his wish that it should be deemed self-acquired, it is ancestral. The Privy Council summarised the Madras decision as stating that, where the father does not state that the sons shall take the property as if it was self-acquired property of the sons, it is to be deemed to be ancestral in their hands; or, in other words, that unless a tenancy-in-common can be inferred from the grant, the presumption is that they are joint tenants. I do not think that on this state of the authorities, I can go behind the decisions though my attention has been drawn to a recent decision in O. S. A. No. 56 of 1922 where Mr. Justice Ramesam seems to doubt the correctness of Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (1). It was an obiter dictum, so far as the Original Side Appeal was concerned and I do not think that so far as Madras is concerned the question can be set at rest, except by a decision of the Privy Council. The question is how far the doctrine in these cases which relates to property bequeathed by a father to his sons would apply to cases where the father creates a trust and appoints his sons as trustees with hereditary rights. On principle I can see very little difference between the conferring of the office of trustee as regards a trust founded by the father by dedication of properties and the gift of properties to the sons. No authority has been cited which creates a difference merely by reason of the difference in the powers of the donees. In the case of properties given to them absolutely, of course, they will have full powers of alienation, in the case of a trust they would have such powers as the law gives the trustee. The nature of the estate taken either in property or in the trust must, in my opinion, be the same. And I may also say that in the case of a trust the leaning of English authorities is in favour of joint tenancy. Trustees are treated as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. This is the principle enunciated in the Trusts Act. So far as the present Will is concerned, reading the Will as a whole I find there is nothing to show that the testator intended his sons to take the office of trustee as tenants-in-common. On the contrary the words in the Will that they should not partition, or sell the properties but they should enjoy them hereditarily suggest that he wanted them to take them with all the incidents of joint family property.

As regards the partition it seems to me that the two brothers when they divided did not intend to divide the office; they expressly leave the office to be controlled by the Will and if they wanted to divide the office to the extent to which the law allows a division, they would certainly have fixed some turns of management, each brother managing it for a turn. The question as to what the rights and liabilities of the brothers or their heirs would have been, had there been such a division of management is not free from difficulty. But it is unnecessary for us to go into that question, because in the present case there has not been such a division and we are to look to the Will to see what their rights are. Returning to the Will, they take the right to management as joint tenants. There has been no partition between the brothers of this office nor is there any suggestion in the pleadings that after the death of one of the brothers there has been such a severance either by conduct or otherwise between the widow and the first defendant, the surviving brother. It is, therefore, unnecessary to go into the question whether Meenakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillai (7) which has been referred to by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer rightly lays down the law if there was a partition. As there has been no partition of the office and as the first defendant is the sole surviving male member of the family, I think the plaintiff has no right to manage the property along with the first defendant. The right survives to him alone. In the view I take the learned Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the suit. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Krishnan, J.—This appeal refers to a charitable trust founded by one Sappanimuthu Nadar. The trust has been created by a Will which has been filed in the case as Ex. A. Under that Will, he made his two sons who were the only other members of the joint family of himself and his sons the trustees of the trust. The words creating the trust are cited in the judgment of my learned brother just now delivered and I need not refer to them again. There is an express provision there that the properties are not to be alienated or even partitioned but that the two brothers were to take the properties jointly and enjoy them jointly and carry out the provisions of the trust which are set out. Subsequent to the death of Sappanimuthu Nadar there was a partition between the two brothers and that partition is evidenced by Ex. B which has also been filed in the case. One of the brothers Kandaswami Nadar died subsequently leaving a minor son called Rajappa Nadar. He also died and the plaintiff Salakshi Ammal who is his mother and the widow of Kandaswami Nadar succeeded to a woman's estate in the properties which had fallen to the share of Kandaswami; she has brought this suit to have it declared that she was entitled jointly with the first defendant, the surviving brother, to manage this trust estate. The Subordinate Judge before whom the case came on for hearing has dismissed the suit without taking any evidence except the two documents already referred to, Exs. A and B. He has held that the first defendant is the sole surviving trustee now and that the plaintiff has no right to manage the trust. The plaintiff has appealed to us.

It has been argued before us very strenuously by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer that this decision is erroneous, that the right of trusteeship was vested in the brothers as tenants-in-common and that on the death of one of the brothers his right passed to his heirs, first to his son and then to that son's mother, the plaintiff. It is that question we have to consider in this appeal.

The partition deed, Ex. B, which has been referred to has really no bearing on the case, because when partitioning the family properties between the two brothers by Ex. B, they expressly reserved the trust properties from the partition, for they say in para. 6 "in respect of the charity properties mentioned in the D schedule (that is the charity properties dealt with in the Will), we shall act in common as stated in the Will," so that, as far as the partition deed was concerned, the arrangement in the Will was left in tact although the parties divided their family estate otherwise. For the disposal of this case, therefore, we have only to look to the Will and see what arrangement has been made under the Will for the purpose of carrying on the trust after the death of one of the persons named in the trust. The question, therefore, whether Minakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillai (7) is rightly decided or not is not before us at all. It would have been before us if the two brothers had attempted by their partition deed to divide the trust office or made some arrangement regarding it between themselves. Such a thing not having been done, we need not consider the question as to whether a trust office is partible at all between the trustees. Turning now to the wording of the Will, it seems to me quite clear that on the words of the Will the two brothers were constituted trustees of this charity as joint tenants and not as tenants-in-common as argued by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer. The ordinary presumption as regards trustees is that they are joint tenants, for, both under the Eng.

(7) 59 Ind. Cas. 464; 44 M. 205; 12 L. W. 232; (1920 M. W. N. 507; 39 M. L. J. 403, lish Law and under s. 44 of the Indian Trusts Act, on the death of one trustee all the rights of the trustees rest in the surviving trustees. As pointed out by my learned brother, the cases that he has referred to show that in Madras the view is taken that, when a father makes a gift of or bequeathes self-acquired property of his to his children who are members of a joint family the ordinary presumption is that they take that property as joint tenants and not as tenants-in-common. It was suggested that this view was not a correct view but it has been followed in so many cases that until the Privy Council decide to the contrary I am inclined to think that we should follow that view. It is true that Mr. Justice Ramesam has expressed a doubt the correctness of the ruling in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Thevar (1) in his judgment in O. S. A. No. 56 of 1922 but that is not a sufficient basis for us to refer the question to a Full Bench as after all that doubt is expressed as an obiter dictum. Assuming then that, in the case of a gift by a Hindu father, who has sons who are members of a joint family, the presumption will be that the property is taken by the sons jointly. The presumption will be all the greater in the case of trust property as trustees are ordinarily to be treated as joint tenants. Here in this Will it is clear that the author of the trust, the father, intended that the charity property should be kept in tact and be enjoyed jointly by the trustees and their heirs. In these circumstances there is no difficulty in holding that the rule of succession as regards joint property in a Hindu family must apply, and that when one trustee dies the members of the joint family will take the trusteeship according to the law of survivorship. That will exclude the claim put forward by the plaintiff who is only a female member of the joint family. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother in thinking that the Subordinate Judge was right in the view he has taken of this case and that the plaintiff's appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The owner of a raiya interest demised certain premises to certain persons on a dar-raiya. The lease provided for the lessees building a house for the purpose of a shop on the land and carrying on business therein and paying the rent therein named every year to the lessor. There was a further provision in the document that if the rent was not paid in any year the lessor would be entitled to recover khas possession of the land with arrears of rent and damages by suit. The document further provided that if the lessees did not carry on business on the land then they would give up the land to the lessor and that the lessees would not be entitled to give the land to any body else. The lessees failed to pay the rent stipulated in the lease and the lessor, instead of recovering possession of the premises, brought the property to sale in execution of his rent-decree and the property was purchased by the defendants first party. The interest of the lessor was purchased by the plaintiff. Defendants first party sub-let the premises to the defendants second party and the latter put up a permanent structure upon the land of which the plaintiff was aware. Plaintiff continued to receive rent from the defendants second party after the erection of the building. Sometime afterwards the plaintiff sued to recover khas possession of the premises on the allegation that the defendants first party had parted with their possession of the premises to the defendants second party in contravention of the terms of the original lease:

Held, (1) that the original lease was one for the lives of the lessees subject to its determination if they failed to pay the stipulated rent in any year or if they failed to carry on business on the land or if they transferred the lease to a third party; [p. 833, col. 1.]

(2) that by their purchase in execution of the rent decree the defendants second party had obtained a tenancy in the terms of the original demise, that is to say, during the lives of the original lessees determinable on the grounds mentioned in the lease; [p. 833, col. 2.]

(3) that the plaintiff being aware of the sub-lease in favour of the defendants second party and of the erection of the permanent structure by them and having received rent from them with such knowledge, could not eject the defendants on the ground that the defendants first party had parted with the possession of the premises to a third party in contravention of the terms of the original lease. JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent.

The question that arises for our decision arises on a kabuliyat dated the 15th Pous 1247. Thereby the owner of the raiya demised certain premises which are situated in the Town of Chittagong to the persons named in the kabuliyat in a dar-raiyati. The document provided for the lessees building a house for the purpose of a shop on the land and carrying on business and paying the rent therein named every year to the lessor. There was a further provision in the document that if the rent was not paid in any year the lessor would be entitled to recover khas possession of the land with arrears of rent and damages by suit. The document further provided that if the lessees did not carry on business on the land then they would give up the land to the lessor and that the lessees would not be entitled to give the land to any body else. The contentions before the Courts below and before Mr. Justice Newbould were on behalf of the plaintiff that this was a tenancy-at-will which could be determined by proper notice whereas the defendants contended that upon the true construction of the document it was a permanent lease. Mr. Justice Newbould held that the lease was not a permanent one and that it had been determined by six months' notice which had been given. It seems to us that upon the true construction of the document the lease was one for the lives of the lessees subject to its determination if they failed to pay rent in any year or if they failed to carry on business on the land. There was a further right of re-entry if the lessees transferred the lease to any one else. The plaintiff purchased the interest of the original lessor and defendants Nos. 1 to 8 purchased at an execution sale the interest of the original lessees. Defendants Nos. 9 to 14 are the sub-lessees of defendants Nos. 1 to 8. When the original lessees failed to pay rent the lessor undoubtedly could have recovered possession under the provisions of the kabuliyat. Instead, however, of taking this obvious course in execution of the rent-decree which they obtained they brought the property to sale and what was sold was the right of the judgment-debtor. Therefore, it seems to us that the effect of the execution sale coupled with the receipt of rent by the lessor thereafter was to create in defendants Nos. 1 to 8 a tenancy in the terms of the original demise, that is to say, during the lives of the original lessees determinable on the grounds which I have indicated. In the year 1909 according to the defendants or in the year 1914 according to the plaintiff a permanent structure was erected by the defendant No. 9 upon the land. According to the finding both of the Munsif and of the lower Appellate Court this erection was made with the knowledge of the plaintiff and subsequent to this rent was received by the plaintiff from defendants Nos. 1 to 8. It seems to us, therefore, that the plaintiff must have known of the sub-lease which was executed so long ago as 1891 and subsequent thereto and to the erection of a pucca building on the land he received rent with the knowledge of the sub-lease and erection of the pucca building on the land. Accordingly, it seems to us that the plaintiff cannot now eject the defendants on the ground that they have parted with their possession of the property to somebody else and we think that the plaintiff's suit must fail for the reasons which we have indicated. If the original lessees are dead it may be that in a subsequent proceeding the plaintiff will be entitled to recover possession of the land; but that question has not been raised in the suit and cannot be gone into in this proceeding.

The result is that the judgment appealed from was in our view not correct and the plaintiff's suit must fail.

The appeal, accordingly, succeeds with costs.

With regard to Appeal No. 44 of 1923 for the reasons which I have indicated this must fail and must be dismissed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT.APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1321
OF 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir John Bucknill, Kt.
Sheikh MOHAMMAD SADIQ—APPELLANT
versusBASGIT SAH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTSCommissions—Commissioner appointed to carry out demarcation—Report unsatisfactory—Procedure.

The fact that a Commissioner who has been appointed to ascertain the proper demarcation and site of the property in dispute in a suit has made a muddle of his enquiry should not in any way prejudice any of the parties to the suit. If the Court finds that the Commissioner's work is unsatisfactory, the proper procedure is to appoint another Commissioner who should carry out his work in accordance with the instructions of the Court.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Motihari, dated the 19th September 1922.

Mr. Hareswar Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal. It is a very simple matter although it is unfortunate that owing to some apparent misunderstanding there have already been no less than three or four judgments written in connection with the matter. The appellant who was the plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration of his raiya title to a certain plot of land and for recovery of possession thereof. Now, apparently, when the case came before the Munsif in the first instance he decided in the plaintiff's favour. But on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, it would seem that, on the ground that the Commissioner who had been appointed to ascertain the proper demarcation and site of the property in question had not been cross-examined, the Munsif's judgment was set aside and that the matter was remanded to the Munsif in order that the Commissioner might be cross-examined. The matter went back to the Munsif and the Munsif, after having had the Commissioner cross-examined, on this occasion dismissed the plaintiff's case. The ground upon which he dismissed the case appears, so far as I can see, to have been that the Commissioner had made some mistakes in the way in which he had set about his work, and in consequence, the Munsif thought that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case; he, apparently, not relying upon any evidence other than that of the Commissioner. The Munsif then sent the matter back to the Appellate Court with his recommendation and the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the Munsif's finding was correct. Again so far as I can see, the ground for this decision was simply that the Commissioner had made a bungle of his investigation. Now, this application came up for admission in second appeal and on its admission it seems to have been pointed out that the fact that the Commissioner had made a muddle of his enquiry should not in any way have prejudiced the plaintiff's position in the case. I have no doubt that what the Munsif should have done, if he found that the Commissioner's work was unsatisfactory, was to have appointed another Commissioner who would carry out the work more satisfactorily or at any rate in a manner intelligible and suitable to the Munsif's understanding. In these circumstances I think it is clear that this appeal must be allowed with costs and that the case must again unfortunately go back to the Munsif to be re-tried; and, so far as I can see, it would be highly desirable that another Commissioner should be appointed to make such observations and demarcations as are necessary to show whether or not the plaintiff's claim is sustainable. The learned Vakil who at one time appeared for the respondents to this appeal has appeared in Court this morning and has informed me that he has no instructions with regard to this matter. The respondents, therefore, to this appeal have not been represented before me.

Under the Madras Estates Land Act, when dry and garden lands are irrigated by the raiya with tank water with the landlord's permission, there is no invariable rule that the wet rate is the proper rate to fix for such lands. The landlord is entitled to reasonable compensation for the use of his water. The question has to be determined in each case as to the reasonable amount of compensation and the proper method of fixing the rate chargeable.

Venkatachalam Chetty v. Ayyamperuman Tevan, 53 Ind. Cas. 33; 42 M. 702; 37 M. L. J. 248; (1919) M. W. N. 768, referred to.

A provision for payment of a certain cess, not to the landlord but to village servants, should not be inserted in a patta tendered to the raiyat.

Second appeals against a decree of the District Court, Nellore, in A. S. Nos. 74 and 80 to 89 of 1921 respectively, preferred against those of the Court of the Deputy Collector, Gudur Division, in S. S. Nos. 229, 231, 232, 234, 235, 236, 238 to 241 and 244 of 1919.

Mr. A. Krishnawami Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main point raised in these appeals is the rate to be charged when dry and garden lands are irrigated with tank water with the landlord's permission. The appellants claimed $2\frac{1}{2}$ tooms per quarter cawnie. Presumably they mean $2\frac{1}{2}$ tooms of paddy but this is not quite clear from the patta itself. The Deputy Collector found that Rs. 6 per acre was reasonable rate and fixed that amount. His finding is accepted by the District Judge, and it is now contended that this finding cannot be supported. Neither the first nor the lower Appellate Court has given definite reasons for considering this reasonable but the Deputy Collector who is a Revenue Officer must have been aware of the fact that the highest wet rate levied by Government in the Nellore District is Rs. 6 per acre, and it was open to him to act on that knowledge and come to the conclusion that he did. The tenants made an offer at this rate which he accepted. The Judge has merely agreed with him, but I do not see any reason for setting aside the finding. It is, however, argued that under the law, the wet rate is the proper rate to fix for such lands, and reliance is placed on a ruling in Venkatachalam Chetty v. Ayyamperuman Tevan (1) to which I was a party. In that case it was held that the landlord was entitled to reasonable compensation for the use of his water, a principle which has been acted upon consistently by this Court. In the circumstances of that particular case, it was held that the charge of sarasari, which is the wet rate, was not unreasonable in view of the fact that there had been an old custom in that zemindari to levy that rate; but this is not an authority for saying that the reasonable amount of compensation must be the same in every village or district, i. e., wet rate. In the present case, both the Courts have found what is the reasonable amount of compensation, and what was the proper method of fixing the rate chargeable. I see no reason to interfere with that finding.

The second ground of appeal relates to the charge on garden lands liable to submersion. This ground was not taken in the appeal memorandum, and although additional grounds have been filed, no valuation of this claim has been given and no stamp duty paid. So I must decline to discuss it.

The third point is that the provision for payment to village servants of a certain cess should be inserted in the patta. The payment is not to be made to the landlord but to the village servants, and it is a question between them and the pattadar. The lower Courts were, therefore, right in ordering that this clause should be omitted. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Costs will only be payable in Second Appeal No. 1329 to 1332 and 1334, and Vakil's fee for all these appeals together is fixed at Rs. 100.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The facts upon which the present suit was brought by the plaintiffs-respondents are these: On the 18th September 1896 and 1st July 1899 one Sashi Bhusan Bhattacharjee husband and father of the plaintiffs borrowed certain sums on notes of hand from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On the 5th December 1902 Sashi Bhusan Bhattacharjee and his co-sharers including defendant No. 2 executed a deed of trust in favour of two co-sharers one of whom was defendant No. 1 Priya Nath Chatterjee. Under the deed the trustees took upon themselves the charge of all necessary duties for the management and protection of the joint estate. In December 1903 Sashi Bhusan died leaving a widow plaintiff No. 2 and two sons plaintiff No. 1 and one Haladhar. Haladhar subsequently died childless leaving his mother the 2nd plaintiff as heir. On the 3rd April 1904 the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sued the two sons of Sashi Bhusan on the hand-notes and on the 23rd August obtained a decree against them as representing the estate of Sashi Bhusan for Rs. 4,348. This decree was subsequently executed and Sashi Bhusan's share in the property described in the Schedules ka and kha of the plaint were sold in auction and purchased by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (appellants) for Rs. 1,200. On the 31st March 1905 an application made by plaintiff No. 1 and Haladhar under ss. 244 and 311 of the Code of 1882 was dismissed. The present suit was brought on the 12th September 1918 by the plaintiffs for setting aside the decree and the sale in execution thereof as fraudulently obtained and for recovery of, or in the alternative, for confirmation of possession of the property in suit. Both the Courts below have agreed in decreeing the plaintiff's suit and setting aside the decree and the execution sale held on the 18th of December 1904, not on the ground that the sale was bad under the C. P. C., but on the ground that defendant No. 1 being a trustee was not competent to purchase the property. The learned Additional District Judge on appeal found that defendant No. 2 never acted as trustee to the properties in question. But relying on a certain decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council the learned Judge held that the entire sale was bad and ought to be set aside.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have appealed and on their behalf several points have been taken. It is first contended that the trust deed of 1902 did not create such a valid trust as to constitute defendant No. 1 a trustee in law and make the purchase by him invalid. This point was not taken in any of the Courts below and we do not think that we should allow the appellants to raise it for the first time in this Court. It is a violation of the fundamental principle of estoppel and equity to allow the trustee to raise it after he has taken possession of the properties as trustee and dealt with them in the capacity of a trustee.

The next point taken is that the purchase by defendant No. 1 is not necessarily illegal as he was charged with the management of the properties only and was not a trustee for sale. The law on this point is hardly open to controversy due to the decisions of the English Courts and of the Privy Council. In the case of Manohar Mookerjee v. Peary Mohan Mookerjee (2), it is observed: "It is equally well-settled that a trustee for other purposes than for sale cannot purchase the property where the purchase would conflict with his duty respecting it, or his position in regard to it; but in this class of cases there is no absolute rule against his purchasing the trust property from his cestui que trust, although Courts of Equity always regard such transactions with the utmost jealousy and, will not hesitate to set them aside if their fairness is not conclusively established". This case of Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Manohar Mookerjee (2) was taken to the Privy Council and their Lordships in affirming the judgment of this Court remarked thus: "A trustee for sale cannot purchase; he cannot purchase because the same person cannot be both vendor and purchaser, and he who acts for another cannot also act for himself. But even if he be not a trustee for sale, if in any capacity he is trustee of the estate, although his incapacity to buy is not absolute and is subject to different limitations it is equally well-settled". In the present case the finding of fact of the Courts below is that the property was purchased at a wholly inadequate price. In consideration of the fiduciary relation existing between the parties and of the fact that the properties were sold at such an inadequate price and the other circumstances I think that the decision of the Courts below with regard to the purchase by the defendant No. 1 is correct and must be upheld.

It is argued in the third place that assuming that the sale of the trust property was bad it did not affect property No. 4 of the plaint inasmuch as it was not included in the trust properties and covered by the trust deed of 1904. The learned Judge has found that property No. 4 described in schedule kha was taken possession of by defendant No. 1 as a trust property who dealt with it and managed it as such and had complete control over it for that purpose. On this finding the defendant must be taken to be a trustee appointed by consent or conduct of the party or as a trustee de son tort. In any view his possession with regard to this property was not in any way different from that in respect of the other property.

It is next argued that if the sale is to be set aside and the properties restored to the plaintiffs such restoration must take place on terms on equitable grounds, namely, that the plaintiffs should be held bound to pay the defendants the full amount of the decree, now that the defendant's claim under the decree has been extinguished by lapse of time. On this point also the appellants should not succeed. It was not a transaction between parties one of whom was an honest party as a bona fide transferee for value without notice. The defendant No. 1 while holding the position of a trustee brought the property to sale and purchased it at an inadequate price. On these facts no equity can arise in favour of the defendant No. 1 and the principle that one who seeks equity must do equity does not apply. The Courts below have, however, decreed that the plaintiffs will pay to the defendants the amount for which the property was sold before they can recover possession of it.

The last question raised by the appellants requires more detailed consideration. It is maintained on behalf of defendant No. 2 that though the purchase of defendant No. 1 was bad in law the purchase by defendant No. 2 who was a joint decree-holder with defendant No. 1 should not be held illegal by the defect in the purchase by the other defendant and should not be set aside. The Courts below have taken the view that the entire sale ought to be set aside. The learned Judge on appeal observes as follows:—"The trustee whether he be a trustee for sale or for other purposes cannot purchase the trust property; and the purchase by him jointly with another person unconnected with the trust is liable to be set aside at the instance of the cestui que trust." For his reasoning he relied on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Dhonendra Chunder Mookerjee v. Mutty Lal Mookerjee (3). If their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have laid down the law in that case as formulated by the learned Judge, his decision should be upheld. But on a close examination of the case it would appear that their Lordships did not intend to lay down any such broad proposition. It is hardly necessary to remark that a ruling should be construed on the facts on which it is founded. In the case of Dhonendra Chandra Mookerjee v. Mutty Lal Mookerjee (3), the facts were that one Sambhoo Chandra Mookerjee died leaving five sons as executors and residuary legatees. After his death a posthumous son was born of the name of Sreeman Chunder. One of the sons of Sambhoo Chunder, namely, Harish Chunder subsequently died leaving a Will under which he appointed his eldest brother Juggat Chunder and second brother Mohesh Chunder as his executors. Juggat did not join in obtaining Probate and subsequently renounced executorship and Mohesh remained the sole executor under Harish Chunder's Will. Juggat, the eldest son, as executor of his father's estate, brought a suit and obtained a decree against his father's brother for a sum of Rs. 1,70,000. Thereafter Mohesh as executor of Harish's estate sold to Juggat Chunder the one-sixth interest of Harish in the decretal amount for a sum of Rs. 5,000. The purchase was made in the name of Juggat but for the benefit of Juggat himself and Sreeman Chunder. On these facts their Lordships held that the purchase by Juggat, as he was a trustee of Sambhu's estate to which one-sixth share of Harish belonged, was illegal and should be set aside. But it was argued before their Lordships that as Sreeman Chunder was only a party to the purchase through Juggat the purchase by him was not affected by any defect in Juggat's title. In dealing with this question their Lordships made the following observations: "But if Juggat Chunder, holding the decree in a fiduciary position, could not purchase it for himself, could Sreeman Chunder employ Juggat Chunder, who held the decree in a fiduciary position, to purchase that decree for the benefit of himself and Sreeman Chunder jointly? It appears to their Lordships that the same objection would apply to Juggat Chunder's purchasing for himself and Sreeman jointly as there would be to his purchasing for himself alone. One of the reasons for setting aside transactions such as this is, that the purchaser is presumed from his position to have better means than the vendor has of ascertaining the value of the property purchased. Well, then, if a person knowing that another holds a fiduciary position, and has a better knowledge of the value than the vendor, employs that person to purchase for him and the trustee purchases secretly in his own name for the benefit of that other, it appears to their Lordships that the sale is equally invalid against the person for whose benefit it is purchased by the trustee as it would be against the trustee himself; therefore, it was not necessary in this suit to file a bill to set aside the sale merely as to half the estate as against Juggat Chunder, and to allow it to stand as to the other half for the benefit of Sreeman Chunder." The ground upon which this pronouncement was made is that when purchase is made through a trustee or in the name of a trustee, though for the benefit of a third person, it is as bad as the purchase by the trustee himself, because the rule of law which makes the purchase by the trustee for himself bad applies with equal force to the purchase made by him for the benefit of another, as in both the cases the trustee takes advantage of his special knowledge and connection with the property. Upon this decision is based the statement of law laid down in Lewin's Law of Trusts (12th Edition, page 571): "As a trustee cannot buy on his own account, it follows that he cannot be permitted to buy as agent for a third person: the Court can with as little effect examine how far the trustee has made an undue use of information acquired by him in the course of his duty in one case as in the other". Dhonendra Chunder Mookerjee's case (3), therefore is an authority for the proposition that if a trust property is purchased by the trustee as agent or benamidar of a third person such a purchase cannot be upheld. It does not follow that where purchase is made by a bona fide purchaser jointly with the trustee, the entire transaction should be set aside on the ground that a part of it is invalid. The learned Advocate for the respondent has relied upon this case and several other cases to which reference will shortly be made for the broad proposition that where a purchase is made by a trustee jointly with another person the whole transaction should be set aside. He has relied in support of his contention also upon the case of MacPherson v. Watt (4). A cursory glance at the judgment of that case may appear to lend some support to the contention of the respondent. But a close examination will show that it did not lay down any such proposition. There were four houses belonging to two ladies. To a Solicitor of the name of Mr. John Watt the ladies through their brother expressed their desire to sell the houses. The Solicitor advised them not to advertise the houses in question for sale promising that he would obtain a purchaser. A few days afterwards John Watt presented his brother Dr. Watt as a purchaser for a certain price. The purchase was found to have been nominally made by Dr. Watt but was really made by John Watt himself. The House of Lords held that the purchase was bad and could not be enforced. It was argued at the bar that there was an arrangement between John Watt and his brother that of the four houses two would go to John Watt and two would remain the property of Dr. Watt. It was, therefore, urged that so far as the two houses which were to remain the property of Dr. Watt were concerned, the sale should be maintained. Lord Cairns, L. C., in advising the House referred to the proposal made to Dr. Watt by his brother in these words: "There are four houses to be sold, if you will buy two I will buy the other two, and we will get them at such and such a price, so much for your two, and so much for my two." Then the Lord Chancellor proceeds to observe: "It seems to me that in principle the case is exactly the same, neither better nor worse than it would have been, if, in place of Dr. Watt being beneficially interested in two of the houses, he had not been interested in any one of them and the person really interested in the whole had been John Watt. The only further observation I have to make is, that even as to the two houses in which Dr. Watt is interested, it seems to me impossible that the sale can be supported, for the sale as between the vendor and purchaser was one complete and entire sale, and even if you were to separate it into two parts, and to look at it as a sale, first of two houses to John Watt and then of two to Dr. Watt, the principle upon which, as between John Watt and his brother, the price was arrived at was this, that John Watt should have his two houses at one-half of the total price, and every mischief, therefore, which would exist, and which would render it impossible that an agent or a person in John Watt's position, should purchase for his own benefit, would apply to the mode in which the price was fixed for the houses of which Dr. Watt was the purchaser". What his Lordship meant to say is that there was a secret understanding between two persons thus to divide the property amongst themselves, and the advantage taken by the trustee of his special knowledge or connection with the trust property was not only for the benefit of the trustee but also for the benefit of the other person. If, therefore, the purchase is made by the trustee for himself and for another person in the name of the other the sale is not enforceable on the principle that the rule of law which declares a purchase by the trustee to be bad applies with equal, if not greater, force to such a case.

(3) 2 I. A. 18; 23 W. R. 6; 14 B. L. R. 276; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 408; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 53 (P. C.).

(1) 54 Ind. Cas. 6; 30 C. L. J. 177.

Reference in this connection has also been made to the case of Ex parte Forder (5). That case has no bearing on the present question and only re-iterates the principle that the purchase made by a trustee for himself and another in whom he is interested is as bad as if it was made for himself. There the purchase was made in the name of the trustee's son who was a minor and a nephew of the trustee's partner in business. On these facts the Court held that the case fell within the principle of the cases which have decided that an assignee in bankruptcy cannot sell the bankrupt's estate to his partner in business or his Solicitor. The sale would, therefore, be void as contrary to the principle of the law even independently of the fact that one of the purchasers was a minor and legally incapable of entering into a contract. From this case Lewin on his book on Trusts draws the following proposition: "That a partner of a trustee or any person from whom he may directly or indirectly derive benefit by reason of the purchase cannot purchase a trust property from the trustee". In the case of Farrar v. Farrar (6), property was sold by the mortgagee to a corporation of which he was a member. It was argued by the plaintiff that the sale was invalid as it was a sale by a mortgagee to himself under the guise of a limited Company. Lindley, L. J., in examining this argument observed thus: "A sale by a person to a corporation of which he is a member is not, either in form or in substance, a sale by a person to himself. There is no authority for saying so. To hold that it is, would be to ignore the principle which lies at the root of the legal idea of a corporate body, and that idea is that the corporate body is distinct from the persons composing it. A sale by a member of a corporation to the corporation itself is in every sense a sale valid in equity as well as at law. There is no authority for saying that such a sale is not warranted by an ordinary power of sale, and, in our opinion, such a sale is warranted by such a power and does not fall within the rule to which we have at present referred. But although this is true, it is obvious that a sale by a person to an incorporated Company of which he is a member may be invalid on various grounds, although it may not be reached by the rule which prevents a man from selling to himself or to a trustee for himself. Such a sale may, for example, be fraudulent and at an undervalue or it may be made under circumstances which throw upon the purchasing Company the burden of proving the validity of the transaction, and the Company may not be able to prove it. Fraud in the present case is not now alleged; it was alleged in the Court below, and was then clearly disproved. But for reasons which will appear presently, the circumstances attending the sale were such as, in our opinion, throw upon the Company the burden of sustaining the transaction". This decision, in my opinion, lends some support to the appellant's contention that the purchase from the trustee by another person does not necessarily invalidate the transaction, but there may be circumstances which will throw burden upon such other person to prove that he was a bona fide purchaser for value and it may be difficult for a Court of Equity to sustain the transaction.

No case has been cited which may have direct bearing upon the facts before us. In this case the debt was contracted before the trust was created. To recover that debt a suit was brought and a decree was regularly obtained. The property was brought to sale in execution of that decree and purchased by the defendant No. 2. With regard to the character of this purchase both the Courts agree in finding that the decree and the sale were not vitiated by fraud and were regular in all respects. That being so, the purchase by defendant No. 2 can only be set aside if it can be established in law that a purchase jointly with the trustee at an auction in execution of a decree is bad in law. It is not a case in which the trustee was the seller. It is a case in which the property was sold through the intervention of the Court in public auction, although the trustee was one of the parties to the execution. So far as defendant No. 2 is concerned he is not affected by the infirmity in the title of his co-purchaser. He had a decree in his favour which he was entitled to execute. His co-decree-holder joined with him in executing the decree. There was no duty cast upon him either in law or in equity to see that the co-judgment-creditor did not purchase the property. If the property is purchased by two persons one of whom owing to some inherent incapacity in him or owing to his original relation with the property is incapable of acquiring any title to it there is no reason why the title of the other purchaser should be affected by reason of the incapacity of the co-purchaser.

It is also argued in this connection that the sale should not be partially set aside but if it is set aside so far as defendant No. 1 is concerned, the entire sale ought to stand cancelled. This argument, I suppose, is based on the use of the words setting aside in connection with this case. The Courts below have also loosely used the same expression and they held that the purchase by defendant is liable to be set aside. The expression 'set aside' in this connection is not to be understood in the sense in which it is used in O. XXI, C. P. C. The effect of the decision so far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned is that the sale of the property to him is inoperative, ineffectual and unenforceable against the plaintiffs to the extent of his share. As the shares of the purchaser in respect of the property purchased are not defined it may be presumed that they have one-half share each. The sale so far as the half share of defendant No. 1 is concerned must, therefore, be held to be inoperative against the plaintiffs and the purchase by defendant No. 2 should prevail.

In the above view the appeal should be allowed in part, the decree of the Court below be set aside so far as it affects the interest of defendant No. 2 to the eight-annas of the properties in suit. The suit of the plaintiff as against defendant No. 2 to the extent of eight-annas of the properties in suit will stand dismissed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be varied in the manner following: The plaintiffs will pay to defendant No. 1 Rs. 600 and the plaintiffs should recover possession of a half share of the properties in suit jointly with defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 will pay half of the costs of the suit in all the Courts to the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 will recover half costs from the plaintiffs in all the Courts.

Duval, J.—The two chief points in this appeal appear to me to be these: (1) whether defendant No. 1's purchase will stand and (2) whether defendant No. 2's purchase will stand. Now, the finding of fact is that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 jointly lent money to the predecessor of the plaintiffs, obtained a decree after his death and purchased the property for the sum of Rs. 1,200, admittedly a most inadequate price for the property purchased. Another finding is that undoubtedly at the time of his purchase defendant No. 1 was the trustee of the estate, and that defendant No. 2 was not the trustee at all. It is also found, as a matter of fact, that there was no irregularity in obtaining the decree or in the conduct of the sale so as to justify the sale being set aside on ordinary grounds. The question then arises whether in view of the fiduciary relations existing between plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 the sale be declared void as regards him. As to that, the law appears to me to be perfectly clear. The trustee is not absolutely debarred from buying his cestui que trust property but the Court will look on such sale with the greatest suspicion and if there is the slightest doubt about its genuineness, it will set it aside. The finding of fact here is that the property was sold at a grossly inadequate price. That to my mind is sufficient to make the purchase of defendant No. 1 a nullity. As to defendant No. 2, he was not a trustee. In fact he was co-cestui que trust with the plaintiffs and there is nothing to show that he used defendant No. 1 who was the trustee, for the purpose of purchasing the property. A large number of cases have been cited before us but they do not cover the present case. In the present case the defendant No. 2 is a perfectly independent person though he undoubtedly joined with defendant No. 1 in the purchases at auction; he was, however, neither an assignee nor a benamdar of defendant No. 1 and he purchased as an ordinary member of the public in the ordinary course of business. In this view I do not see how the sale so far as he was concerned can in the circumstances of this case be set aside. None of the cases cited goes so far as to say that merely because the purchase is joint therefore it should be set aside in so far as a purchaser such as he is found to be is concerned. In this view I agree with the judgment just delivered by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—In the year 1866 Shaikh Farukh Hussain executed a deed of gift of Mauza Hassanpurwa in favour of his four sons Shaikh Azhar Hussain, Shaikh Mazhar Hussain, Shaikh Athar Hussain and Shaikh Asgar Hussain. There were at that time certain charges upon the property under two zarpeshgis and a simple mortgage bond executed by the donor. In 1870 the two elder brothers Azhar and Mazhar discharged the existing mortgages and granted a fresh mortgage to the successors of the original mortgagees to cover the same debt and a further sum of Rs. 932 which was advanced to discharge another debt for costs in a suit which has been brought against their father the original donor. It is quite clear from the mortgage executed in 1870 that although the original mortgages which extended to an 8-annas share in the whole property were discharged the new mortgage was charged upon the 8-annas share of the two elder brothers only each of whom held a 4-annas share in the property and that the 8-annas share of the two younger brothers who were then minors was expressly excluded from the operation of the new mortgage. What rights the two elder brothers might have had against the two younger brothers to be re-imbursed for their share of the mortgage debt discharged by the transaction of 1870 it is unnecessary in this suit to consider. It appears that the interest of Shaikh Mazhar Hussain the second brother was sold in the year 1906 and purchased by one Saiyid Mazhar and from him the plaintiffs in the present suit purchased by two different kabalas in 1913 and 1916 the whole of that 4-annas share. The present suit is brought by the plaintiffs against the representatives of the other three brothers and the mortgagees, the zarpeshgidars, claiming a declaration that 2-annas out of the 4-annas share purchased by the plaintiffs which as I have said originally belonged to Shaikh Mazhar is free from the zarpeshgi incumbrance and that a 2-annas share of the interest held originally by the two younger brothers Athar and Asgar is charged with the zarpeshgi incumbrance. In other words the plaintiffs contend that a 2-annas share in the interests of each of the four brothers is subject to the mortgage and a 2-annas interest only in each of those shares. As I have already stated there is not the slightest doubt that the only property which was hypothecated by the mortgage of 1870 was the shares of the two elder brothers including the share purchased by the plaintiffs and, therefore, it is at first sight very difficult to see why the plaintiffs should be entitled to the relief which they claimed in this suit.

The revisional Record of Rights finally published in 1919 shows that it is the shares of the two elder brothers only that are subject to the incumbrance and that the shares of the two younger brothers now in the hands of their descendants or transferees are free from incumbrance. The same thing appears in Register D in the Collectorate rolls. It was contended, however on behalf of the plaintiffs that the Record of Rights finally published in the year 1898 did show that the mortgagees were in actual possession of a 2-annas share of each of the four brothers or those who then represented them and, therefore, that it must be taken that at some time or other there had been a mutual arrangement between all the parties whereby the interest of the zarpeshgidars was taken as being an interest in a 2-annas share of each of the four brothers and not an interest in the 4-annas share of each of the two elder brothers. That entry in the Record of Rights is supported by certain other evidence which was relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge such as a road, cess, return and certain rent decrees obtained by the zarpeshgidars. There was also some evidence to show that in recent years at all events the zarpeshgidars had paid the revenue in respect to a 2-annas share in the shares of the two younger brothers. Although there was a great deal of evidence the other way to show that no such arrangement had ever been come to or acted upon the learned Subordinate Judge accepted this evidence as proving that some private arrangement between the parties had been arrived at at some date or other which was left undetermined whereby the interest claimed by the zarpeshgidars under the mortgage was treated as an interest in other property than that which was actually mortgaged. He, therefore, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs granting the declaration which they asked.

In my opinion he was not entitled upon the facts in this case to do so. Nor was it permissible, in my opinion, for the plaintiffs to adduce any evidence which would go to show that there had been a variation of the terms of the written mortgage. I think that under s. 92 of the Evidence Act they were precluded even from giving evidence which would have the effect of showing that there had been a variation in the terms of a written agreement. The agreement was one which was required to be reduced to writing and registered. It was one which was in fact reduced to writing and registered and, therefore, even under the proviso No. 4 to s. 92 no evidence would be admissible to show any modification in the original agreement. The case of Haridas Ranchordas v. Mercantile Bank of India (1) was relied upon by the plaintiffs in support of their contention. That, however, was a case in which the agreement sought to be modified was one which was not required by law to be in writing and which had certainly not been registered. Therefore under proviso No. 4 to s. 92 the evidence in that case was properly admitted. It follows, therefore, in my opinion, that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in granting the plaintiffs the declaration asked for in this case and his decision must be set aside and that of the learned Munsif restored.

I merely wish to say that as I have already intimated this suit is not concerned with what may be the rights of the plaintiffs against the shares of the two younger brothers or against the persons who now represent them.

That is a matter which, if any action is still permissible, must be the subject of another proceeding. It is certainly not possible in the present case upon the evidence before us to decide what the rights may be between the plaintiffs in this case who represent one of the elder brothers and those who now represent the younger brothers.

The appellants are entitled to their costs here and in the Court below.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (b)—Hindu joint family—Division in status—Partition by metes and bounds, suit for—Relief, whether can be valued—Court-fee payable.

The correct method of regarding the relief claimed in a suit for partition by metes and bounds by one member of a Hindu joint family which has already become divided in status against the other members is that it is merely a prayer to change the form of enjoyment and can only be valued by deducting from the value of the plaintiff's share as ascertained in the partition the value of his beneficial enjoyment as co-parcener before partition. In such a case it is impossible to estimate the money value of the suit and the suit is governed by Art. 17 (b) of Sch. II to the Court Fees Act. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Guntur, dated the 23rd July 1923, in O.S. No. 205 of 1923.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—This is a revision petition presented against the decision of the Additional District Munsif of Guntur in which he held that the plaintiff's suit had not been properly valued. He held that ad valorem Court-fee on the value of the property claimed must be paid.

Now the value of the suit is to be ascertained from the plaint and the plaint sets out that the suit is one for partition. It is brought by the plaintiff the younger brother of the 1st defendant. The 3rd defendant is the undivided son of the 1st and the 4th and 5th defendants, the sons of the 2nd defendant. According to the plaint, in the year 1912 it was arranged that a division should take place and certain vessels and working utensils were divided out into three equal shares. The 1st defendant had been the manager of the joint family and he was apparently unwilling to divide the rest of the property moveables and immoveables. The plaintiff has admittedly collected and applied to his own use certain rents from the family land, and it is alleged that the 1st defendant has done the same thing with regard to granting cowles of other portions of the family land which the plaintiff says the 1st defendant is liable to account for. The said lands are in the management of the 1st defendant and in the constructive possession of this plaintiff. The learned Additional District Munsif says that

"Having regard to the claim for rendition of accounts and for the recovery of past profits, it cannot be said that the plaintiff is in joint possession and enjoyment of the suit properties."

This I am unable to follow. The allegation is clearly that the lands and some of the moveables have remained undivided and that the plaintiff, with regard to the land that has been leased by the 1st defendant, is in constructive possession thereof, which can only mean to my mind that he is in possession as a tenant-in-common the division in status of the joint family having, as stated, taken place in 1912.

Under the state of things the question is, under which provision of the Court Fees Act the matter falls? In the Full Bench case reported as Rangiah Chetty v. Subramania Chetty (1), a suit for partition by a member of a joint Hindu family—it was held by White, C. J., and Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., the majority of the Court that the suit was governed by s. 7, cl. 4 (b). Now partition having taken place, the question is whether the matter is not governed by the present Art. 17 (b) in Sch. II which would entail a Court-fee of Rs. 15. As stated by Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., the question “is really the value of the convenience of changing the form of the enjoyment of the plaintiff’s share.....It is not possible to estimate this difference in value or this convenience in the form of the enjoyment at a money value.” True he was there speaking of joint possession, but I do not think that that affects the applicability of those remarks to the present case. Ayling, J., who dissented from the majority of the Full Bench in that he held that the matter fell under Art. 17 (b) as amended also concurred in the opinion expressed in Kirty Churn Mitter v. Aunath Nath Deb (2) that the correct method of regarding the relief claimed in suits for partition was that it was merely a prayer to change the form of enjoyment and could only be valued by deducting from the value of his share as ascertained in the partition the value of his beneficial enjoyment as co-parcener before partition. That learned Judge also was of opinion that in such a case it was impossible to estimate the money value of the suit. I have not had the advantage of an argument on the other side but Mr. Somayya has put before me the facts fully and clearly so far as I am able to understand and I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Additional District Munsif is wrong. I think on the authority of the Full Bench case above quoted, the proper valuation will be that which seems to have occurred to the learned District Munsif in one place in the course of his judgment, namely, Rs. 15.

The civil revision petition will be accordingly allowed. The Court-fee will be paid within ten days after the records are received in the lower Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26, 183—Occupancy right acquired by under-raiyat, whether heritable—Custom, proof of.

The right of occupancy acquired by an under-raiyat is a right acquired by custom or usage and not by Statute, and before such right can be said to be heritable it must be proved by evidence that by custom or usage heritability is an incident of such right. The question is one of fact and not of law. [p. 815, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Cuming, J.—Ordinarily the interest of an under-raiyat holding on an annual holding is not heritable. All that his heirs get is the right to remain on the holding until the end of the agricultural year. If he holds under a lease his heirs are entitled to succeed him in the tenancy and can be ejected without notice at the expiry of the lease. [p. 816, col. 1.]

It is inaccurate to speak of an occupancy holding. The right of occupancy is a right peculiar to a particular person not to a particular parcel of land or holding, and is a personal right. [p. 816, col. 2; p. 847, col. 1.]

Whatever may be the origin of a right of occupancy, heritability of such a right is a creature of the Statute created by s. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and outside the Statute there is no heritability of such a right. To determine if the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is heritable the Court must look to the Act itself. Such a right has been deliberately excluded from the operation of s. 26, but it is open to the under-raiyat to prove that by custom or usage the right is heritable. [p. 847, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Bipin Behary Ghose, dated the 11th April 1922.

The question which arises for our decision is whether the learned Judge was right in holding that a right of occupancy acquired by an under-raiyat by custom descends to his heirs.

The point so far as I can ascertain has never been decided.

By s. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act if a raiyat dies intestate in respect of a right of occupancy the right descends like other immoveable property subject to any custom to the contrary and the learned Judge considers that once an under-raiyat proves that he has acquired a right of occupancy he is clothed with all the rights which have been described as the incidents of occupancy right under Ch. V of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the absence of any custom to the contrary and he thinks that to hold otherwise would be to give an under-raiyat an occupancy right which would be barren of any results. Chapter V deals with occupancy raiyats and nowhere in the Chapter is an under-raiyat mentioned or referred to except in s. 113 (1) where reference is made to an under-raiyat with rights of occupancy and it is not until s. 183 of the Act is reached that there is any reference to the occupancy rights of an under-raiyat acquired by custom or usage which are expressly saved by that section and I find it difficult to see on what ground the provisions of Ch. V should regulate or govern these rights.

Such rights are acquired by custom or usage and, in my opinion, before such right can be said to be heritable it must be proved by evidence in the usual way that by custom or usage heritability is an incident of such right and I think the case must go back to the Munsif for a decision upon evidence of the question whether by the custom or usage prevailing in that part of the country where the land is situated upon the death of an under-raiyat who has by custom or usage acquired occupancy rights in his holding such right upon his death descends to his heirs. The Munsif will record his finding and return it to this Court as soon as possible. The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence if they so desire. Before I leave this appeal I should say that, in my opinion, the question is one of fact and not of law and I think that no useful purpose will be served by referring to the numerous cases which were cited before us.

The right of occupancy acquired by an under-raiyat is a right acquired by custom or usage and not by Statute and in order to determine whether heritability is an incident of the custom or usage you have to ascertain by evidence the nature and extent of the custom or usage.

I have not been able to satisfy myself that apart from Statute heritability is an invariable incident of occupancy right as was urged before us, it may have been so in the case of khod khasht raiyats who seem by custom to have acquired by long tenancy an hereditary right of occupancy: See Phillip's Law of Land Tenures, Bengal, p. 14 and I think from the terms of s. 6 of Act X of 1859, re-enacted by Act VIII of 1869 s. 6, that the right of occupancy thereby conferred on raiyats who had cultivated for more than 12 years was a heritable right, at least it would seem so from the wording of the section which refers to the holding of the father or other person from whom a raiyat inherits, although Sir Burns Peacock in Ajoodhya Pershad v. Imam Bandi Begum (1) doubts whether a right of occupancy was heritable and in other cases it has been held to be merely a personal right: see Narendro Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (2) and Bibi Suhodra v. Smith (3).

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Bipin Behary Ghose reversing the order of the learned First Subordinate Judge of Faridpur who had reversed the order of the First Munsif of Bhanga. The learned Judge by his order dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has appealed under cl. 15 of Letters Patent.

The facts found are briefly these. The plaintiffs are raiyat and one Gedu was their under-raiyat with a right of occupancy. He died.

The plaintiffs now seek to eject his heirs on the ground that the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is not heritable and does not descend to his heirs. The learned Judge has held that such a right is heritable and hence this appeal. The sole point to be determined in this appeal is

Is the occupancy right of an under-raiyat heritable?

The argument of the plaintiffs-appellants is this. Occupancy rights are made heritable by Statute by s. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This section applies only to raiyats and not to under-raiyats and, therefore, the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is not heritable. The respondent argues that an occupancy right is immoveable property and so descends like any other immoveable property, that before 1859 the right of all cultivators whether raiyats or under-raiyats were recognised as heritable and the present Act has made no difference, that the heritability of an under-raiyat is part of the Customary Law of this country and not a creature of Statute.

Now ordinarily the interests of an under-raiyat holding on an annual holding is not heritable [See the cases of Meher Ali v. Kalarkhalasshi (4), Arip Mandal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (5) and Jamini Sundari Dassi v. Rajendra Nath Chuckrabutty (6)].

All that the heirs get is the right to remain on the holding until the end of the agricultural year.

If he holds under a lease his heirs are entitled to succeed him in the tenancy and can be ejected without notice at the expiry of the lease [Alejan Bibi v. Raham Ali (7)].

Are his heirs in any different position if he held a right of occupancy in the land or in other words the occupancy right of the under-raiyat is heritable?

The respondent has contended strenuously that a right of occupancy is not a personal right but is immoveable property and he relies on certain observations in the case of Chandra Binode Kundu v. Ala Bux (8), where Mukerji, J., remarks: "The right of occupancy it will be observed, is for the purpose of descent, thus placed on the same footing as other immoveable property. This is hardly consistent with the theory that the right of occupancy is a merely personal right." And further on (page 250*) the same learned Judge remarks: "the occupancy raiyat enjoys under the Bengal Tenancy Act substantial rights in the land and his interest cannot be appropriately described as a merely personal right or personal privilege".

Unfortunately the learned Judge does not go on to state how such a right of occupancy can be appropriately described. I think myself that considerable confusion has arisen from the use of the expression "occupancy holding" an expression which is constantly found in the law report and is used in the decision which I have just referred to. As far as I can see with great respect to the learned Judges who have used the expression it is inaccurate. In the Bengal Tenancy Act a holding means a parcel of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. So an occupancy holding is an occupancy parcel of land held by a raiyat. I confess I can attach no meaning to this expression. The expression "occupancy holding" is found occasionally in the Act itself, e. g., s. 113. Possibly it is used as a short way of referring to a holding when held by a raiyat with a right of occupancy. But as a general rule the Act speaks of a raiyat with a right of occupancy. The view which I have always taken is that it is inaccurate to speak of an occupancy holding. To illustrate my meaning take a certain parcel of land in a village. It is let out to A who is a settled raiyat of the village. He has a right of occupancy in the land. But suppose it is let out to B a person who is a complete stranger and without any right of occupancy. His interest in the land is entirely different from A and he has no right of occupancy. So the incident of the tenancy depends not on the particular piece of land but the person who holds it and it is difficult to see how a right of occupation is anything but a personal right peculiar to the person who holds the land and not to the land itself. As was pointed out in the case of the Midnapore Zemindari Co. v. Hrishikesh Ghosh (9), s. 26 deals with the devolution of the right of occupancy and not of a holding pure and simple and as the right of occupancy is a creature of the Statute and a doubt had been expressed as to the heritability of a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859, there was a good reason for making other provision in relation to a right of occupancy which would not apply to the ordinary holding of a raiyat. A consideration of ss. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 26 make it clear that the right of occupancy is a right peculiar to a particular person and not to a particular parcel of land or holding. The conclusion to which I come is that an occupancy right is a personal right. The use of the expression "as other immoveable property" in s. 26 has helped to add to the confusion it being argued that as the word "other" is used it must mean that an occupancy right is immoveable property. If, however, this was the meaning the section would be clearly superfluous. I may now deal with an argument which was put forward that before the passing of the Tenancy Act of 1885 an under-raiyat or sub-tenant was a raiyat. Mukherji, J., dealt with the question in the case of Kamini Sundari Dasi v. Prasanna Kumar Sil (10), and it is unnecessary for me to discuss it for I entirely agree with the conclusion to which the learned Judge came (see page 689*). It has been argued that if the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is not heritable what advantage does he get from it? The simple answer to this is that he enjoys all the rights of an occupancy raiyat. His heirs do not enjoy the right of inheritance that the heirs of the occupancy raiyat would have. It is perhaps unnecessary to re-capitulate what these rights are. The conclusion to which I have come is that whatever may be the origin of a right of occupancy heritability of such a right is a creature of the Statute created by s. 26 and that outside the Statute there is no right of heritability in such a right and to determine if the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is heritable we must look to the Act itself. Section 26 specifically makes the occupancy right of a raiyat heritable. But the section makes no reference to under-raiyat nor is there any section which directly refers to the heritability of an occupancy right held by an under-raiyat. The expression raiyat does not include an under-raiyat. See s. 4 of the Act where tenants are divided into tenure holders, *raiya*s and under-*raiya*s. Each of these classes of tenants is defined and they are kept distinct throughout the Act. Section 5 (3) makes the distinction between raiyat and under-raiyat quite clear.

The framers of the Act had in their mind the possibility of an under-raiyat having a right of occupancy [see s. 113 (1) where under-*raiya*s with a right of occupancy are referred to]. The conclusion is, therefore, inevitable that they deliberately excluded under-raiyat with a right of occupancy from the operation of s. 26. It might, no doubt, be open to the under-raiyat to prove that by custom or usage the occupancy right was heritable (s. 183, Bengal Tenancy Act). This he has not attempted to do nor apparently was it ever his case. My learned brother is, however, of opinion that he should be given an opportunity to prove this if he can and so I agree with the order of remand he proposes.

MANGAL PRASAD SAHU—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 82 (5), (6)
—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 11, 12, 13, 14, 22—Execution of decree—Application for execution made by one of several joint decree-holders, whether in accordance with law—Notice under r. 22 of O. XXI, issue of, whether extends limitation.

An execution application is one made in accordance with the law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of Sch. I to the Limitation Act if the particulars required by rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI of the O. P. C. are mentioned in the application. The mere fact that the application is made by one of several joint decree-holders does not take it out of the purview of cl. (5) of Art. 182. [p. 848, col. 2.]

Even where an application for execution is not one in accordance with the law a notice issued under r. 22 of O. XXI of the O. P. C. upon such application would be a step which would give a fresh start for limitation under cl. (6) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 849, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muzafferpur dismissing their objection to the execution of a decree on the ground of limitation.

The decree which was a mortgage-decree was passed on the 25th January 1918 in favour of two brothers Gauri Prasad and Mangal Prasad and on the 25th January 1921 an application was made for execution of the decree by Mangal Prasad alone on the allegation that by a partition between the two brothers Mangal Prasad was entitled to the entire amount covered by the decree. Notice of this application was given to the judgment-debtors who filed an objection on the ground that Mangal Prasad alone was not entitled to execute the whole decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge it appears ultimately allowed the objection. He held that under a private partition between the parties Mangal Prasad was entitled to only one-third of the amount covered by the decree and that the remaining two thirds had been allotted to his minor sons who were living under the guardianship of their mother.

This objection was allowed by the Subordinate Judge on the 5th September 1923. On the 10th September 1923 Mangal Prasad applied to the Executing Court to strike off the execution case saying that he would file a fresh application in continuation of the first application and the execution case was struck off on the 20th September 1923.

The present application was then filed on the 21st September 1923 by Mangal Prasad and his two minor sons. Objection has been taken to this application by the judgment-debtors on the ground that the present application cannot be treated as a continuation of the first application and if it be treated as a fresh application then it is barred by limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed this objection holding that the present application must be treated as one in continuation of the first application. He has also held that the first application was an application in accordance with law and that, therefore, the present application which was filed within three years from the first application was also within time. He further found that limitation was saved by reason of the explanation to Art. 182 of the Limitation Act inasmuch as an application by any one of joint decree-holders shall take effect in favour of all of them. He accordingly disallowed the objection of the judgment debtors and they have come up in appeal to this Court.

In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge appears to be correct. The first application which was filed on the 25th January 1921 must be treated as an application in accordance with law. It fulfils all the requirements of O. XXI, rr. 11 to 14 of the C. P. C. It has been contended on behalf of the judgment debtors that this application was dismissed on the ground that it was not an application upon which any relief could be granted to the decree-holders and that, therefore, it could not be treated as an application in accordance with law but an application may be in accordance with law and yet the applicant may not be entitled to any relief on account of circumstances other than there being any defect in the application itself. It has been held in Bhagwat Prashad Singh v. Dwarka Prasad Singh (1) that under Art. 182, cl. (5) of the Limitation Act, an application is one made in accordance with law if the particulars required by O. XXI, rr. 11 to 14 of the C. P. C. are supplied. In the present case, we find that all the particulars required to be stated in an application for execution by rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI had been given in the first application. The application of the 25th January 1921 must, therefore, be treated as an application made in accordance with law.

The present application which was filed on the 21st September 1923 was admittedly within three years of the first application and was, therefore, within time. Furthermore, it appears that on the first application an order had been made for issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 22. Under cl. (6) of

Art. 182 a fresh period of limitation began to run from date of the issue of that notice. That notice was issued on the 23rd May 1921 and, therefore, the issue of the notice also saves the present application from limitation.

Even if it be contended that the first application was not in accordance with law the issue of the notice would give a fresh start for limitation. In Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (2), a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that even if the application for execution be not one in accordance with law a notice issued under O. XXI, r. 22 upon that application would be a step which would give a fresh start for limitation. The same view was taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (3). In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider whether the present application can be taken to be one in continuation of the first application. Mr. Jayaswal, who appears for the respondent has not laid any stress upon this point and it is not necessary to consider it.

In my opinion, there is no substance in the appeal and it must be dismissed with costs.

Mullick, Actg. C. J.—I agree.

Malabar Law—Maintenance karar—Allotment of properties in lieu of maintenance to members of tarazhi, existing and future—Subsequent suit for enhanced maintenance—Parties necessary—Frame of suit.

An arrangement for maintenance made by a karnavan cannot be set aside by his successor except for good cause. [p. 850, col. 2.]

Ramaswami Pattar v. Gopalan, 37 Ind. Cas. 659; 32 M. L. J. 97, relied on.

Where a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad entered into a karar with some members of his tarwad by which certain properties were allotted to them and their families for their maintenance and it appeared that the document was intended to enure for the benefit not only of the members then in existence but also of persons subsequently born, a suit for enhanced maintenance against a succeeding karnavan by the members of the tarazhi is not maintainable without the remaining members of the tarwad or at least the other members of the tarazhi who are in possession of tarwad properties in lieu of maintenance being impleaded as parties. [p. 850, col. 2.]

If the members of a tarazhi think that the circumstances of their family warrant claim to enhanced maintenance it is not open to them to have the benefit of an allotment for maintenance to their tarazhi already made and also seek to add to it a separate allotment for each individual ignoring the benefits which they are already receiving. Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in A. S. No. 170 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tellicherry, in O. S. No. 346 of 1920.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs claim maintenance from the karnavan of their tarwad. Both the lower Courts found in their favour and have given a decree for maintenance. The fourth defendant who claims to be the present karnavan of the tarwad has filed this appeal, and it is contended on his behalf that the plaintiffs are not entitled to bring this suit without impleading the other members of the tarwad, or at any rate the other members of their tarazhi, because in 1886 the then karnavan, Kunhi Thoopan, entered into karars with his six sisters, under which certain properties were allotted to them and their families for maintenance. The karar which refers to the tarazhi of plaintiffs' ancestress is filed as Ex. I. It is executed by the karnavan's sister Kanjathumma and her nine children and also the children of these children. There are in all 33 executants who apparently comprise all the adult members of that tarwad. The minor children are not in terms parties to the karar and their parents do not purport to act as their guardians in the execution but the recitals in the document show clearly that it was an allotment for the maintenance of this lady, Kanjathumma, and her descendants. Both the lower Courts have found that the karar was merely an allotment for the maintenance of the members of the tavazhi who were alive at its date. This would be a rather curious position in a Malabar tavazhi of this size because a large number of the members are adult women and it may be ordinarily expected that children would be born shortly after the date of the karar and it is unreasonable to conclude that after born children are intended to be deprived of the benefits of this karar unless it is so stated. It must be remembered that at the time this karar was entered into there had been disputes and litigation in the tarwad and the allotments for the maintenance were made in settlement of those disputes, and, therefore, it is unlikely that the intention of those parties was that this settlement should be subject to modification immediately other members were born. Here, we have recitals in the document which show clearly that the allotment was made to the tavazhi as such which would include not only the members then alive but also members born thereafter. In para. 2 which recites "the properties set apart for ourselves and our children, etc., altogether 69 in number now and others" the force of the word "now" seems to be that it contemplates a different number being in existence hereafter and that the words "and others" can only refer to children coming into existence thereafter. It obviously does not refer to strangers and it cannot refer to people in existence for they are said to be only 69 in number. I think it perfectly clear from the recital and from the various references to "tavazhis" that the allotment was one made to the tavazhi, including future members. The clause relied on by the lower Courts is a statement in para. 5 that the stipulations according to this karar shall hold good until your death but there is a subsequent provision that after the karnavan's death, it was open to the tavazhis to demand increased maintenance if circumstances justified it, and it would be open to all the parties to these karars to take advantage of that condition and apply for enhanced maintenance if it was justifiable, although possibly they would have that right even without a special stipulation. The lower Appellate Court has held that the karar was to be good only during the lifetime of Kunhi Thoopan and relies on a so-called admission of the deceased first defendant who was karnavan that the karar was not binding on the karnavans who are to succeed Kunhi Thoopan. It appears that first defendant is a member of the plaintiff's tavazhi and this statement of his is not one against his interest but it is one in his favour. I do not think in view of the written statement that he has filed which directly contradicts this admission, that much importance can be attached to it. It is not denied that after Kunhi Thoopan's death, the members of the plaintiff's tavazhi have remained in possession of the properties allotted to them in 1886, and we see from the judgment Ex. VIII that the karars entered into at the time of Ex. I continued in force after Kunhi Thoopan's death. It has been held in this Court that an arrangement for maintenance made by a karnavan cannot be set aside by his successor except for good cause [see Ramaswami Pattar v. Gopalan (1)] and it is not suggested here that this maintenance allotment was not proper one; consequently it would be binding on Kunhi Thoopen's successors until set aside by a fresh arrangement. I have already found that the document is intended to enure for the benefit not only of the members then in existence but also of persons born subsequently and consequently, plaintiffs as members of the tavazhi are entitled to the benefits of the allotment and it appears from the District Munsif's finding on issue No. II that plaintiffs have been obtaining that benefit, at any rate, until shortly before suit. That being so, if plaintiffs want to set aside the arrangement they must implead the other members of the tarwad, or at least, the other members of their tavazhi who are in possession of tarwad properties in lieu of maintenance and claim enhanced maintenance if they think that the circumstances of their family warrant the claim but it is not open to them to have the benefit of an allotment for maintenance to their tavazhi and seek to add to it a separate allotment for each individual ignoring the benefits which they are already receiving. The cases relied on by the plaintiffs are Kelu Achan v. Lakshmi Nethyar Amma (2) and Pattu Neithiar Amma v. Thazhatha Meladath Dharmam Achan (3). In the former case it was held that a certain maintenance allotment which had not been fully acted upon was liable to alteration in view of altered circumstances. In the latter case, there was an allotment made to a tarazhi consisting of a certain number of persons and the maintenance was fixed at so much per head; it was there held, that this was an allotment solely to the members then in existence and had no reference whatever to members who would be subsequently born. This was clear from the terms of the karar, and consequently, it was held that other members of the tarazhi were entitled to separate maintenance. The facts of those cases are not identical in any way with the present case, and I hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to bring this suit in this present form. They may be entitled to enhanced maintenance but in order to obtain it, they must bring a suit in proper form impleading all the necessary parties and put the tarwad property in their hands at the disposal of the karnavan with a view to a re-allotment for maintenance. The suit accordingly fails and is dismissed. Plaintiffs will pay appellant's costs of this appeal. Each party to bear his own costs in the lower Courts.

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY Co., LTD. AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Moulvi MOHAMMAD FAZLUL KARIM
—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENTS.

*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—
Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Vendor and purchaser—Covenant against encumbrances, operation of—Suit based on breach of covenant, when maintainable—
Rent due for period prior to sale—Purchaser, whether liable—Payment made by purchaser—Suit to recover the amount paid, whether maintainable—Receiver, position of—Payment made by Receiver, whether payment by owner.*

In order to justify a suit based on the breach of a covenant against encumbrances contained in a conveyance it is requisite that an actual interruption, claim or demand be made on the purchaser: some hindrance or prevention of enjoyment proved: for, the chance of his being disturbed, and his liability to satisfy claimants, or, in other words, the mere existence of outstanding encumbrances, unless they prevent entry and enjoyment, will not constitute an immediate breach of the covenant. [p. 853, col. 1.]

Under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, a purchaser of immoveable property is not liable for rent due to the landlord for a period prior to the date of the sale. [p. 857, col. 1.]

Per Mukerji, J.—Where a purchaser discovers defects in the property before conveyance, he can either rescind the contract or successfully oppose a suit for specific performance; but if he discovers material defects after the conveyance he must make out a case of fraud in order to set aside the sale. [p. 855, col. 2.]

The mere existence of an encumbrance on the property conveyed does not give the purchaser a right to sue as on a breach of the covenant against encumbrances. In a suit of this description the plaintiff must allege the facts constituting the disturbance and that the disturbance was lawful, with sufficient particularity to show the breach of the covenant. [p. 856, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where in order to save the property purchased from being proceeded against for the recovery of rents due to the landlord in respect of a period prior to the date of the sale, the rents are paid out of the estate of the purchaser and the purchaser subsequently brings a suit against the vendor to recover the amount of the payment, the suit is not one based on a breach of the covenant against encumbrances contained in the sale-deed but is one under s. 69 of the Contract Act. [p. 855, col. 2.]

In a suit under s. 69 of the Contract Act it is essential that there should be, first, a person who is bound by law to make a certain payment, secondly, another person who is interested in such payment being made, and thirdly, a payment by such last mentioned person. If these circumstances exist, the fiction of an implied request from the defendant to the plaintiff to make the payment may be properly imported into the case so as to bring it within the section. [p. 856, col. 2.]

The words "interest in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" in s. 69 of the Contract Act include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience or of any detriment capable of being assessed in money. Arrears of rent which form the first charge on an estate under s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and for which the estate is liable to be sold, if not paid, reasonably create such an apprehension. It makes no difference that a decree has not yet been obtained, for a suit may be instituted at any moment and the loss and the inconvenience consequent on the institution of a suit are manifest. [p. 857, col. 1.]

The nature of the office of a Receiver is simply this, that he is an impartial person appointed by the Court to collect and receive pending the proceedings the rents, issues and profits of land or personal estate or other things in question which it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should collect or receive. The object sought by the appointment of a Receiver is the safeguarding of property for the benefit of those entitled to it. His possession is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed, and is the possession of all the said parties according to their titles. The property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. The title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or principle by his appointment. He collects and receives the rents, issues and profits not upon his own title but upon the title of some persons, parties to the action. One of the main incidents of his duties is to preserve and protect the property which is put into his possession and from this it necessarily follows that where a Receiver is appointed in respect of lease-holds, upon him devolves the performance of the obligations imposed by the possession of land and consequently he must out of the sub-rents discharge the head rents payable in respect of the lease-holds. [p. 857, col. 2.]

A payment made by the Receiver of an estate of the rents justly due, out of the funds in his hands, is equivalent in law to a payment made by the owner himself. [p. 859, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Bakergunj, dated the 30th November 1922.

Mr. Pugh (with him Babus Ambicapada Chaudhury and Suresh Chandra Bose), for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the second and fourth defendants, that is the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company Limited, (1902) the new Company and Mr. Tweedie. The other defendants were the old Company and its Liquidator: against them, the suit was dismissed, and they are not parties to the appeal. There was a fifth defendant, Mr. A. M. Parukh added pro forma on account of a financial arrangement between him and the plaintiff.

The plaintiff is Moulvi Muhammad Fazlul Karim: he bought from the defendant Company on December 1919 the Company's interest in an estate called Haturia. The purchase price was Rs. 3,20,000. It was also agreed that a sum of Rs. 30,000, should be paid to Mr. Tweedie, the Company's Manager as brokerage. There is no dispute about the payment of these sums. It is also agreed that a further sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid, but the parties differ as to the reason for this payment. The defendants assert that the back rents were not included in the transaction, and that as the result of a discussion and an account it was arranged that for a further payment of Rs. 10,000 the plaintiff was to have an assignment of the back rents coupled with an obligation to pay rents due to the superior landlord. The plaintiff, on the other hand, maintains that this sum of Rs. 10,000 was exacted by Mr. Tweedie as additional brokerage, and that so far from there being such an arrangement as the defendants describe it was always intended that his purchase should include the back rents, and it was never suggested that he should accept liability for rent due to the head landlord.

Mr. Tweedie was not only Manager of the Company, but he was also Receiver of the Haturia Estate. He was appointed Receiver in a mortgage suit of 1911, instituted by the Company, it was in the subsequent execution sale that the Company acquired its interest in Haturia. Before that suit was disposed of a partition suit was instituted and Mr. Tweedie was continued as Receiver in that suit, and his possession as Receiver went on until May 1922 that is until long after the institution of the present suit. In his capacity as Receiver he paid the rents due on account of the whole estate to the superior landlord for the period prior to sale and he entered those payments in his Receivership accounts. The substance of the plaintiff's case is that rents due to the superior landlord up to the date of the conveyance should have been paid by the defendant Company, to the extent of their interest, and that by including the whole of the payments in the Receivership accounts, the Receiver has reduced the profits of the plaintiff. Stated in this form the plaintiff's grievance is intelligible, and it at once occurs to the mind that he may be entitled to recover under the provisions of s. 69 of the Contract Act.

The plaint, however, does not proceed upon such simple lines. The main plank is that there was fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of Mr. Tweedie, the fraudulent misrepresentation consisting of a representation that "the properties were free of encumbrances, and that rents and cess due to superior landlords for the properties sold up to the date of the deed of sale were fully paid up." It was only in a secondary manner that the plaint referred to the aspect which I have just mentioned. No emphasis was laid upon it, with the result that no issue was raised dealing specifically with the applicability of s. 69 of the Contract Act, and the learned Judge was not asked to find that the provisions of that section are applicable.

In the trial the plea of fraudulent misrepresentation was pressed, and a second argument was advanced based on the words of the conveyance, "and that free from all encumbrances whatsoever."

It was urged that rents due to the superior landlords for the period before sale were encumbrances, and that, therefore, by the terms of the conveyance the Company ought to have paid them. Incidentally much time was spent on investigating the reasons for the further payment of Rs. 10,000.

The learned Judge rejected the plea of fraudulent misrepresentation, but he accepted the other argument, and found that Mr. Tweedie ought to have paid the back rents due to the superior landlord out of the money he held as Manager of the Company and not out of the money he held as a Receiver. On this finding he directed a commission to issue for examining the accounts submitted by Mr. Tweedie as Receiver, and determining how much had been paid out of the plaintiff's share in the estate on account of rent and cess due to the superior landlord at the date of sale.

For the appellant it is contended that the suit is not maintainable. In view of the Judge's finding, with which I agree, that there was no evidence to show that Mr. Tweedie represented that rents to the head landlord had been paid in full, I need not say anything about that part of the matter. The learned Judge thinks that there could be an action on the covenant, and this view is based on the words "and that free from all encumbrances whatsoever." There I think he is wrong: these words come in the clause that provides for peaceful enjoyment: they are words of art, occurring in an English conveyance expressed in English and they have a well defined meaning. In Platt's Law of Covenants, there is a passage referred to with approval in the case of Nottidge v. Dering (1). It ends with these words:—

"In order to justify legal proceedings on this covenant against encumbrances it is requisite that an actual interruption, claim or demand be made on the purchaser: some hindrance or prevention of enjoyment proved: for, the chance alone of his being disturbed, and his liability to satisfy claimants, or in other words the mere existence of outstanding encumbrances, unless they prevent entry and enjoyment as in the case of a prior unexpired lease, will not constitute an immediate breach".

(1) (1909) 2 Ch. 647 at p. 656; 101 L. T. 491.

In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff cannot succeed on the ground that there has been a breach of covenant.

There remains the question whether the suit can proceed as a suit based on the provisions of s. 69 of the Contract Act. The words of that section are: "A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other." It appears to me that the ninth paragraph of the plaint refers to this section. It employs the very terms used in the section and states facts which suggest that the equitable principle underlying the section is applicable. Stated in simple language the plaintiff's contention is this: That Mr. Tweedie as Receiver used his money to pay the Company's debts and, therefore, he ought to be allowed to recover that money from the Company. The justice of his claim seems obvious, and I think that all the requirements of the section are proved, that is to say if plaintiff's version of the facts is correct. It is said that the proper place to press this claim was in the suit in which Mr. Tweedie was appointed Receiver. It seems doubtful, however, whether in that suit the Court would have been able to deal with the matter. In any event, I do not think the existence of an alternative method of relief is any bar to this suit.

I think, therefore, that the suit can proceed as based on the provisions of s. 69 of the Contract Act, but that will be against the Company only. As against Mr. Tweedie there is no cause of action even if a suit could be brought against him without the leave of the Court.

The question of fact that is left for consideration is whether the plaintiff accepted liability for rents due to the head landlords. In spite of an elaborate conveyance prepared after much discussion in the offices of the Solicitors for the parties, the Court plunged into a mass of oral evidence as to the terms of the contract. In my opinion the evidence was inadmissible. On the terms of the deed read with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act it is clear that the plaintiff was not liable for rent prior to the date of sale.

Assuming, however, that the evidence was properly admitted, I do not think that it leads to a different result. The changes made in the drafts and the correspondence make it clear that the plaintiff did not accept liability. It is idle to discuss the oral evidence, for the defendant's own Solicitor says that the property was to be sold free of liabilities. He is a most unsatisfactory witness and the share he took in the transaction creates suspicion but he must have known what he meant by that answer. I find, therefore, that it was for the Company to pay the rents to the head landlord for the period prior to sale. As a matter of fact they were paid by the Receiver. There must, therefore, be a commission issued as directed by the learned Judge.

Accordingly I would dismiss the appeal so far as the Company is concerned, and allow it so far as Mr. Tweedie is concerned. The Company must pay the costs of the respondents in this appeal. Mr. Tweedie will bear his own costs in both Courts.

Mukerji, J.—The action out of which this appeal arises was commenced by the respondent Moulvi Fazlul Karim for the recovery of money. His case shortly stated was this:—The defendant No. 1 the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company Limited were mortgagees of 12-annas share of the Haturia Estate and they instituted a suit for enforcement of their mortgage. During the continuance of that suit, a partition suit was instituted in respect of the 16-annas of the estate. The defendant No. 4 Mr. T. C. Tweedie was appointed Receiver in the mortgage suit in respect of the 12-annas of the estate involved therein and thereafter also in the partition suit in respect of the entire estate. In the mortgage suit the mortgaged properties were purchased by the decree-holder, namely, the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company Limited. The said Company then went into liquidation, and its assets and liabilities were taken over by the defendant No. 2 the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company (1902) Limited. The defendant No. 3 Mr. Anchincloss was appointed Liquidator. The defendant No. 4 Mr. T. C. Tweedie was also the constituted Attorney of the old Company, the new Company and the Liquidator. By a conveyance dated the 12th December 1919 executed by the defendant No. 4 on behalf of the old Company, the new Company, the Liquidator and the Receiver "the right, title and interest of the old Company and of the new Company" in the said purchased properties, "however acquired and all arrears of rent due from tenants, and all moneys due from tenants and other persons having dealing with the old Company in connection with the said properties on decrees, bonds, khatas balance of accounts or otherwise" and also the decree in the mortgage suit together with the securities therefor and the benefits thereof, were purchased by the appellant for a consideration of Rs. 3, 20,000. On the same day the plaintiff sold a half-share of the aforesaid properties to the defendant No. 5 Mr. A. M. Paruk. The plaintiff's allegation in the plaint was that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 by their constituted Attorney the defendant No. 4 represented to the plaintiff that the properties were free of encumbrances and that the rents and cesses due to the superior landlords for the properties sold up to the date of sale were fully paid up, and on the faith of that representation he was induced to purchase the properties for the consideration stated above. He stated in the plaint that the said representation was false, and he subsequently came to know that at the date of the sale a sum of Rs. 9,900 was due to the superior landlords as arrears of rent and that the said sum was subsequently paid out of the funds of the estate of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 5. He stated further that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were bound to pay the said amounts out of their own funds. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed to be re-imbursed in respect of the said amount of Rs. 9,900 or so much of it or such further amount, as might be found to have been so paid. The cause of action was laid at Barisal as being the place where the defendant No. 4 worked for gain and where the said money was paid on various dates between the 12th December 1919 and September 1920.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 4 contended, inter alia, that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was instituted; that there was no cause of action; that the defendants or any of them were not liable to the plaintiff for his claim or any part of it; that the defendant No. 4 did not represent to the plaintiff that all rents and cesses of the properties conveyed which were due to the superior landlords had been fully paid up; and that the plaintiff purchased the properties with full knowledge of the liabilities for arrears of rent due to the superior landlords.

The defendant No. 5 contended that he had purchased a half of the properties from the plaintiff and the latter had mortgaged the other half to him under an English mortgage end that he was entitled to the whole amount of claim.

The learned Subordinate Judge has passed a preliminary decree for accounts in favour of the plaintiff and has ordered that a commission do issue to examine the accounts of the Receiver, the defendant No. 4 (who has been removed but not discharged from Receivership) and determine the amount due to the superior landlords on account of arrears of rent and cesses at the date of the sale and which had been paid from the plaintiff's share of the estate purchased by him and that the plaintiff would get a decree for the said amount together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and further that as regards the decretal amount, which would be realized, the plaintiff would get a half and the remaining half would remain in deposit for the benefit of the defendant No. 5.

The defendant No. 2, namely, the new Company and the defendant No. 4 Mr. T. C. Tweedie have preferred this appeal. The contentions put forward on behalf of the appellants substantially are the following:—Firstly, that the suit was not maintainable as it had not been established that there was a breach of any of the covenants embodied in the contract between the parties and that if the defendant No. 4 in his capacity as Receiver made the payments the proper course for the plaintiff was to object to his accounts in the suit in which he had been appointed Receiver or to sue him as Receiver with the requisite permission of the Court and not to sue him either as the constituted Attorney of the Company or of the Liquidator or in his personal capacity as has been done in the present suit. Secondly, that upon the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the defendant No. 4 had made any false representation such as was alleged in the plaint the suit should have been altogether dismissed or at any rate should have been dismissed as against the defendant No. 4. Thirdly, that the plaintiff by his purchase took over the liability to pay off the arrears of rent due to the superior landlords and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. And lastly, that the plaintiff has failed to establish his claim as against the defendant No. 2, the new Company.

As regards the first of the aforesaid contentions, namely, that relating to the maintainability of the suit in the form in which it has been brought, the question must be dealt with on the footing of the case as presented by the plaintiff and on the assumption that the allegations are correct.

Now, the law is well-settled that where the purchaser discovers defects in the property before conveyance he can either rescind the contract or successfully oppose a suit for specific performance [Recre v. Berridge (2) and Caballero v. Henty (3)] but if the purchaser discovers material defects after the conveyance he must make out a case of fraud in order to set aside a sale [Brownlie v. Campbell (4)]. The present suit is one commenced after the execution of the conveyance and is not one for cancellation of the sale. Is it a suit for recovery of damages for breach of covenant? The appellant's contention is that it is a suit of that nature, and that as there has been no breach, it is not maintainable, regard being had to the principle laid down in the case of Joliffe v. Baker (5). It is true that the heading of the plaint describes the suit as a "suit for recovery of money against a fraudulent seller of immoveable properties". The allegations made in the plaint are that there was a misrepresentation, that no arrears of rent were due to the superior landlords, that the plaintiff subsequently came to know that there were such arrears and that the said arrears were paid out of the income of the properties, that is to say out of the moneys which were in the hands of the defendant No. 4, the Receiver; and inasmuch as the Company was bound to pay, the plaintiff sought to be re-imbursed for the payments made. The suit, in my opinion, is not one for damages consequent on a breach of any covenant. Learned Counsel for the appellants has been at great pains to show us that it is such a suit, and he has urged that the covenant as to encumbrance which is the only relevant covenant in this connection has not in fact been broken, for there has been no disturbance or interruption of the plaintiff's quiet possession or enjoyment of the properties. The covenant in question runs in these words: "To have and to hold the said zemindaries, lands, hereditaments, and premises hereby granted expressed so to be unto and to the use of the said purchaser his heirs and assigns for ever and the old Company and the new Company do and each of them doth hereby for themselves itself their and its assigns and representatives covenant with the said purchaser, his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns that notwithstanding any act, deed or thing by the old Company or the new Company or their agents done or executed or knowingly suffered to the contrary the old Company and new Company are lawfully and absolutely seized and possessed of or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled to the zemindaries, lands, hereditaments and premises hereby granted or expressed so to be and every part thereof for a perfect and indefeasible estate and that notwithstanding any such act, deed or thing whatsoever as aforesaid the old Company and the new Company have good right to grant the said zemindaries, lands, hereditaments and premises hereby granted or expressed so to be unto and to the use of the said purchaser his heirs and assigns in manner aforesaid and the said purchaser his heirs and assigns shall and may at all times hereafter peaceably and quietly possess and enjoy the said zemindaries, lands, hereditaments and premises and receive the rents and profits thereof without any lawful eviction, interruption, claim or demand whatsoever from or by the old Company or new Company or any person or persons lawfully or equitably claiming from under or in trust for them and that free from all encumbrances whatsoever made or suffered by the old Company or the new Company or any person or persons lawfully or equitably claiming as aforesaid". It is quite clear that the covenant against encumbrances is not an independent covenant, but is prefaced by the words "and that" and follows the covenant, for quiet enjoyment. I am unable to agree in the view propounded on behalf of the plaintiff that the word "that" which precedes the expression "free from encumbrances" relates to the word "estate" and that the covenant means to guarantee that the estate was free from encumbrances. The mere existence of an encumbrance does not give a right to sue under this covenant [Nottidge v. Derring (1), also Nottidge v. Derring (6) and In re Martin, Ex parte

(6) (1910) 1 Ch. 297; 79 L. J. Ch. 439; 102 L. T. 145.

Dixon (7).] In an action on a covenant of this description the plaintiff must allege the facts constituting the disturbance and that the disturbance was lawful, with sufficient particularity to show the breach of covenant [Foster v. Pierson (8)]. In the present case no such disturbance was alleged; and, in fact, so far as can be made out from the evidence the payments were made without even a claim or demand made by or on behalf of the superior landlords. Were it possible to hold that the present suit was one for damages for breach of the covenant I would have unhesitatingly held that it did not lie; but I do not find any indication in the pleadings that it is a suit of that character.

The precise character of the suit, notwithstanding the inartistic form of the plaint, to my mind, is essentially that of a suit to recover money under s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act. The plaint says in so many words that it is a suit for recovery of money and it can very well be gathered from the plaint taken as a whole and also from the statement therein of the cause of action that the claim is not one for damages but for money actually paid. Section 69 of the Indian Contract Act runs thus: "A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other". In a suit under this section it is essential that there should be, firstly, a person who is bound by law to make a certain payment, secondly, another person who is interested in such payment being made, and thirdly, a payment by such last mentioned person. If these circumstances exist, the fiction of an implied request from the defendant to the plaintiff to make the payment may be properly imported into the case so as to bring it within the section and thus the right to re-imbursement is created. A debt for money paid arises where a person has paid money for another under circumstances and upon occasions which make it just and equitable that it should be re-paid, a debt or promise to pay is then implied in law, without any actual agreement to that effect. Sir Frederick Pollock in his book on the Indian Contract Act expressed an opinion that s. 69 of the Act lays down in one respect a wider rule than appears to be supported by any English authority, and that the words

"interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" might include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience or at any rate of any detriment capable of being assessed in money, while that was not enough in the common law, to found a claim to re-imbursement by the person interested if he makes the payment himself. This view has been judicially adopted by Stanley, C. J., in the case of Tulsha Kumar v. Jogeshwar Prasad (9) and by the Madras High Court in case of Subramania Iyer v. Vengappa Reddi (10) and by this Court in the case of Pankhabati Chaudhurani v. Nonihal Singh (11). It can hardly be disputed that arrears of rent which form the first charge on an estate under s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and for which the estate is liable to be sold, if not paid, reasonably creates such an apprehension. It makes no difference that a decree has not yet been obtained for a suit may be instituted at any moment and the loss, and inconvenience consequent on the institution of a suit are manifest. In paras. 8 and 9 of the plaint the fact of such payments and the circumstances thereof were specifically alleged and the wording of the latter paragraph closely follows the language of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act. The defendants in their written statement did not state that the payments were made otherwise than in the ordinary course. If the plaintiff's allegation is true and, as I have said before, we must proceed for the purposes of this question on the assumption that it is true—then the Company was bound in the absence of a contract to the contrary to pay the rent accrued due in respect of the property upto the date of sale. Under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act the liability to pay the arrears was with the Company. There can, therefore, be no doubt whatsoever that the first two out of the three conditions enumerated above are present in the case. I am not at all pressed by the authority of the decision in the case of Dost Muhammad v. Sanjad Ahmed (12) upon which reliance was placed on behalf of the appellants as the judgment gives no reason beyond stating that no relations existed between the vendor and the vendee from which any obligation of the character mentioned in ss. 69 and 70 of the Act could be implied as attaching to the vendor, and also because the Transfer of Property Act evidently had not come into operation on the date of the suit in that case. In fact the Allahabad High Court has held in a later case, namely, that of Kishan Lal v. Megh Singh (13) that after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, that decision cannot be regarded as good. The other condition, as I have stated, is that the payment should have been made by the plaintiff. Here in the present case the defendant No. 4 as Receiver paid the monies out of the funds of the plaintiff's estate in his hands. It is not disputed that such payments were made, and it is not alleged on behalf of the defendants that they were made otherwise than in the ordinary course, but it is urged that the payments were made by the Receiver and not the plaintiff himself and, therefore, the plaintiff cannot claim to be reimbursed.

The nature of the office of a Receiver is simply this, that he is an impartial person appointed by the Court to collect and receive pending the proceedings the rents, issues and profits of land or personal estate or other things in question which it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should collect or receive. The object sought by the appointment of a Receiver is the safeguarding of property for the benefit of those entitled to it. His possession is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed, and is the possession of all the said parties according to their titles. The property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. The title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or principle by his appointment. He collects and receives the rents, issues and profits not upon his own title but upon the title of some persons, parties to the action. One of the main incidents of his duties is to preserve and protect the property which is put into his possession and from this it necessarily follows that where a Receiver is appointed in respect of lease-holds, upon him devolves the performance of the obligations imposed by the possession of land and consequently he must out of the sub-rents discharge the head rents payable in respect of the lease-holds.

It is contended, however, that Mr. Tweedie when he made the payment was an officer of the Court and was not an agent of the plaintiff and that, therefore, the plaintiff cannot claim to be re-imbursed in respect of payments made by Mr. Tweedie. It is urged that Receiver is aptly described as the hand of the Court and is not the representative or agent of the party or parties but of the Court. This proposition is certainly correct in the sense that he acts in the interest of neither plaintiff nor defendant but for the common benefit of all parties interested. It is also correct in the sense that as the representative of the Court he is subject to its orders and accountable to such persons and in such manner as the Court may direct. It is not, however, a proposition which can be accepted as universally correct under all circumstances; its correctness or otherwise would depend upon the nature of the cause in which and the party on whose behalf he is appointed and also on the nature of the transaction which he enters into.

In the case of Premalall Mullick v. Sumbhoo-nath Roy (14) which is one of the cases relied upon by the appellant on this point, this Court relying upon the observations of the Master of the Rolls in Bertrand v. Davies (15) observed that where a Receiver or Manager is appointed by Court in a suit properly constituted he should be considered as appointed on behalf of all persons interested in the property, and he is entitled to his ordinary commission and allowance, and also to a lien on the estate, as against all persons interested in it for the balance, whatever it may be, that shall be found to be due on taking his accounts. In the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick (16), where a Receiver had been appointed to hold and administer the estate of a testator, it was held that he was merely the officer of the Court, and the estate must for all legal purposes be considered as being in manibus curiæ. In the case of Orr v. Muthia Chetti (17), where a Receiver was appointed at the instance of an attaching creditor in respect of the properties of a judgment-debtor and misappropriated monies that came to his hands, and the question arose as to whether the payment by the judgment-debtor to the Receiver operated as a valid discharge of the judgment-debtor Muttusami Ayyar, J., held that the Receiver was an officer or representative of the Court and subject to its orders, and could not be considered as the judgment-creditor's agent. In an appeal preferred against the aforesaid decision Muthia Chetti v. Orr (18). Shephard, J., held that a Receiver appointed to collect monies is not an agent of either party, he is an officer of the Court deputed to collect and hold monies in accordance with the order of the Court. In the case of Harihar Mukherjee v. Jahar-uddin Mandal (19), the owners of an estate had instituted a suit for accounts against a Tehsildar appointed by a Receiver who had been in charge of the estate under an order of the Court but had since been discharged, it was held that such a suit can only be sustained on proof of a fiduciary relation between the parties and the Receiver is not a representative of the parties but an officer of the Court. In the case of Bolhm v. Goodall (20), the position of the Receiver and Manager of a partnership business in an action brought by one partner against his co-partner for the dissolution of the partnership and winding up of partnership affairs was considered with reference to his right to be indemnified by the party who put the Court in motion for his appointment and it was held that he was not an agent for that party. In the case of In re Flowers & Co. (21), it was held that service of notice on such a Receiver was not service on the partners as he was not the agent of the partners. In the case of Burt, Boulton & Hayward v. Bull (22) which was debenture-holders' action, it was held that the Receiver appointed therein is not the agent of the Company. On the other hand in books on Receivers there are cases cited to show as to how far a Receiver is an agent for the Court or for the party or parties entitled to the estate where he is treated as an agent for the Company or debenture-holders in an action for winding up, or for the mortgagor or the mortgagee or in other cases. the case of Wilkinson v. Gangadhar Sirkar (23) which is the leading case on Receivers in this country, Phear, J., explained the true position of a Receiver appointed by the Court in these words: "The Receiver in a suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court, in order to preserve the subject-matter of the suit pendenti lite and the possession of the Receiver is simply the possession of the Court. He has no personal rights in the property, nor can he take any steps with regard to it, without the sanction of the Court. If it is necessary for him to take action of any sort, he should be put in motion by the Court on the application of the parties to the suit; and whatever he rightly does with regard to the property, he does simply as agent of the owners of the property." That was a case in which a Receiver had entered into a contract to sell some property. In the case of Poresh Nath Mookerjee v. Omerto Nauth Mitter (24) in which case a Receiver appointed in a partition suit had created a charge on the estate for the purpose of raising money on the security of the entire estate for paying the rents due on the estate and a suit was instituted for a declaration that the indenture executed by the Receiver under the authority of the Court's order created a valid charge, two questions arose first whether the parties were bound by the indenture so executed by the Receiver and second, whether an application should not have been made in the suit in which the Receiver had been appointed instead of a separate suit being instituted. Trevelyan, J., whose judgment is reported at pages 615* and 616* quoted with approval the dictum of Phear, J., cited above and held that the principle applied just as much with regard to the parties to the suit who opposed the Receiver's appointment or who objected to his receiving particular powers as it did to the parties at whose instance he was appointed or set in motion and that being so the ordinary law of principal and agent applied. It was also held that the fact that the plaintiff may have a remedy in the suit in which the Receiver was appointed did not exclude his remedy in the suit separately instituted. This decision was affirmed on appeal and it was pointed by the Court of Appeal that having regard to the conditions under which the estates are held in this country, one of which is that they are liable to be sold if the rents and revenue due upon them are not paid, it was apparent that the power to take the estate out of the hands of the owners and to place it in the hands of a Receiver with powers to do what is necessary for its protection must include a power to raise money to pay rent or revenue whenever it is necessary to do so. Applying these principles to the present case it follows as a matter of course that the payment by the Receiver of the rents justly due out of the funds in his hands is equivalent in law to a payment made by the owner himself.

In my opinion, then, all the conditions requisite to bring the suit within the provisions of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act are present and the suit is accordingly maintainable. It is not a suit instituted against the defendant No. 4 asking for any relief as against him in his capacity as a Receiver and, therefore, no sanction of the Court is necessary for its institution. It cannot be doubted that a person who is prejudiced by the conduct of a Receiver appointed in an action ought not, without the leave of the Court, to commence an action against him for adequate reliefs; more ordinarily would his remedy lie in an application to the Court in the course of the action itself. But, if an application had been made in the partition suit by the present plaintiff to hold the Receiver accountable for the monies paid by him as alleged, the Court would in all probability have found itself unable to decide the question of his accountability in such a proceeding, inasmuch as it involved a determination of the rights and liabilities between the Companies on the one hand and the plaintiff on the other—a matter entirely outside the scope of the suit in which the Receiver had been appointed. Where the accountability of a Receiver depends upon debatable questions not easy to be dealt with at the passing of the Receiver's accounts the Court often declines to go into the matter in such proceedings. As an instance of this class of cases may be quoted the case of Coomar Sattya Sankar Ghosal v. Rance Golapmonee Bebee (25). The Court dealing with the suit for partition would have passed the accounts on the view that the arrears were justly due by the estate and the Receiver was justified in paying them off out of the monies in his hands. This objection, therefore, in my opinion, is not well-founded and the suit as framed was clearly maintainable.

The appellants' next objection relates to the maintainability of the suit as against all the defendants, and particularly as against the defendant No. 4 upon the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the misrepresentation charged in the plaint had not been substantiated. On the other hand it has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that it should have been held that the allegation of misrepresentation was established upon the evidence adduced in the case. Reference was made on his behalf in this connection to the evidence of the plaintiff himself and his own affidavit which is an annexure to the written statement of the defendant No. 5. The evidence on this point is not at all convincing and I must hold agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no reliable evidence to prove that the defendant No. 4 made any such representation. The suit, however, does not seem to me to be based on such misrepresentation. The heading merely describes the alleged character of the sellers and the allegation of misrepresentation is a statement of an alleged fact on which the cause of action does not rest. From this finding it legitimately follows that if the present suit is treated as one under s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act, there is no cause of action as against Mr. Tweedie, the defendant No. 4 and whatever may be liabilities of the defendant No. 2, the new Company, there can be no decree against the defendant No. 4 in the present suit.

The next contention on behalf of the appellants is to the effect that the liability to pay the arrears of rent was taken over by the plaintiff by his purchase. I have already observed that the plaintiff's case put forward in his plaint was that there was a representation made to him by the defendant No. 4 that there were no arrears due has not been established; it is also clear upon the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff's wife being one of the co-sharers in the superior interest that it is not very likely that the plaintiff would not know that there were arrears. These findings, however, are not sufficient to dispose of the question. It must be decided upon the terms of the document, and perhaps also upon the evidence that there is on the record as to the circumstances connected with the transaction and as to the intention of the contracting parties,—I say perhaps, as I am very doubtful if in the face of the document Ex. 1, embodying the terms of the contract between the parties any evidence is at all admissible for the purpose of proving the agreement that is set up on behalf of the defendants. Such evidence may, if at all, be admissible under the second proviso to s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act; and in view of the highly formal nature of the document which evidences the transaction—a document which was executed after a good deal of correspondence between two firms of Solicitors who were acting for the parties, in the course of which the terms were threshed out in all their details and which was drawn up after the drafts were several times corrected and finally approved—I should not be prepared to hold that the evidence is admissible in the present case. Learned Counsel appearing for the appellants concedes that it is difficult to say that it is admissible and his only justification for relying upon the evidence, as he says, is that the plaintiff also has sought to travel beyond the covenants embodied in the document. He contends on the authority of the case of Joliffe v. Baker (5) that if a purchaser after completion of the contract and execution of the conveyance seeks to recover compensation from the vendor, for false representation made by the latter, such compensation cannot be recovered unless there was fraud or the breach of some contract or warranty contained in the conveyance. In my opinion, the principle is not applicable to the present suit, which is not a suit for compensation based upon breach of a covenant, but as I have already said, a suit for recovery of money actually paid on behalf of the plaintiff and out of the plaintiff's estate, which, it is alleged the respondents were bound to pay. The plaintiff, therefore, in my judgment, is not seeking to go beyond the covenants in any view of the matter. I am, therefore, of opinion that as there is no dispute that the conveyance does not purport to deal with the liability to pay the arrears, the ordinary law applies and the vendors were liable to pay them up to the date of the sale.

I should not, however, rest my judgment on this ground alone, as extrinsic evidence has been adduced on both sides, and evidently without any objection. A good deal of dust has arisen over the controversy as to why it was that the consideration-money was increased from 3 lacs 20 thousand to 3 lacs 30 thousand and yet ultimately the former sum was mentioned in the document and not the latter or in other words as to what did this extra amount of 10 thousand represent and to whom did it go. On plaintiff's behalf it is urged that it was paid so that the back rents due from tenants might be assigned over to the purchaser. On behalf of the defendants it was contended that it represented the rents due from tenants less the amounts of arrears due to the landlords and so the liability to pay the latter was taken over by the purchaser. A most unsavoury part of the evidence was that given by the Solicitor Mr. Watkins and that afforded by the entries in his books. There is a want of candour running through the evidence of this gentleman and the explanation offered by him, if it is any explanation at all, of the entries in his books which purport to ear-mark this extra amount of 10 thousand as brokerage, is, to say the least unworthy of his position as an officer of the Court, which he is and in which capacity he acted. I propose to say nothing further in this matter as, in my opinion, it has very little bearing on the question that we have got to determine. Suffice it to say that I am unable to accept the story of Mr. Tweedie and his witness Abinash Chandra Mittra that the extra 10 thousand represented the difference between the arrears due from tenants and the arrears of rent due to the landlords. The correspondence especially the letters Ex. 10 and Ex. 16 and the evidence of the Solicitor Mr. J. N. Basu which is perfectly clear and fair leave no doubt in my mind that no liabilities were taken over by the purchaser and the purchase was made on a bare contract of sale and that the conveyance was executed on the terms mentioned in the conveyance itself and there was no arrangement or agreement entered into between the parties varying the ordinary incidents of law relating to the rights and liabilities as between a vendor and a purchaser. I am also fortified in this conclusion by the circumstance that in one of the drafts Messrs. Watkins & Co., expressly put in a clause as to the taking over of the liability by the purchaser, but it was not embodied in the document in the form that it ultimately took. There is some evidence that the vendors had been negotiating in the past for the sale of the properties on the footing of the liabilities in respect of the arrears of rent being taken over by the purchaser as for instance the evidence of D. W. No. 1, Babu Ramesh Chandra Sarkar, and some documentary evidence as well in the shape of correspondence. This evidence, however, does not go far enough to show that the plaintiff's purchase was on that footing. The positive evidence given by Mr. Tweedie and of D. W. No. 2, Abinash, as to a statement showing arrears of rent due from the tenants of the estate and the arrears due to the landlords having been given to the plaintiff about six months before the sale may or may not be true; but that does not, in the face of the matters to which I have already referred, lead to the conclusion that the liability did in fact pass to the plaintiff by the sale.

The last argument is that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendant No. 2 the new Company took over the liabilities of the old Company in the matter of the payment of the arrears. This objection in the form in which it is urged before us does not appear to have been taken in the written statement. In the written statement there is only a general statement that the new Company is not legally liable for the amount claimed or for any amount whatever. It would seem that they never disputed the position that whatever rights and liabilities attached to the old Company passed to the new Company and consequently no issues were raised on this point. In the conveyance to which, as I have already stated, the new Company was a party executant, it was declared that the new Company was incorporated with a view to take over the assets and liabilities of the old Company, and that both the Companies were lawfully and absolutely seised and possessed of or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled to the zemindaries, lands, hereditaments and premises. The whole case has been fought out in the Court below on the footing that the rights and liabilities of the two Companies were identical. If that was not the fact it was for the new Company to plead the same or at any rate to prove the same as it was a matter within their special knowledge. In none of the forty-four grounds taken by the appellants in their memorandum of appeal has this objection been indicated, and it would be unreasonable to require the plaintiff to produce evidence of a fact which was to all intents and purposes one of the admitted features of the case.

I am accordingly of opinion that the appeal fails except in so far as it is on behalf of the defendant No. 4. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother in holding that the decree passed by the Court below as against the said defendant should be set aside, and the suit in so far as it is against him must be dismissed. The appeal in so far as it is on behalf of the defendant No. 2 should be dismissed with costs. The defendant No. 4 must bear his own costs in both Courts.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES
Nos. 915, 963 TO 976, 1454 TO 1471
OF 1924.

July 22, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir B. K. Mullick,

SIB SAHAI LAL AND OTHERS—
APPELLANTS

HON'BLE SIR BIJAI CHAND MAHTAB—
RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 52—Landlord and tenant—Kabuliyat granted on the basis of area—Additional rent, whether can be claimed—Jamabandi prepared by landlord, whether admissible in evidence.

Where a contract of tenancy is made not with reference to any boundaries or a specific block otherwise identifiable but for a certain area at a certain rental the area is of the essence of the contract and any subsequent excess found upon measurement renders the raiyat liable to pay additional rent under s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 864, col. 1.]

For the purposes of s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is not always necessary to ascertain the area of the original grant and the rent thereby reserved. All that the landlord has to show is that the present area is greater than the area for which the rent was last paid. The onus is then shifted on the tenant to show that the excess land used previously to belong to the holding and was lost by diluvion or otherwise. [p. 864, col. 2.]

A jamabandi prepared by the landlord though not binding upon the tenant is admissible in evidence to show that since the creation of the tenancy rent has been assessed and that such assessment was on the basis of a certain area. [p. 865, col. 2.]

Appeals from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 26th April 1924, affirming that of the Munsif, Madhipura, dated the 4th June 1923.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and S. N. Palit, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and S. C. Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, Actg. C. J.—The plaintiff brought 47 suits against different tenants for arrears of rent for the years 1327, 1328 and 1329 Faslis. He also at the same time claimed additional rent for excess area under s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act alleging that by a measurement made in the course of partition proceedings in 1910 and 1911 it was found that the area in the possession of the tenants was in excess of the area for which rent had been previously paid. He also claimed an enhancement under s. 30 (b) on the ground that there had been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops. He also claimed enhancement under s. 30 (d) on the ground that the lands had been improved by the fluvial action of the river Kosi.

Three suits were compromised and one was decreed ex parte. In the remaining 43 cases the Munsif disallowed the prayer for enhancement under s. 30 (d) but he allowed in a modified form the prayer for enhancement under s. 30 (b). He also allowed the claim under s. 52. He made decrees against the tenants in accordance with these findings.

Thereupon the tenants in 35 cases appealed to the District Judge. The appeals were heard by the Subordinate Judge whose decision was as follows:—

(a) The learned Subordinate Judge affirmed the Munsif's decree for enhancement on the ground of a rise in the price of food grains.

(b) He affirmed the Munsif's finding that the quality of the land had not been shown to have improved and his decree dismissing the claim under s. 30 (d), Bengal Tenancy Act.

(c) He affirmed the Munsif's finding that the standard of measurement was a lugga of $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubits.

(d) Disagreeing with the Munsif he found that the tenancies which, according to the evidence, have existed for a period of 70 years were not created after measurement and he modified the Munsif's decree and allowed an enhancement under s. 52 only in some of the cases.

As the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment seems somewhat obscure at first sight it is necessary to examine it with reference to the pleadings and the judgment of the Trial Court. Now in the plaint the plaintiff distinctly makes the case that the mouzas from time immemorial have been settled with tenants after proper measurement with a lugga of 6½ cubits and that the measurements were entered in the rent roll kept by the zemindar and in the receipts granted to the raiyats and that in accordance with the said practice the defendants used to take settlement of specified areas at specified rates per bigha. The plaintiff then alleges that from about 1305 to 1313 Faslis the lands were inundated by the river Kosi and that in 1314 the defendants encroached upon the khas lands of the plaintiff and that in 1316 a Cadastral Survey was made and it was found that the defendants were holding lands in excess of the area originally settled with them. At the trial the plaintiff produced the jamabandis for the years 1314, 1315 and 1316, also some karchas and counterfoil rent receipts. From the Munsif's judgment it would appear that the jamabandis show the area, the rate per bigha and the total rental. The karchas show the area and the rental. The counterfoil rent receipts contain the same particulars and on the back of them appear the thumb impressions of the raiyats.

At the trial one of the Issues (No. 14) was "Is there any system of measurement prevalent in the village where the plaint lands are situate?" This was answered by the Munsif in the affirmative. The Munsif appears to have held not only that the standard of measurement was 6½ cubits but also that there was a practice of measurement in the mouza such as is referred to in cl. (6) of s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That clause provides that if such a practice is established then the Court may presume that the area specified in a patta, kabuliyat or rent roll has been entered in such patta, kabuliyat or rent roll after measurement and the Munsif gave effect to this presumption and found that the areas shown in the jamabandis and the other papers were entered after measurement.

The Subordinate Judge accepts the Munsif's finding as to the length of the standard of measurement but does not find that there was any measurement before entering the areas in the papers.

But in the course of the trial the plaintiff appears to have made an alternative case. He contended that even if his allegation of measurement was not accepted and it was held that the jamabandi and other papers referred to an assumed area, still he was entitled to additional rent upon the difference between the present area and such assumed area.

The learned Munsif accepted this alternative contention although it did not arise upon his findings.

The Subordinate Judge took a middle course and he held that the areas entered in the papers were in fact assumed areas and where the difference between the present area and the assumed area was small he declined to decree enhancement. He thought that it was quite possible that in these cases the area was underestimated and that the area of the holding at the time of its origin was the same as that fixed by the partition proceedings. He appears to have found his decision upon the principle of mutual mistake.

But where the difference was large the Subordinate Judge held that the raiyat must have encroached upon the zemindar's land. The learned Judge found that the encroachment took place not upon the zemindar's khas lands of which he had none in the neighbourhood but upon the lands of other raiyats paying rent to him. But as the law is that encroachments, whether upon the landlord's khas lands or upon those of third parties must always enure to the benefit of the landlord, the learned Subordinate Judge held that in these cases the difference between the present area and that shown in the landlord's papers constituted an excess upon which the raiyat was liable to pay additional rent.

The Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed 17 of the appeals.

In the remaining 18 appeals he disallowed the prayer for enhancement under s. 52 while maintaining the enhancement under s. 30 (b).

We have now before us 33 second appeals.

In 18 the landlord appeals against the Subordinate Judge's decrees disallowing enhancement under s. 52.

In 15 appeals the tenants appeal against the Subordinate Judge's decrees allowing enhancement under s. 52.

It is urged that the Subordinate Judge's finding is that as the plaintiff has failed to show what was the area of the holdings at the time of their origin he is not entitled now to claim rent on any excess area and that the operative part of the judgment is inconsistent with the findings.

In my opinion the findings, when properly understood justify the decree and it is desirable first to consider the scope of s. 52. Now excess area may be acquired by a tenant; (a) by encroachment on waste or unoccupied land of the same estate belonging to his landlord; (b) by alluvion or (c) by encroachment on the lands of a third person. The tenancy may be created by reference to boundaries. In such a case the operative part of the contract lies in the enumeration of the boundaries and any reference to area is merely descriptive and does not affect the identity of the subject-matter of the grant.

Next a tenancy may be created by the grant of a block of land described otherwise than by reference to boundaries. Here again any incorrect assertion as to the area will be merely false description and will not affect the liability for the rent reserved. In either of these two cases the rental may be either a lump sum without reference to rates or a lump sum based upon a rate or rates per unit of measurement.

The third case arises when a tenant squats upon the land of the zemindar and there is an implied contract of tenancy to pay fair and equitable rent upon all the lands in his possession at any time. Strictly speaking, s. 52 is not necessary to fix liability for excess area under such a contract. The liability for excess area arises upon the contract itself.

The fourth case arises when the contract is made not with reference to any boundaries or a specific block otherwise identifiable but for a certain area at a certain rental. In such a case the area is of the essence of the contract and any subsequent excess found upon measurement renders the *raiya*t liable to pay additional rent. In determining the area demised the parties may either resort to measurement or they may agree to accept an assumed figure. In either case s. 52 operates. In the cases before us there is no finding that the original grant was for land within any specified boundaries or comprised in a specified block. The Subordinate Judge finds that there was no measurement before the grant and I think he intends to find that the settlement was for an assumed area. He does find that there was no rate per bigha; but that question is not material. The sole question is whether the rent reserved in 1314 was for an area less than the present area.

For the purposes of s. 52 it is not always necessary to ascertain the area of the original grant and the rent thereby reserved. All that the landlord has to show is that the present area is greater than the area for which rent was last paid. The onus is then shifted on the tenant to show that the excess land used previously to belong to the holding and was lost by diluvion or otherwise. As I read the learned Subordinate Judge's findings I think he holds that the landlord's papers show that in 1314 and subsequent years the tenants were paying the rents noted against their names for areas assumed by both parties to be correct and that they would be liable to pay additional rent: (1) if the jamabandis of 1314 recorded a new contract; or (2) if the assumed areas were in accord with the state of affairs at the origin of the tenancies.

As the case of neither party was that there was a new contract of tenancy the only question for decision that remained was what was the area at the origin? For this purpose the learned Judge accepted the jamabandi papers as evidence but he declined to give that weight to them that the Munsif gave and he held that in some of the cases they were inaccurate. The Munsif held that as there was a practice of measurement in the mouza the jamabandis must be taken to be accurate and conclusive as to the area of the holdings at their origin. The Subordinate Judge declined to accept the oral evidence upon this point and he drew attention to the fact that the papers previous to 1314 had not been produced and he thought that the areas shown in the jamabandi of 1314 might well be the area of the holdings at the time of their origin in those cases where the excess discovered in 1316 was only slight. On this point the learned Government Advocate on behalf of the landlord attacks the learned Judge's finding on the ground that he did not consider the whole evidence in the case. It is pointed out that no reference is made to the fact that the tenants placed their thumb impression upon the counterfoil rent receipts and that there is no discussion of the evidence of some of the witnesses who prove the measurements. As the Subordinate Judge had the whole evidence before him his finding in favour of the tenants with reference to these cases is, I think, conclusive.

Therefore, the Second Appeals Nos. 1454 to 1471 of 1924 preferred by the landlord must be dismissed with costs. I do not think there is any ground for the suggestion that the learned Judge was labouring under the impression that landlord must prove measurement in 1314. It is clear that he did not consider that necessary. And as to the onus which rested upon the tenants to show that the present area is not in excess of the original area, though it is not quite clear whether the Subordinate Judge has correctly placed the burden, the learned Judge has come to a finding on the evidence on both sides and the question of the burden of proof becomes academical.

In regard to the cases in which the difference is large, the learned Subordinate Judge takes the view that the jamabandi of 1914 is approximately correct and the large difference shows that the excess is real. The position taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is perhaps not very logical but he was entitled to find in which cases the jamabandi area was not the original area and his finding is conclusive.

Therefore, Second Appeals Nos. 915 and 963 to 976 which have been preferred by the tenants are dismissed with costs.

Before concluding it is necessary to refer to Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Kaulat Shaik (1). In this case the landlord produced jamabandis and rent receipts showing the area in certain years and he claimed additional rent on excess area found in the possession of the raiyat in a subsequent year. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court held that the claim could not be allowed, but in affirming the decision of the lower Appellate Court, which was conclusive as a finding of fact, their Lordships reviewed the previous law on the subject in Bengal and made certain observations upon which, though obiter, considerable stress has been laid by the learned Vakil for the tenant appellants before us. The material passage of the leading Judgment runs as follows:—

"I take it to be the settled rule of this Court that when a letting upon the basis of a measurement is proved the tenant has prima facie to show that the rent was a consolidated rent for all the land within specific boundaries, but that in the absence of such proof the mere production of such dakhilas as those now in evidence does not suffice to throw any onus on the tenant. The position then is simply that the landlord has failed to establish the fact of excess area because he has failed to show with sufficient certainty what the area in fact was for which the rent was originally reserved. There is no reason whatever forbidding a landlord from proving, if he can, a contract of the nature indicated in Dhrupad Chandra's case (2), but entries of area and rate in dakhilas or jamabandis do not suffice to prove this by themselves in the absence of further material throwing light upon the original conditions of a holding whose origin is beyond the reach of direct evidence."

The learned Judges appear to have been disinclined to accept the view taken in this Court in Kesha Prasad Singh v. Tribhuvan (3), where it was held that statements of area in the landlord's papers whether after measurement or not were evidence for the purpose of ascertaining what the area was for which the rent shown in jamabandi was being paid. It would seem that the learned Judges were of the opinion that unless the jamabandis were prepared after measurement no claim for enhancement could be founded upon them. In their view the settled rule of the Calcutta High Court was that an assumed area could never be a foundation for such a claim. It does not appear, however, that the case of Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra Gain (4) was considered by the learned Judges. There Mookerjee, C. J., observed that a jamabandi prepared by the landlord though not binding upon the tenant was admissible as evidence that since the creation of the tenancy rent has been assessed and that such assessment was on the basis of a certain area; and in remanding the case the learned Chief Justice gave the following directions: "The District Judge will first consider whether since the date of the last assessment of rent, land has been added to the holding by encroachment, accretion or in like manner.

(1) 79 Ind. Cas. 852; 28 O. W. N. 264; 50 O. 957; (1924) A. I. R. (O.) 374.

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 660; 22 C. W. N. 826; 27 C. L. J. 563.

(3) 39 Ind. Cas. 611; 2 P. L. J. 276; 1 P. L. W. 409.

(4) 62 Ind. Cas. 453; 25 C. W. N. 204.

If this is answered in the negative, he will consider whether the rent was assessed at a consolidated sum for the entire tract in the possession of the tenant, whatever its area might turn out to be, or whether the rent was assessed on an area fixed by estimate or determined by measurement. If the rent was not fixed as a consolidated sum the plaintiff is entitled to additional rent." This view of the law is in accord with that which had been taken in this Court in 1917 in Kesho Prasad Singh's case (3). It was subsequently affirmed in Sheo Kumar Lal v. Ramphal Das (5) and, in our opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in taking the landlord's papers into consideration in ascertaining whether the excess in the cases before him was real or fictitious.

The result is that all the appeals before us are dismissed with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

Z. K. Appeals dismissed.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 1253
AND 1347 OF 1922.

March 19, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Duval.

Hazi Munshi FAZULUDDIN

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 95—Decree obtained by fraud, whether void or voidable—Sale held in execution of fraudulent decree—Suit to set aside decree and sale—Limitation.

A transaction tainted with fraud is voidable and not void. A decree obtained by fraud, collusion or any other unlawful means, is a pronouncement of a Court of Justice and cannot be treated as waste paper. The only objection that can be made to a decree as being void or a nullity must be on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction. Where a decree is passed by a Court which had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, a plaintiff will not succeed in obtaining any relief in respect of it unless he gets it vacated. [p. 867; cols. 1 & 2.]

A sale held in execution of a fraudulent decree is not a void but a voidable sale; till vacated by an appropriate proceeding, the rights created thereby are effective. Consequently where the right to have a decree set aside as fraudulent has become barred by limitation, no decree can be passed setting aside the sale only as made in execution of a fraudulent decree. [p. 867, col. 2.]

A suit for a declaration that a decree and an auction sale thereunder are not binding on the plaintiff, is not a mere declaratory suit but in substance a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud and is governed by Art. 95 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 868, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Midnapore, dated the 28th February 1922, modifying those of the Munsif, First Court at Contai, dated the 28th February 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The facts of this case are that defendant No. 3 brought a suit (being Mortgage Suit No. 79 of 1914) against the plaintiffs and obtained an ex parte decree against them in execution of which the properties in suit were sold and purchased by defendant No. 1 who obtained symbolical possession of the properties on the 20th February 1916. The present suit was brought on the 28th February 1920 in which the plaintiffs prayed "to have their possession confirmed after declaration of their alleged title to the lands in suit or in the alternative for recovery of possession of the disputed lands, after declaration that the decree in the mortgage Suit No. 79 of 1914 and the auction-sale in execution thereof were fraudulent and void, and if necessary, after setting aside the decree." One of the pleas raised by the defendants was that of limitation and that is the only point pressed before us on behalf of the defendants-appellants. The plaintiff in his plaint alleged that he came to know of this decree on the 10th December 1918. The First Court accepted that statement and finding that the decree and sale were fraudulent gave the plaintiffs a decree for all the properties in suit which were described in two schedules being schedules (ka) and (kha). The defendant No. 3 appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge found that in the mortgage-bond the property described in schedule (ka) was fraudulently interpolated, and, therefore, the decree obtained by the defendant on the strength of the bond so far as it related to that property was void as also the sale held under that decree. Regarding the properties described in schedule kha he found that the properties were mortgaged to the defendant under the bond and, therefore, so far as the properties of that schedule were concerned the suit should be dismissed.

As regards schedule kha the learned Subordinate Judge observes that the auction-purchaser is a third party and he was not a party to the fraud by which the decree was obtained nor did he collude with the other defendants; so the plaintiffs cannot recover possession of the land described in schedule kha unless he gets the sale and the decree set aside; and he thought that Art. 95 of the Limitation Act applied to the case. After making these observations the learned Judge raises the issues—So the question is if the plaintiffs are within three years of the date of their knowledge of the fraud, i. e., the forgery in the bond: On this issue he records his finding in these words: "In fact I am convinced that they (the plaintiffs) knew of the same (the decree and the sale) on the 20th February 1916 when the symbolical possession was delivered and the defendants wanted them to vacate the bastu. This suit is brought on 28th February 1920. Therefore, the suit is evidently after three years from the date when the plaintiffs knew of that fraud." As to schedule ka the learned Subordinate Judge is, of opinion, that as the land described in that schedule was interpolated in the mortgage-bond after its execution the decree and sale have not affected the lands of schedule ka. The learned Judge seems to think that different legal considerations should apply to different portions of the decree obtained by the appellant. If this is the view taken by the learned Judge it must be held to be wrong. A transaction tainted with fraud is voidable and not void. A decree obtained by fraud, collusion or any other unlawful means is a pronouncement of a Court of Justice and it cannot be treated as a waste paper. The only objection that can be made to a decree as being void or a nullity must be on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction or that the Court which passed it had no territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. It is conceded that the Court which passed the mortgage-decree had jurisdiction over the properties in suit and was pecuniarily competent to try it. That decree, therefore, is a decree which is binding upon all the parties to the suit unless set aside in a properly constituted proceeding. The view that a decree passed with jurisdiction, however tainted it may be with fraud, is not void, hardly needs any support from authorities: for it has been repeatedly held that a plaintiff will not succeed in obtaining any relief before he, if the decree passed against him was by a competent Court, gets it vacated. Reference may be made to the case of Ramsona Choudhurani v. Nabakumar Sinha (1), where it is observed "that a judgment rendered by a Court having jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter, unless reversed and annulled in some appropriate proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment in respect of its validity, verity, or binding effect, by parties or privies in any collateral action or proceeding. The position is different when a judgment shows on its face that it is void for want of jurisdiction either of the person or the subject-matter; such a judgment is treated as a nullity, collaterally impeachable by any person interested, whenever it is brought in question". The same view has been expressed in the case of Raj Kumar Sarkel v. Raj Kumar Mali (2), where it was held that a sale in execution of a fraudulent decree is not a void but a voidable sale; till vacated by an appropriate proceeding, the rights created thereby are effective. In that case which covers a greater part of the points raised in this case, the sale was sought to be set aside on failure to set aside the decree; and the learned Judges held "that it was essential that the plaintiffs should seek, as they did in their plaint, to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud before they could have the sale vacated. Consequently where the right to have the decree set aside as fraudulent has become barred by limitation, no decree can be made setting aside the sale only as made in execution of a fraudulent decree, and as the plaintiffs have lost their right to attack the decree, they cannot consequently attack the sale". This view has been adopted in many rulings one of which may be referred to, viz., the case of Bijoy Chand Mahatap v. Asutosh Chakrabarty (3). The result of all these authorities is that the plaintiffs cannot get the relief which they seek to obtain in this case before they get rid of the decree which stands in the way. According to the findings of the learned Judge the plaintiffs came to know of the existence of the decree and the sale more than three years before the date of the institution of the suit which is a suit to all interests and purposes a suit for setting aside the decree and the sale. The decree and the sale being only voidable, they must be avoided within the period of limitation fixed by Statute. But it is argued on behalf of the respondent that the suit was only one for a declaration that the decree and the sale were not binding on the plaintiffs and, therefore, it may be treated as a declaratory suit. This is an attempt to evade the clear provisions of law. To hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to have a declaration that a certain decree is not binding against them though they were parties to such proceedings would be to make nugatory such provisions of the law which makes it obligatory on a party to set aside the decree and the sale in order to remove an impediment which stands in the way of his obtaining the relief he seeks. For instance the plaintiff, to avoid Arts. 91 or 92 of the Limitation Act, may not seek to have the instrument which purports to have been executed by him cancelled or set aside but may merely sue for a declaration and possession of property or other ancillary reliefs. This he cannot be allowed to do. It cannot be said that the plaintiff is entitled to regard the transaction to which he is said to be a party a nullity.

I am conscious of the view taken in some cases that there are cases where the plaintiff may not be required to remove an apparent obstruction to his right before he seeks possession of the property from which he has been dispossessed. But the view taken in such cases is based upon a different ground. In the present case the plaintiffs were parties to the transaction or proceeding; but in a case in which the plaintiff is not such a party he may not be bound to have the transaction set aside; he may ask for a declaration that it is not binding on him. But where there is a judgment of Court against him he cannot succeed unless he gets the hindrance removed. In the view I take of this case, the decree and the sale were not absolutely void but were voidable and the plaintiffs not having sought the proper remedy within three years from the date of their knowledge, i. e., 20th February 1916, the present suit for setting aside the decree and the sale thereunder is barred and, therefore, the plaintiffs have lost their right.

The result of the above consideration is that these appeals succeed, the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. In S. A. No. 1253 of 1922 the appellant will get his costs in all the Courts but in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922 the appellant will not get her costs in any Court.

Duval, J.—I agree that these appeals must be allowed. The facts shortly are as follows. The respondents are the mortgagors and the appellant in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922 is the mortgagee. The latter brought a suit in 1916, obtained an ex parte decree on her mortgage, and put the properties to sale which were purchased by the appellant in S. A. No. 1253 of 1922. Thereafter this latter appellant as auction-purchaser took symbolical possession on the 20th February 1916 and the present suit was brought on the 28th February 1920. The plaintiffs-respondents' case was that as a matter of fact one of the items in the schedule of the mortgage-deed was fraudulently interpolated after the mortgage was executed. They brought the suit on the 28th February 1920 alleging before the Munsif that they only came to know of the decree and the sale on the 10th December 1918, i. e., within three years of the date of the suit. It is clear, therefore, that the suit as framed recognizes that Art. 95 is the appropriate Article. The learned lower Appellate Court, however, has found that as a matter of fact they were aware of the fraudulent decree more than three years before the suit was instituted. The lower Appellate Court also found (disagreeing with the first Court) that the appellant in S. A. No. 1253 of 1922 (the auction-purchaser) neither had any previous knowledge of any fraud in the decree nor acted in collusion with the appellant in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922. The only argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellant is that as Art. 95 is the Article applicable and as the learned lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs had knowledge of the decree more than three years before he brought the suit, the suit is barred under that Article. In this Court a defence is set up on behalf of the respondent that as a matter of fact Art. 95 is not applicable but another Article, namely, the residuary Article, i. e., Art. 120 applies, and the learned Vakil for the respondent has argued that this is not a suit to set aside the decree but a suit for declaration that the decree and the sale under it are not binding on them. It is only a declaratory suit and the plaintiff is still in possession. The only point, therefore, that appears to me to be arguable is whether, on the form of the suit as framed, this suit is one to set aside a decree. My learned brother has dealt with that point and I agree with him in his finding that it is a suit to set aside the decree passed in Suit No. 79 of 1914 and that the plaintiffs cannot get over the limitation of three years by arguing that it is a suit for a mere declaration or that it is a case for declaration with certain reliefs. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that both the appeals must be allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 73—Partnership decree—Question in execution between decree-holders—Section 47, application of—Decree transferred at instance of one decree-holder to another Court—Realization of assets—Rateable distribution—Orders under s. 73, whether appealable.

A question raised in execution between parties to a partition suit, in whose favour the decree has been passed, is a question raised between the parties to the suit within s. 47, C. P. C., notwithstanding that all the parties are in the position of decree-holders. [p. 870, col. 2.]

All orders passed under s. 73 of the C. P. C., if passed between parties to a suit, fall under s. 47 of the Code and are appealable. [ibid.]

Where in a partition suit, a decree is passed for payment of certain amounts by one of the partners or the others, and one of the latter realizes a certain amount on having the decree transferred to another Court, the other decree-holders are not entitled to claim rateable distribution, without the decree having been transferred at their instance to the said Court. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal is against an order of the District Judge of East Tanjore at Negapatam affirming an order of the District Munsif dismissing a petition for rateable distribution under s. 73 of the C. P. C. The appellant is the 2nd defendant and the respondent is the plaintiff-decree-holder in O. S. No. 32 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tiruvalur. In that suit a decree for partition was passed to the effect that the 1st defendant in the suit was to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money and he was also directed to pay to the present appellant another sum of money. The relevant portion of the decree is as follows:—"This Court doth order and decree that the 1st defendant do pay to the plaintiff (for her share) the sum of Rs. 2,999-8-0 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to the date of realization of the said sum and do also pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 352-3-2 for her costs of this suit with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to the date of realization. And this Court doth further order and decree that on payment by the 2nd defendant of the necessary Court-fees amounting to Rs. 175 due to Government, 1st defendant do pay to the 2nd defendant (for her share) the sum of Rs. 2,999-8-0 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to the date of realization of the said sum." This decree was passed by the Additional District Munsif of Tiruvalur. After the passing of the decree the respondent here, viz., the plaintiff got it transferred to the Nagapatam Court and in execution of the decree a certain amount has been realized,

The present appellant filed an application under s. 73 of the C. P. C., claiming a share by way of rateable distribution and his petition has been dismissed by both the lower Courts. The learned District Judge held that the appellant "is not entitled to execution in the Negapatam Court without the decree having been transferred at her instance to the said Court."

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer on behalf of the respondent has taken a preliminary objection that no second appeal lies in this case inasmuch as the contest here is between two rival decree-holders in which the judgment-debtor has no interest and the order appealed against does not, therefore, come under s. 47 of the C. P. C. In support of his contention he has relied upon three decisions, namely, Varada Ramaswami v. Vumma Venkataratnam (1), Rajah of Karvetnagar v. Venkata Reddi (2) and Venkatakrishna Pattar v. Venkatakrishna Pattar (3). I think these cases are clearly distinguishable. In the case reported as Varada Ramaswami v. Vumma Venkataratnam (1), the respondent "obtained a decree against a certain judgment-debtor Mothivala Usman in O. S. No. 776 of 1916 on the file of the Ellore District Munsif. In execution he attached certain monies belonging to the judgment-debtor. Various other decree-holders who are appellants now before us applied for and obtained rateable distribution under s. 73 of the C. P. C. The money was distributed. On appeal the order for rateable distribution was set aside by the Court. The respondent then applied for the return of the money which had been paid to the other decree-holders." One of the questions for decision in the case was whether the order for rateable distribution can be considered to be an order under s. 47 of the C. P. C. The learned Judges held that the order did not fall within s. 47 of the C. P. C. since it was passed on contest between rival decree-holders and no objection to the rateable distribution was raised by the judgment-debtor and it was not suggested that his interests were directly or indirectly affected. The facts of the case show that the contest was not between parties to the suit in O. S. No. 776 of 1917 but between the decree-holder in that suit and various other decree-holders. Clearly, therefore, the order did not fall within s. 47 as it did not settle any question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. In Rajah of Karvetnagar v. Venkata Reddi (2) referred to in Varada Ramaswami v. Vumma Venkataratnam (1), their Lordships, Seshagiri Iyer and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., observed that orders passed under s. 73 of the C. P. C. are appealable if they affect parties to the suit. The same view is also expressed in Venkatakrishna Pattar v. Venkatakrishna Pattar (3). If the parties to the proceedings in question are not parties to any common suit, then the orders passed in such proceedings cannot obviously fall under s. 47 of the C. P. C. In the present case the question arising for decision is raised in execution between parties to the suit though the 2nd defendant—the decree being one passed in a partition suit—is also in the position of a decree-holder like the plaintiff. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

As regards the merits of the case, I am inclined to agree with the view of the learned District Judge. It has been argued that a transfer of the decree at the instance of the appellant is not necessary in this case as the decree had already been transferred to the Negapatam Court at the instance of the plaintiff-respondent. No authority directly bearing on the question has been cited before me by either side. The argument advanced on behalf of the appellant overlooks the fact that the decree in question is not in the nature of a joint decree. In the partition suit the plaintiff has obtained a money-decree and the 2nd defendant has also been given such a decree. The plaintiff's decree can be executed without any reference to the decree given in favour of the 2nd defendant. The only decree for execution now before the Negapatam Court is the decree obtained by the respondent which has been transferred to it for execution under the provisions of the C. P. C. In my opinion the 2nd defendant-appellant is not entitled to execute the decree made in her favour without getting it transferred at her instance to the said Court. Till such a transfer is effected the Negapatam Court has no jurisdiction to pass orders in connection with the decree at the in-

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 46 (7), 61, Sch. III, Art. 2 (a)—Landlord and tenant—Non-occupancy tenant—Enhancement of rent—Agreement by tenant to pay rent determined by Court—Liability to pay, when commences—Deposit of rent by tenant, what amounts to—Suit to recover rent—Limitation.

Where under sub-s. (7) of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a non-occupancy tenant agrees to pay the rent determined by the Court, his liability to pay rent at the rate so determined commences from the date on which he agrees to pay the rent so determined. [p. 873, col. 1.]

The limitation provided by Art. 2 (a) of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to cases where a deposit was made in accordance with the provisions of s. 61 of the Act and if no deposit was made within the meaning of that section the period of limitation provided in the Article does not apply. Where, however, there has been a bona fide deposit in respect of the whole amount due at the date of the deposit, and not merely in respect of a portion thereof, the deposit is validly made under s. 61, even though it should turn out that the whole amount due had not been deposited. The section provides for the case of a bona fide deposit of what the tenant considers to be the full amount of the rent due at the time of the deposit. The deposit, however, must be in respect of the whole rent due and not in respect of a portion only. [p. 874, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff on the 4th May 1921, claiming rent from the defendants in respect of a holding of 7 bighas 5 cottahs of land in Patna for the years 1325 to 1327 Faslis and for the Pous and Chait kists of 1328 Fasli together with damages at 25 per cent. per annum. The rent was claimed at the rate of Rs. 252-13-0 per annum.

The main defences to the action were (1) that the amount of rent recoverable was Rs. 102 per annum and that for the years 1325 to 1327 Faslis, the rent at that rate had been deposited in Court under the provisions of s. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and a receipt obtained under the provisions of s. 62, sub-s. (2) and that the rent claimed for 1328 Fasli was not payable until Bhado in that year corresponding to September 1921, which date had not arrived when the suit was instituted, and (2) that the suit was barred by limitation under the provisions of Sch. III, Art. 2 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, having been brought more than six months after the date of service of notice of the deposit.

It appears that in 1917 the plaintiff attempted to eject the defendants as trespassers, but it was decided by the High Court in April of that year that the status of the defendants was that of non-occupancy raiyyats. The rent then payable was Rs. 102 per annum. On the 13th July 1917, the plaintiff filed in Court an agreement under the provisions of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the payment of an enhanced rent at the rate of Rs. 379 per annum and on the 18th July 1917 (9th Sawan 1324) the agreement was duly served on the defendants. The defendants refused to execute the agreement and on the 5th November 1917, the plaintiff instituted a suit before the Munsif of Patna for ejectment of the defendants under s. 46 (6) of the Act. Under the provisions of s. 46, sub-ss. (6) to (10) if the raiyyat refuses to execute an agreement tendered to him under the earlier provisions of the section and the landlord thereupon institutes a suit to eject him, the Court shall determine what rent is fair and equitable for the holding. If the raiyyat agrees to pay the rent so determined he shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at that rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement, but on the expiration of that term shall be liable to ejectment unless he has acquired a right of occupancy. But if the raiyyat does not agree to pay the rent so determined, the Court shall pass a decree for ejectment and a decree for ejectment so passed shall take effect from the end of the agricultural year in which it is passed. The suit for ejectment was not decided by the Munsif until the 4th February 1920, when he found that a fair and equitable rent for the holding was Rs. 252-13-0. On the 12th February 1920, a notice was served on the defendants to accept and pay the rent found to be fair and equitable, but they do not appear to have agreed to pay the rent at the rate found by the Munsif. The Munsif's judgment has not been produced before us but it may be assumed that he passed a decree for ejectment in accordance with the provisions of s. 46 (8) of the Act. No steps, however, were taken to eject the tenants and they remained in possession without any agreement to pay the rent determined by the Court. I think the plaintiff was entitled to put them to their election but she failed to do so, and no agreement was come to by the tenants to accept the new rent determined by the Court until a year later as will presently appear.

The defendants appealed from the Munsif's decision to the Subordinate Judge. On the 19th September 1920 the appeal was dismissed. The defendants then preferred a second appeal to the High Court and applied for a stay of execution of the decree for ejectment. They were in this difficulty that if they refused to agree to pay the rent found equitable, they would be liable to ejectment before the decision of the High Court on appeal. If they agreed to pay the rent found equitable they considered, rightly or wrongly, that their appeal to the High Court could not proceed. In the result they agreed to pay the rent found fair and equitable by the Court stipulating that it should be subject to the result of their appeal then pending in the High Court. Their agreement is dated the 10th February 1921, corresponding to the 18th Magh 1328 Fasli. The appeal in the High Court was decided on the 3rd January 1923 the decision of the lower Courts being affirmed and the appeal dismissed. Pending this litigation the object of which was to fix a fair and equitable rent which the defendants could only refuse to pay under pain of being ejected, the defendants deposited in Court under the provisions of s. 61 of the Act the rent due at the old rate, namely, Rs. 102 per annum, a short time after the expiration of each of the three years 1325 to 1327 and notices of the deposit were served upon the plaintiff on each occasion shortly after the deposit was made. The notices of the deposits for 1325, 1326 and 1327 were served upon the plaintiff on the 15th December 1918, 15th December 1919 and the 24th December 1920 respectively.

The first question for determination is from what date is the enhanced rent payable. The plaintiff contends that under s. 46, sub-s. (7) the enhanced rent is payable from the 18th July 1917 when the agreement mentioned in sub-s. (1) was served upon the tenants. Sub-s. (7) reads as follows: "If the raiyyat agrees to pay the rent so determined" that is the fair and equitable rent determined by the Court in a suit for ejectment mentioned in sub-s. (6), "he shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at that rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement under the conditions mentioned in the last foregoing section, unless he has acquired a right of occupancy." Her contention is that the date of the agreement there mentioned has reference to the agreement tendered to the tenant under sub-s. (1). It is urged that it would be unjust where the rent is below the fair and equitable rate and the landlord claims enhancement under the earlier clauses of the section to allow the tenant by refusing to pay an enhanced rent, to continue in possession at the old rate until a suit has been brought and a fair rent determined which, as in this case, might take a long time, and that once the fair rent has been determined by the Court it should take effect from the date when the enhancement was first claimed and an agreement tendered under the earlier clauses of the section. The defendants, on the other hand, contend that the date of the agreement in sub-s. (7) must refer to the earlier words of that sub-section which contemplate an agreement by the raiyyat to pay the rent determined by the court. They point out that the agreement mentioned in the earlier sub-ss. (1) to (5) is merely a document tendered to the raiyyat for execution which he may or may not execute at his option and that in fact, until executed, it is no agreement at all, and that if sub-s. (7) intended to refer to the date when that agreement was tendered it would have said so. Moreover the document tendered would not bear any date until its actual execution. They further point out that under sub-s. (3) if the agreement referred to in sub-ss. (1) and (2) had been accepted and executed by the tenant it would not take effect until the commencement of the agricultural year next following, and there is no reason for supposing that where a raiyat agrees to accept the equitable rent found by the Court after a suit for ejectment, that agreement should take effect from an earlier date than would have been the case had he accepted the proposal put forward by the landlord before litigation took place. Moreover the agreement tendered under s. 46, sub-s. (1) was to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 379 and it would be unjust that having refused to pay that rent, but afterwards having accepted a smaller rate determined by the Court, he should have to pay the enhanced rent from the date when the larger rate was unjustifiably demanded. Much may be said on purely equitable grounds as to what the law ought to be but we must interpret the section according to the natural meaning of the words, unless such interpretation would lead to a manifest absurdity which it may be presumed the Legislature did not intend.

It may be observed that s. 46 refers to two separate and distinct matters. The first sub-sections contemplate an amicable enhancement of the rent of a non-occupancy raiyat without litigation. The landlord proposes an enhanced rent and tenders to the raiyat an agreement to pay that enhanced rent which he may or may not execute at his option. If he accepts the proposal then the enhanced rent takes effect from the beginning of the next agricultural year. If he does not accept it then the landlord may sue for ejectment. The sixth and subsequent sub-sections relate to the procedure to be adopted where a suit for ejectment has been brought. They provide that before ordering ejectment the Court shall determine what is a fair and equitable rent. If the raiyat refuses to pay the rent so found then he may be ejected, but it seems perfectly clear that he would not be liable for anything more than the original rent up to the date when he was ejected. If, on the other hand, he agrees to pay the rent so determined he shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at that rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement. It seems to me clear that the date of the agreement there mentioned is the date when he agrees to pay the rent found by the Court. There would appear to be no more reason why he should pay that enhanced rent from an earlier date, if he accepts it, than there would be why he should pay an enhanced rent if he refuses to accept it and renders himself liable to ejectment. The agreement in this case was dated the 10th February 1921 and, in my opinion, the enhanced rent became payable from that date. The result is that unless the suit is barred by limitation the rent payable by the tenants was at the rate of Rs. 102 up to the 10th February 1921 which corresponds to the 18th Magh 1328 Fasli and the rent payable after that date is at the rate of Rs. 252-13-0. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the enhanced rent was not claimable until the 3rd January 1923 when the High Court finally dismissed the appeal in the ejectment suit. But it seems clear that the enhanced rent is payable at the latest from the date when the raiyat agrees to pay the rent determined by the Court. Sub-section (7) does not in terms say from what date the enhanced rent should be payable. It merely states that the raiyat shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at the enhanced rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement. But, as his liability to pay the enhanced rent only arises by reason of his agreement, it seems to me impossible to hold that he was under any liability to pay rent at the enhanced rate before that date. The fact that the defendants did not in fact agree to pay the enhanced rent until a much later date than that on which they might have been put to their election appears to have been due to the failure of the plaintiff to insist upon her rights. She could have compelled the defendants to pay the new rent or submit to ejectment as soon as the Munsif's decision was given unless the Court ordered a stay, which would only be granted on terms protecting the plaintiff's rights.

It remains to consider whether the claim is barred by the special limitation prescribed in Schedule III of the Act. If the limitation there prescribed applies to the facts of the present case then it is clear that the claim for rent for the years 1325 and 1326 Fasli is time-barred for the notices of deposit for those years were served on the 15th December 1918 and the 15th December 1919 respectively. The notice of deposit of the rent for the year 1327 was served on the 24th December 1920 and the learned Subordinate Judge considered that the claim for rent for that year was also barred. It appears to have escaped his notice, however, that the present suit was instituted within six months of the 24th December 1920, namely, on the 4th May 1921, and it was conceded in argument before us that the rent for that year is not barred.

The appellant, however, contends that the claim for rent for the two previous years is not time-barred on the ground that the requirements of s. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were not complied with. The section provides that in certain cases, which are applicable in the present instance, the tenant may present to the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the rent of his holding an application in writing for permission to deposit in Court the full amount of the money then due. The application must state the grounds upon which it is made and shall contain certain particulars as to the name of the person to whose credit the deposit is to be entered and it shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed by s. 52 of the C. P. C. Under s. 62, if the Court accepts the deposit, it shall give a receipt for it under the seal of the Court and the receipt so given operate as an acquittance for the amount of the rent payable by the tenant and deposited as aforesaid in the same manner and to the same extent as if that amount of rent had been received by the person entitled to it. It is pointed out on behalf of the appellant that as the rent was not deposited until the end of the year, interest became payable from the dates of the different kists in each year and the amount of interest was not deposited. It has been found that the rent was payable not at the end of each agricultural year but kist by kist and this is no longer disputed. It follows, therefore, that at the end of the years some interest would be due upon the unpaid instalments and as the interest was not deposited it is contended that the defendants cannot be taken to have made a valid deposit under s. 61 of the full amount of the money then due. The limitation only applies to cases where the deposit was made under s. 61 and if no deposit was made within the meaning of that section the limitation period cannot apply. The question for determination is whether the deposit made in the circumstances stated was a sufficient compliance with the section. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that even if the amount deposited fell short of the sum actually due to the landlord at the date of the deposit it was a sufficient compliance with the section. In support of his finding he relied upon the case of Sasi Bhusan Dey v. Umakanta Dey (1). In that case the previous decisions of the same Court were reviewed and the meaning and effect of the section was considered at length. The Court consisting of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., held that where there has been a bona fide deposit in respect of the whole amount due at the date of the deposit, and not merely in respect of a portion thereof, the deposit is validly made under the section, even though it should turn out that the whole amount due had not been deposited. In my opinion that case was rightly decided. The section appears to me to provide for the case of a bona fide deposit of what the tenant considers to be the full amount of the rent due at the time of deposit. The deposit, however, must be in respect of the whole rent due and not in respect of a portion only. It may well happen that there is some difference between the landlord and the tenant as to the amount of rent payable. In such a case the landlord might refuse to accept a sum which he considers falls short of the rent payable. One of the cases to which the section applies is where the rent has been tendered to the landlord and he has refused to accept it or grant a receipt. That might well happen where there was a bona fide dispute between the parties as to the actual amount payable. In the present case the tenants were contending that the rent was due at the end of the agricultural year and not kist by kist. If they were right in that contention no interest would be payable upon the earlier kists. The bona fides of the tenants in this case has not been impugned although the Court has decided that the rent was payable quarterly and not annually. It seems to me that the intention of the Legislature was that where a bona fide deposit has been made in respect of the whole rent due, then the matter must be decided by suit at the instance of the landlord within six months of the receipt of the notice. Under s. 62 a receipt given for the sum deposited acts as an acquittance to the extent of the amount deposited and the landlord can take the deposit out of Court and sue for the balance if he contends that the total amount due has not been deposited, and I think that the intention was that in such a case the dispute between the parties should be promptly decided otherwise the landlord cannot question the sufficiency of the amount paid into Court. If the appellant's contention be accepted it would follow that s. 62 could not operate if the amount paid in were less by a few annas than the amount actually due and no valid acquittance could be given to the tenant. Again if the appellant's contention be accepted it is difficult to see in what case the period of limitation prescribed would be effective for if the whole amount actually due must be paid in, so as to create a valid deposit under s. 61, it follows that any suit by the landlord, whether brought within six months or at a later period to recover the rent, must prove infructuous and there is no necessity for prescribing a period of limitation. If, on the other hand, the deposit of a smaller sum than that actually due is not a valid deposit within the meaning of the section again the limitation prescribed is of no effect. In my opinion the case of Sasi Bhusan Dey v. Umakanta Dey (1) was rightly decided and applies to the facts of this case. I think the claim for rent for the years 1325 and 1326 is barred by limitation and for the year 1327 the plaintiff is entitled to recover kist by kist at the old rate of Rs. 102 with interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. credit being given for the amount deposited. With regard to the rent for the two kists of 1328 this is also recoverable at the old rate up to the 10th February 1921 and after that date at the rate of Rs. 252-13-0 together with interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The defendants are willing that the amount paid into Court for the years 1325 and 1326, and which we are told is still in deposit, should be paid out to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the rent for those years notwithstanding the bar. There will, therefore, be an order that the sums deposited for the years 1325 and 1326 be paid out to the plaintiff. She will also be entitled to take out of Court the deposit made for 1327 in part satisfaction of her claim for rent for that year. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be varied in accordance with the decision above arrived at. The appellant has failed upon each of the main points argued before us but has succeeded in so far as the rent for 1327 is concerned and has succeeded in part as to the date from which the enhanced rent shall be payable. She has gained little advantage in so far as the rent for 1327 is concerned as this has been found to be payable at the old rate and the sum deposited could have been taken out of Court by her at any time. In the circumstances I think that the parties should each bear their own costs of this appeal.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 92, 115—Sales, two, of same property—First vendee attesting second sale-deed—Disclaimer of purchase—Estoppel—S. 92, application.

The doctrine of estoppel is that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct. [p. 876, col. 2; p. 877, col. 1.]

Cairncross v. Lorimer, (1860) 3 Macq. H. L. 827 at p. 829; 7 Jur. (N. S.) 149; 3 L. T. 130; 123 R. R. 906, referred to.

The terms of s. 115 of the Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel. [p. 877, col. 1.]

Where a vendee of property subsequently attests a sale-deed relating to the same property executed by his vendor in favour of another person, he holds out that the sale-deed in his own favour was inoperative, and that he is willing that the property should be dealt with as if it were at the absolute disposal of his vendor, and if a third person on the faith of this representation purchases that property from the vendor, the vendee making the representation is estopped from claiming title to the property. [p. 876, cols. 1 & 2.]

In such a case as the above, there is no conflict between s. 92 and s. 115 of the Evidence Act. There is no question of the admission of any oral evidence to rescind the earlier sale. The question simply is whether or not there was a representation made and acted upon. [p. 877, col. 1.]

Sections 92 and 115, Evidence Act, deal with two entirely different topics. When a party seeks to give evidence of a subsequent oral agreement modifying the terms of the written grant, he puts forward that agreement as true and relies upon the truth of that agreement. In the case of an estoppel, the party who pleads it does not profess to show that the representation made is true. On the contrary, his case very probably is that the representation is false but that the person who made it should not be allowed to show that it is false. [p. 877, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 65 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, in O. S. No. 957 of 1919.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and K. G. Babu Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are complicated and as the Munsif has set them out clearly in his judgment, I do not propose to state them again. The 1st defendant was the owner of the property in dispute. On the 1st of August 1919, she executed a sale-deed in favour of the 2nd defendant (Ex. II). On the 10th of September 1919, she executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff Ex. C. The contest is now between the plaintiff and the second defendant. The question is shortly, whose sale-deed is to prevail?

The conveyance in favour of the 2nd defendant being earlier in date would, in the ordinary course, take precedence. On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that the conduct of the 2nd defendant created an estoppel and that he is precluded from relying upon his sale-deed. The 2nd defendant treated the sale in his favour as cancelled, but under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, the subsequent agreement rescinding the sale cannot be proved. The question then is, did the 2nd defendant by any representation or by conduct amounting to representation induce the plaintiff to purchase the property parting with valuable consideration? The effect of the finding of the Courts below is that the conduct of the 2nd defendant was of an unequivocal character and that the plaintiff was thereby misled. This is a question of fact and the finding must be accepted in second appeal. Even apart from this, I am satisfied that the finding is correct. It is unnecessary to narrate the circumstances which give rise to the plea of estoppel. The outstanding facts that are relied upon by the plaintiff in this connection are, that the 1st defendant with the concurrence of the 2nd defendant agreed on the 5th of September to sell the property to the 7th defendant, that an agreement of sale was accordingly executed and that the 2nd defendant giving up his rights under his own conveyance, attested the agreement to sell. The 2nd defendant thus held out that the sale in his own favour was inoperative, that the 1st defendant still continued to be the owner of the property, that she had authority to dispose of it and that the 2nd defendant was willing that the property should be dealt with as if it was at the absolute disposal of the 1st defendant. In short, the 2nd defendant's conduct amounted to a representation that although he took a conveyance, the 1st defendant remained the owner of the property. The Courts below have also held believing the plaintiff himself on this point that he was induced to purchase the property by this conduct on the part of the 2nd defendant. I agree with this conclusion. Can the 2nd defendant now turn round and say that he was on the date of the sale to the plaintiff, the owner of the property. I think not. In Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (1), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee made the following observations:—

“What the law and the Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act; and the principle on which the law and the Statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it.”

Their Lordships quote the following passage from the judgment of Lord Chancellor Campbell in the case of Cairncross v. Lorimer (2):—

“The doctrine will apply, which is to be found, I believe, in the laws of all civilised nations, that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words, or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct."

Their Lordships also held that the terms of s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel.

I am clearly of the opinion that the 2nd defendant cannot be allowed to deny that the 1st defendant was the owner of the property and was competent to dispose of it. I may observe that we are not concerned with the 7th defendant who does not put forward any claim.

For the appellant, it was strenuously argued that to give effect to the doctrine of estoppel would be tantamount to abrogating s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. I cannot follow this argument. I am not asked to admit evidence of any subsequent agreement to rescind the original sale. Under s. 92, the existence of such agreement cannot be proved. The question would arise in this way under that section. If the 2nd defendant proves by the production of the sale-deed that he is the owner of the property, no evidence can be given of a subsequent oral agreement on his part to rescind the sale. But, in the present case, the plaintiff does not rely upon any subsequent agreement. What he says in effect is, the 2nd defendant's conduct amounted to a certain representation and he acted upon it. Did he or did he not make that representation? This is the point to be decided. If he did make the representation and the plaintiff was misled by it and acted upon it, estoppel can be successfully pleaded. The Court is not called on to look at the conveyance in favour of the 2nd defendant at all. It is not in the least degree concerned with it. Neither it is necessary to look at the sale-deed nor to admit evidence of an agreement to rescind the sale. In fact the issue which the Court will have to decide is whether or not a representation was made. Considerations pertaining to the sale-deed are extraneous to this issue. Until the question of estoppel is decided against the plaintiff, there will arise no occasion to consider the applicability of s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. I find absolutely no conflict between ss. 92 and 115. The case in Pichammal v. Ponnambala Bhatler (3) cited by the appellant's learned Vakils is distinguishable and the observations relied on are obiter. There is another way of looking at the question. When a party seeks to give evidence of a subsequent oral agreement modifying the terms of the written grant, he puts forward that agreement as true and relies upon the truth of that agreement. In the case of an estoppel, the party who pleads it does not profess to show that the representation made is true. On the contrary, his case very probably is that the representation is false but that the person who made it should not be allowed to show that it is false. Sections 92 and 115 deal with two entirely different topics and I am unable to discover any conflict between the two.

In dealing with the question whether a transaction amounted to a sale or a mortgage, Melvill, J., in the course of his judgment in Paksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (4) observed thus:—

"If the holder of an absolute bill of sale were not only to allow the vendor to remain in possession, but were to take interest from him on the alleged purchase money, or allow him to go on improving the property, I conceive that any Court would hold that the so-called vendee was estopped from enforcing his bill of sale. The answer to him would be, not that his conduct was evidence of an oral agreement converting the sale into a mortgage, but that, whether there had been such an agreement or not, he had by his conduct led the defendant to believe that he would treat the transaction as a mortgage, and that, on the strength of such belief, the defendant had been induced to pay money which he would not otherwise have paid, and that under such circumstances the plaintiff was estopped from denying that the original transaction was one of mortgage. In such a case it is clear that evidence of conduct would be strictly admissible under s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act."

It has been suggested by the appellant's Vakils that the view of Melvill, J., was overruled in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (5) and that, therefore, the passage extracted above from his judgment cannot be taken as stating the law correctly. Whatever may be later view of the law on the point expressly decided by Melvill, J., I cannot agree that the particular passage referred to above does not correctly state the rule of estoppel.

(4) 4 B. 594; 5 Ind. Jur. 527; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 903.

(5) 42 Ind. Cas. 642; 45 C. 320; 15 A. L. J. 825; 33 M. L. J. 648; 3 P. L. W. 185; 6 L. W. 777; 22 C. W. N. 257; 23 M. L. T. 36; 27 C. L. J. 175; 20 Bom. L. R. 278; (1918) M. W. N. 300; 9 L. B. R. 114; 11 Bur. L. T. 21; 44 I. A. 236 (P. C.).

I am clearly, therefore, of the opinion that the plaintiff must succeed on the question of estoppel.

The case may be considered from still another point of view. The 2nd defendant's conveyance was executed on the 1st of August 1919 but was not immediately registered. Misled by the conduct of the 2nd defendant (conduct to which I have already referred), the plaintiff himself took a sale deed on the 10th September and got it registered on the 11th. The 2nd defendant ignoring what had happened and with the fraudulent object of enforcing the sale in his own favour, then presented his conveyance for registration on the 13th of September and got it registered on the 20th of October. The effect of registration is to confer validity on the document from the date of its execution. Is the 2nd defendant then to be allowed to rely upon his own fraudulent conduct to give his conveyance preference over the sale-deed of the plaintiff executed later but registered earlier? For this reason also, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

There is just a minor point which has been raised by the appellant and relates to the discussion of Issue No. III in the Munsif's judgment. The 2nd defendant admittedly paid Rs. 350 and he will be entitled to that sum. Rs. 350 will be accordingly substituted for Rs. 227-3-7. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court will be modified to that extent. The second appeal in other respects fails and subject to the modification above is dismissed with costs.

This second appeal having been posted again to be spoken to this day the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The second appeal is now posted for being spoken to. There is no objection to the second appeal being dismissed without any reservation of the nature contained in the last paragraph of my judgment.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), s. 65—Person of unsound mind—Finding as to incapacity to manage himself and his affairs, whether necessary—Person of weak memory, whether of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs.

Under s. 65 of the Lunacy Act what the Court has to decide is whether the person before it is of unsound mind and is incapable of managing himself and his affairs, and it is open to the Court to find under that section that a man is of unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs but that he is capable of managing himself and is not dangerous to himself or to others. [p. 879, cols. 1 & 2.]

A person whose mental condition has been affected by a stroke of paralysis as a result of which his memory has become seriously defective but who is able to answer questions with regard to his family and his estate with a certain amount of intelligence cannot be said to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs within the meaning of s. 65 of the Lunacy Act. Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 23rd of September 1924.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Khulna, dated the 23rd September 1924, whereby he found that the appellant before us was of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The learned District Judge came to this conclusion upon the evidence of the Civil Surgeon of Khulna which was to the effect that the appellant was not in a sound condition and that he was suffering from a great deficiency of memory and from general weakening of mental faculties and this witness further states that he put many questions to the appellant and he could not in all cases give rational answers; and he further states that he came to the conclusion at which he arrived because he found great deficiency of memory and general weakening of mental faculties and he states the various questions that he put to the appellant in the course of his examination. It appears that the appellant was under the observation of this gentleman for a considerable period and that he examined him some seven times in all. This witness further states that the appellant had no reasoning faculty and that his mind was not sound and that he was not able to manage his properties.

There was, further, the evidence of the appellant's wife Haridasi who states that the appellant had no power of understanding and could not say anything coherently and that he was like an inert mass and could not give any opinion after proper consideration.

There was also the evidence of a son of the appellant, Narendra and he states that his father's head was in a deranged condition since he had a stroke of paralysis and that he had no power to look after his health or his estate. He further states that the appellant did not like visitors, could not speak, would weep and call dead people.

The Pleader Promotha Nath Dutta in his evidence stated that the mental condition of the appellant was not good and that he could not recognise known men and that he had lost his memory and he speaks of seeing the appellant in a rude condition. Two other Doctors, on the other hand, gave evidence to the effect that the appellant was not of an unsound mind. One of them, Babu Satis Chandra Ghose, states that he thought the answers to the questions that he put to the appellant were sound and he says that he did not find any defect and that the appellant had a power to exercise judgment although his memory was impaired. The other Doctor is Phani Bhusan Roy who states that the appellant gave proper replies to the questions that he put to him and that the appellant also put intelligent questions to him. He further states that he noticed besides physical defect partial loss of memory probably due to paralysis combined with the old age of the appellant. This was the evidence which was before the District Judge when he arrived at the conclusion to which we have already referred and the question which we have got to decide in this appeal is whether the conclusion of the District Judge was well-founded. Under the present Lunacy Act what the Courts have got to decide is whether the person before them is of unsound mind and is incapable of managing himself and his affairs and under the provisions of s. 65 of the Act it is open to the Courts to find that a man is of unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs but that he is capable of managing himself and is not dangerous to himself or to others. But what is to be borne in mind is that in order to arrive at the conclusion at which the District Judge has arrived it is necessary to find that the person is both of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. This was pointed out by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mazahar-ud-din Khan v. Serajuddin Khan (1). That was a case under the Lunacy Act of 1858, Act XXV of 1858. But the words there in s. 2 are very much the same as in the present Act, namely, that the object of enquiry is to find whether the person was of an unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The only difference, therefore, is that under the Act of 1912 you have to ascertain whether the person is of an unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. We were referred to a Bombay case in the course of the argument In the matter of Cowasji Beramji Lilaovala (2). That was a case under the Act of 1858 and Mr. Justice Latham there came to the conclusion that the term "unsound mind" comprehended imbecility, whether congenital or arising from old age as well as lunacy or mental alienation resulting from disease. When the matter first came before this Court we read the evidence and the judgment of the learned District Judge and we came to the conclusion that it would be better that we should see the appellant ourselves. The appellant was accordingly, produced before us yesterday in the presence of the learned Advocate who appeared on his behalf and we put various questions to him in order that we could ascertain for ourselves as also upon the evidence whether the conclusion of the District Judge was correct and speaking for myself, after having seen the appellant I am not prepared to find that he is a person of an unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs within the meaning of these words as used in the Act of 1912. There is no doubt, we think, that the mental condition of the appellant has been affected by the stroke of paralysis from which he suffered and both owing to this and owing to his age his memory has, no doubt, been seriously affected and as has been pointed out to us he was unable to recognise either here or in the other Court his son-in-law and other relatives and apparently, the names of some his daughters escaped his memory. But he was able to answer questions with regard to his estate with a certain amount of intelligence and also questions with regard to his family and having regard to the evidence which was before the District Judge and which was read to us coupled with what we have gathered from the questions which were addressed to the appellant we think that the District Judge was not justified in the conclusion at which he arrived and the order which he made. We are not satisfied that the appellant is of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs and the result is that we discharge the order of the District Judge. The manager appointed will be discharged after passing his accounts and he will hand over the property to the appellant.

(1) 4 C. L. J. 115.

(2) 7 B. 15; 7 Ind. Jur. 200; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 11.

Let the record be sent down at once.

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1489 OF 1922.

The question at issue in this appeal is the construction of the Will of one Vythi Muthirian whereby he left his property to his senior wife and her daughter and to his junior wife, the first two being bequeathed a larger portion of the property than the latter. The question now is whether the senior wife and her daughter took the property as joint tenants or as tenants-in-common, the plea that they only took a life estate not being seriously pressed before me.

The District Judge has considered the language of the Will and the circumstances in which it was executed and has come to the conclusion that the bequest was to the wife and daughter as joint tenants. It is now contended for the appellants that this finding cannot be sustained as it is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (1). In that case, in which there was a Will of a somewhat similar nature, it was held that the legatees, mother and son, to whom a joint bequest was made took the property as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants. I may here point out that in the Will under consideration in that case there were words of inheritance used after the bequest and there were no special circumstances to guide the Court in arriving at the intention of the testator. A case of this Court reported as Vyadinada v. Nagammal (2) was overruled. In that case the bequest to a nephew and to his wife was held to constitute a joint tenancy. The Judicial Committee overruled that decision on the ground that this High Court was not justified in importing into the construction of a Hindu Will an extremely technical rule of English conveyancing and also on the ground that under the English Law a conveyance by one joint tenant operates as a severance. In addition there is a dictum of their Lordships upon which the appellants now rely and that is the "principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to the Hindu Law except in the case of a co-parcenary between members of an undivided family." If that were a strictly accurate statement of Hindu Law and treated as an invariable preposition of law, there would be a very strong presumption that a bequest to two persons who are not members of an undivided family would not constitute joint tenancy, and such a presumption could only be rebutted by special words creating such joint tenancy. It, however, appears that this statement treated as a broad statement of law is not strictly accurate. As is pointed out in a subsequent case Venkayamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (3) by their Lordships there are instances of Hindus taking property jointly who are not co-parceners of a joint Hindu family. It was there recognised that widows succeed jointly, as also daughters, and it has also been held that this is the case with daughter's sons. Joint tenancy is not, therefore, unknown to Hindu Law and consequently there is not the same difficulty in inferring that such an estate has been created as if such an estate were entirely unknown to Hindu Law. There is a case reported as Narpat Singh v. Mahomed Ali Hussain Khan (4) which is opposed to the decision in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (1) and is not expressly overruled by the latter and consequently I think it must be taken that the latter is to be read solely with reference to the facts of that particular case and not as laying down a principle that no joint tenancy can ever be created by a Hindu testator without specific words to that effect. If that is conceded, as I think it must be, then the question of the testator's intention has to be considered with reference to the fact of each case. Here the learned District Judge has considered the language of the document and the fact that provision was made for one wife and her daughter apart from the second wife, for whom provision was also made, and that provision was made for the joint payment of debts by the mother and daughter, and also other considerations specified in his judgment and has come to the conclusion that the testator did intend to create a joint estate in the mother and daughter, to which the survivor would succeed. This question of intention is one of fact and so long as the Judge makes no inferences which are not justified in law the finding of intention is one which cannot be interfered with in second appeal. Assuming that the testator could create a joint tenancy, the question of whether he did so by his Will and intended to do so is one of fact. I am not prepared to say that the District Judge's finding is wrong and accordingly the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The estate of co-widows or other co-heiresses in Hindu Law is a joint estate, but, unlike other joint estates, it cannot be divided so as to create separate estates, such that each sharer is the owner of her share and at her death, the reversioner's estate falls in. [p. 885, col. 1.]

Such partition as is permissible is merely for the convenience of enjoyment by the widows; and may be of two kinds (a) so as to last during the lifetime of both the widows, (b) so as to bind them until the death of all of them. In the latter case if one of the widows dies before the other without alienating the property, it passes to the heirs of her private property and not to the other co-widow or their reversioners. [p. 885, col. 1.]

Ridnamma v. Venkataramappa, 3 M. H. C. R. 268, dissented from.

There can be no survivorship if the partition is of the second kind. But if it is of the first kind, it cannot affect the right of survivorship of the other. [ibid.]

One of the co-widows can alienate her share which may be defined or undefined according as there is a partition or not. If the alienor dies before the co-widow, the alienation ceases to be operative if there is no partition or if the partition is of the first kind, the property goes to the co-widow by survivorship. But if the partition is of the second kind, the property continues to be enjoyed by the alienee until the other co-widow dies. [ibid.]

Except in the case of an alienation for the limited purposes mentioned above, i.e., during the lifetime of the alienee, in a partition of the first kind, or during the lifetime of all the co-widows, in a partition of the second kind, there can be no alienation by a widow of her interest and whether there is necessity or not, an alienation by one co-widow cannot bind the reversioners. [p. 885, cols. 1 & 2.]

If an alienation for necessity is to bind the reversioners, all the co-widows must join in it. [p. 885, col. 2.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

Where one of two co-widows alienates certain properties of her husband for discharging a simple money-decree-debt, payable by him, the other widow in a suit against the alienee for possession after the death of the alienating widow, is entitled to an unconditional decree and is not bound to pay the amount utilised for discharging the husband's debt. [p. 886, col. 1.]

It is well-settled that events that happen even after the filing of a suit, including those that add to the title of the plaintiff, may be taken notice of. [p. 886, col. 2.]

The discretion in allowing an amendment of a plaint ought not to be exercised when there is a change of jurisdiction, when there is a great delay in making the application or if a fresh enquiry on other facts is necessary, but when these features do not exist, the amendment ought, as a general rule, to be allowed so as to avoid multiplicity of proceedings. [p. 887, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 439 of 1921, (A. S. No. 378 of 1921), on the file of the District Court, Vizagapatam, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranjam, in O. S. No. 100 of 1916.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Jagannada Doss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by one of two Hindu widows for partition of her husband's property and possession of a share. The 1st defendant is the co-widow and she sold a part of the property under Ex. IV to the 2nd defendant who married the daughter of a deceased co-wife of plaintiff and 1st defendant, and another part to the 3rd defendant under Ex. VI. The 4th defendant is the undivided brother of the 3rd defendant. The 1st and 2nd defendants lived in the same house. The District Munsif decreed the suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge remanded the suit for fresh trial. On remand, the District Munsif again passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. In the interval, the 1st defendant died. There was again an appeal to the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff prayed for an amendment of the plaint and prayed for possession of the entire estate as the result of 1st defendant's death. The amendment was allowed. The Subordinate Judge granted a decree to the plaintiff for possession of the entire property.

The defendants Nos. 2 to 4 appeal.

The portion of the case relating to the alienations in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 has not been seriously pressed and the other portion relating to the 2nd defendant has been fully argued.

The Subordinate Judge found that out of the Rs. 600 for which Ex. IV was executed, Rs. 516 was utilized to discharge a decree obtained by D. W. No. 6 against the husband (Ex. V). If the sale was effected by both the widows, it would have been for purposes beneficial to the estate and, therefore, binding on the daughter and other reversioners. The appellant's Vakil contended, relying on Kalliyanasundaram Pillai v. Subba Moopanar (1) that the sale ought to be upheld against the plaintiff. In Sri Gajapati Radhamani v. Maharani Sripusapati Alakajeswari (2) and Vadali Mamidigadu v. Kctipalli Ramayya (3), it was held that one of two co-widows cannot alienate the share of the other even for purposes beneficial to the estate without the consent of the other. The decision in Kalliyanasundaram Pillai v. Subba Moopanar (1) decided by Benson and Bhashyam Iyengar, JJ., (the same Judges who decided Vadali Mamidigadu v. Kotipalli Ramayya (3) is apparently inconsistent with this but, on a careful examination of the judgment, it seems to me that the Judges were of opinion, on its facts, that the senior widow was recognised as a manager or agent of the other. Such an inference can be made only in case where there is no known hostility between the widows and is not possible when the widows are hostile to each other as in this case. We, therefore, agree with the Courts below in holding that Ex. IV is not binding on the plaintiff's half share.

The next point that has been argued in the case is that Ex. IV is at least binding on the 1st defendant's half share. The appellants rely on the unreported judgment of this Court in A. S. No. 166 of 1922. The position of two co-widows or two daughters has been the subject of consideration in several decisions of the various High Courts and the Privy Council. In Ridnamma v. Venkataramappa (4), Bittleson, C. J., and Ellis, J., observed: "Upon the death of the husband, the widows became jointly entitled; and that they might agree to divide the estate and hold separately distinct shares of it during their joint lives. We are not prepared to say they might not enter into such an agreement as would bind each to an absolute surrender of all interest in the other's share, so as to let in the next heirs of the husband immediately upon the death of that other.....One obtained a decree against the other for a division....It dealt only with the joint estate, and the joint estate ceased on the death of Krishnamma. Then the whole estate of the husband vested in the surviving widow; and neither Krishnamma's claim for division nor the decree for division could touch that." In another case, Jijoyi-amba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (5), Scotland, C. J., and Ellis, J., observe at page 452*: "Now the right as contended for on behalf of the appellants, namely, to the absolute partition of the joint estate, giving to each widow a share in severalty, we are of opinion is not maintainable. In support of it reliance was placed on the language of the foregoing texts.... The division there spoken of must be understood to refer only to the distributive enjoyment of the benefits of the joint property, and no doubt two or more widows might by an agreement inter se not prejudicial to the rights of the next heir in succession, provide for such enjoyment by an apportionment of the property. A partition converting the joint estate into an estate in severalty, whenever either of the widows choose to insist upon it, is quite incompatible with the right of survivorship to the whole property arising out of the joint estate for life and the surviving widow or widows being the nearest heir or heirs....On the other hand, it has been recently decided by this Court in the case of Randimma v. Venkataramappa (4), that a division obtained under a decree was ineffectual against the claims of the survivor of two widows to the divided moiety". They then consider the question whether the relief of separate possession of a portion of the inheritance may not be granted, when it appears to be the only proper and effectual mode of securing enjoyment of her distinct right to an equal share of the benefits of the estate. This case has been approved by the Privy Council in Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (6) and at page 300* their Lordships say "It was held here that there was no objection to a transaction which was merely an arrangement for separate possession and enjoyment, leaving the title to each share unaffected; although the widows nevertheless remained co-parceners with a right of survivorship with them, and there could be no alienation by one without the consent of the other....Their Lordships, guarding themselves against being supposed to affirm by this order that either widow has power to dispose of the one-fourth of the estate allotted to her, or that they have any right to a partition in the proper sense of the term, are not disposed to vary". In Kathaperumal v. Venkabai (7), it was observed: "But by Hindu Law two widows of one and the same husband take a joint interest in one undivided estate, and it has been held that, although the widows may arrange for the enjoyment of the estate in separate portions, there can be no compulsory partition converting the joint estate into an estate in severalty". In Ariyaputri v. Alamelu (8), we have "it is true that when there are more widows than one, they take together as a class. It is also true that partition is permitted between them not as in the case of male co-parceners for the purpose of converting a joint estate into two or more separate estates to be held in severalty, but for the limited purpose of securing to each widow a distributive enjoyment of the benefit of joint property. In this view partition between them certainly creates no separate property in the portions placed in their separate possession and no disposing power so as to defeat the right of survivorship vesting in the co-widow, but as between them, each widow is entitled to take the income of the portion placed in her possession during her life." In Srigajapati Radhamani v. Maharani Sripusapati Alakajeswari (2), which arose out of the facts of Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (6), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed at page 10* "It may be assumed for the present judgment, without deciding the point, that there was a sufficient necessity for borrowing money to pay the Government revenue, or even for the payment of Nilamani's debt, but that necessity did not render a mortgage by one widow binding upon the joint estate which had descended from their deceased husband, so as to affect the interest of the surviving widow." One may add "or that of the reversioners" though this was not necessary for the case [see Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (5) already quoted]. It is well to remember that, in that case, part of the money borrowed by the alienating widow was applied for paying Government revenue, and still no decree even for this amount was given. The case in Kailash Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty (9) is a case of daughters, but, as was observed in Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naickan (10) to be next referred to, the case is analogous to that of widows. Nor does the fact that the Calcutta case was under the Dayabhaga Law make any difference as observed in Ammani Ammal v. Periasami Udayan (11) by Oldfield, J., at page 4†. It was there observed "that being so, the estate that devolved on the daughters of Radhakrishna would not determine until after the death of Gaganeswari and, until that event happens, the arrangement come to between the daughters, which was assented to by all the daughters, should, in our opinion, remain in operation. This would not in any way interfere with the rights of the reversionary heirs for the simple reason that those rights do not come into existence until after the death of Gaganeswari.....As we have already indicated its effect was to make the properties allotted to each daughter remain her property capable of being alienated by her, and if not alienated, capable of passing on her death, to the heirs of her separate property as distinguished from the property inherited by her from her father." In Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naickan (10), it was held that one of two widows can alienate any estate which came to her as such for her life and can, therefore, enter into such a deed as will preclude her from recovering during her life property which she has alienated, to the full extent of such alienation provided it does not extend beyond her life-interest. In Kanni Ammal v. Ammaknnu Ammal (12), it was held that, while one of two daughters cannot by any alienation alter the character of the daughter's estate so far as concerns the right of survivorship or the rights of reversioners, she may alienate her interest in the property. The parties in that case were ably represented as two of the Vakils for the appellant and two Vakils for the respondent have since become Judges of this Court and a full report of the argument is available and is instructive. It shows that there may be two kinds of partition between two widows or other co-heiresses (1) so as to last during their joint lives only and if one dies the other gets it by survivorship and (2) so as to last until the death of all. If one dies first, the other does not get her share by survivorship and the share will continue to be enjoyed by the alienee, if alienated or will go on to the heirs of her stridhanam property, if unalienated. In either case the partition is an arrangement for their own convenience and cannot affect reversioners.

In Muthiyalu Chengappa v. Burada Gunta (13) and Ammani Ammal v. Periasami Udayar (11) (in which one of us Venkata-subba Rao, J., took a part) the remark in Ridnamma v. Venkataramappa (4) quoted by me that the arrangement may be such that, after partition by the co-widows, the death of one may let in the reversioner's right, was disapproved, i. e., the reversioner's interest does not begin until all the widows die (unless there is a surrender by all).

The decisions establish that (1) The estate of co-widows or other co-heiresses in Hindu Law is a joint estate but it is unlike other joint estates. It is indivisible [see Kathaperumal v. Venkabalai (7).] Strictly it can never be divided so as to create separate estates such that each sharer is the owner of her share and at her death, the reversioner's estate falls in. Such a division is impossible in law.

(2) Such partition as is permissible is merely for the convenience of their enjoyment by the sharers; and may be of two kinds.

(1) So as to last during the lifetime of both the widows.

(2) So as to bind them until the death of all of them. In the latter case if one of the widows dies before the other without alienating property, it passes to the heirs of her private property and not to the other co-widow or their reversioners, the dictum to the contrary in Ridnamma v. Venkataramappa (4) not being good law [Ammani Ammal v. Periasami Udayan (11) and Muthiyalu Chengappa v. Burada Gunta (13)].

(3) By the very nature of the arrangement there can be no survivorship if the partition is of the second kind. But if it is of the first kind it cannot affect the right of survivorship of the other.

(4) One of the co-widows can alienate her share which may be defined or undefined according as there is a partition or not. If the alienor dies before the co-widow, the alienation ceases to be operative if there is no partition or if the partition is of the first kind the property goes to the co-widow by survivorship. But if the partition is of the second kind, the property continues to be enjoyed by the alienee [Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (10), Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (12) and Ammani Ammal v. Periasami Udayan (11)] until the other co-widow dies. The obiter dictum to the contrary in Durga Dutt v. Gita (14) has been followed here.

(5) Except for the limited purposes mentioned above, i. e., during the lifetime of the alienee in a partition of the first kind or during the lifetime of all the co-widows in a partition of the second kind there can be no alienation by a widow of her interest: [Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (4) 19 Ind. Cas. 498; 23 A. 443; 8 A. L. J. 220.

(6), Sri Gajapati Radhamani v. Maharani Sripusapati Alakajeswari (2) and whether there is necessity or not, an alienation by one co-widow cannot bind the reversioner Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Rayi Saiba (5), Kailash Chandra Chuckerubty v. Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty (9), Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (10), Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (12) and Durga Dutt v. Gita (14)].

(6) If an alienation for necessity is to bind the reversioners, all the co-widows must join in it.

It follows that I cannot agree with the decision in A. S. No. 166 of 1922. In that case the last male owner left a widow Gangalakshmi and two daughters Rattamma and Narasamma. Rattamma effected an alienation of the property along with her sons. The suit was brought by four plaintiffs, plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 being parties to the alienation, but the fourth plaintiff was not a party to it. Their Lordships found that there was necessity and held that the alienation was binding on the reversioners. So far as plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 were concerned, the decision might well have rested on the ground that they were parties to the alienation and could not question it: Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini Rawanji Maharaj (15) and Basappa v. Fakirappa (16). But as to the fourth plaintiff, we are constrained to differ from the judgment and to dissent from its reasoning. The decisions in Sri Gajapati Radhamani v. Maharani Sri Pusapati Alakajeswari (2), Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (10) and Durga Dutt v. Gita (14) were referred to and then it was observed "the facts in this case are different from those in the cases quoted. Gangalakshmi gave away or surrendered her life-interest in some property in favour of Rattamma and it is stated that by another deed she surrendered her right to some other property in favour of Narasamma. After that, both Narasamma and Rattamma began to deal with their properties as their own". We are not able to see how the surrender of the mother in favour of her daughters and the conduct of the daughters can have any effect on the rights of the reversioners. It was conceded in the judgment that the alienation cannot affect the rights of Narasamma by survivorship but it was observed that this has nothing to do with the reversioners who do not claim through Narasamma. Here again, I am compelled to dissent with all deference. When the surviving co-widow gets the property by survivorship after the death of the alienating widow, she represents the estate and the reversioner though he cannot be said to claim through her so as to be bound by her acts still claims through her in respect of matters where she represents the estate. But, apart from this, the cases cited by me also show that a single widow has no power of alienation except for her own convenience (i. e.) so as to affect the other widows (except in the partition of the second kind) or the reversioners. It seems to me that the learned Judges who decided A. S. No. 166 of 1922 did not give due weight, while referring to Ramakal v. Ramasami Naickan (10) to the qualification referred to at page 24, i. e., the words "provided it does not extend beyond her life-interest" nor to the words "which will prejudice the right of survivorship of her co-widow or the rights of the reversioners after the death of the survivor of the widows", in Durga Dutt v. Gita (14) which was actually quoted by them. The cases in Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (6), Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (5), Kailash Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty (9) and Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (12) were not cited at all. All the authorities show that, strictly, there is no separate estate of any kind in any one of the widows, a right of partition for the convenient enjoyment being all that is permitted. This contention of the appellants must, therefore, be disallowed.

The third point argued by the appellants is that he is entitled to the amount of Rs. 516 which was utilised for discharging the husband's decree-debt. Apart from the difficulty that the documents (Exs. IV-A and V) show that the debt was discharged by the 1st defendant and not by the 2nd defendant and assuming it is open to us to construe them as is the payment to the creditor was made by the 2nd defendant, we do not think he is entitled to any relief. The decree was not a mortgage-decree. If the debt discharged was a charged debt, the plaintiff may be entitled to the relief he claims by subrogation. But when there is no charge and seeing that any right by contribution against the plaintiff's half share can be operative during the lifetime of the 1st defendant and not after the death of 1st defendant so as to affect plaintiff's right by survivorship, there can be no subrogation (vide Sheldon on Subrogation, p. 4, s. 3). Section 69 of the Contract Act cannot help the 2nd defendant, for he was not interested in the payment but his vendor, nor can s. 70 as he did not make the payment for or on behalf of the plaintiff. This contention must also be negatived. The plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits in respect of 1st defendant's half share only from the death of the 1st defendant. The decree requires no modification as no mesne profits have been awarded the additional half share.

The fourth point argued by the appellant is that the amendment of the plaint so as to enable the plaintiff to claim the whole of the property including the 1st defendant's share ought not to be allowed. He relies on Lakshmi Ammal v. Alamelu Ammal (17). If the decision is regarded merely as one on the question of discretion of the particular facts of the case and the stage at which the amendment was asked, we have nothing to say against it but if it meant to lay down that a cause of action that arose after the filing of the suit ought never to be taken notice of, we are constrained to dissent from it. That events that happened—even after the filing of the suit including those that add to the title of the plaintiff—may be taken notice of has been established by several cases [vide Ram Ratan Sahu v. Mohant Sahu (18), Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal (19) and Sethrucherla Rama Chandra v. Maharajah of Jeypore (20), reversed by Privy Council on another point, Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (21), Doraisami Pillai v. Chinnia Goundan (22) and Pendekkallu Thimmayya v. Pendekkallu Siddappa (23)]. Specially in partition suits it will be very inconvenient if the general principle of confining the suit to the cause of action in the plaint is rigidly adhered to as can be seen from a simple case where A filed a suit against his two brothers for partition and seeks to recover a third share, and during the pendency one of the brothers dies, to say that the plaintiff cannot be awarded half instead of a third and that the decree should be limited to a one-third, he being compelled to file another suit for one-sixth is to be technical with a vengeance [vide Jenkins, C. J.'s judgment in Rustomji v. Sheth Purshotamdas (24)]. No doubt the discretion ought not to be exercised when there is a change of jurisdiction, when there is a great delay in making the application and may not be exercised if a fresh enquiry on other facts is necessary. But when these features do not exist, in our opinion, the amendment ought, as a general rule, to be allowed to avoid multiplicity of proceedings. In all such cases, the only question of consequences is one of Court-fees a matter with which the parties are not concerned and the opposite party is not deprived of any defence which is obviously open to him [see also Pendekkallu Thimmayya v. Pendekkallu Siddappa (23)]. This contention must be disallowed. The appeal fails on the merits. The defendants Nos. 2 to 4 say that they are not in possession of properties other than those alienated to them and in respect of which a full decree is not passed against them.

In the lower Court, the decree in respect of all the properties was passed against all the defendants including defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The plaintiff is entitled to be put in possession of all the properties but the decree, in respect of the properties other than those alienated to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 should not have been passed against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. For this reason, the parties will bear their own costs in second appeal.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 356 OF 1924.
July 23, 1925.

Seth BENI CHAND—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Syed EKRAM AHMAD—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 26—

Agreement that female holding estate shall not effect transfer without consent of male claimants—Death of some male claimants—Transfer with consent of surviving claimant, validity of—“Substantial compliance” with condition, what amounts to.

An agreement, arrived at between a female claimant to an estate on the one hand and three male claimants on the other, provided that the female should remain in possession of the estate during her lifetime and should pay the debts due from the estate out of the income of the property, appropriating the balance of the income to her own use but that she would not transfer any portion of the property without the consent of the male claimants, and that on her death the latter would get the property. It was further provided that should any of the male claimants die before the death of the female, his share would descend to his heirs. After the death of two of the male claimants, who had died leaving heirs, the female executed a mortgage in respect of property comprised in the estate with the consent of the surviving male claimant. The mortgage was also consented to by the majority of the heirs of the deceased claimants, but one of them who had not consented to the mortgage brought a suit to recover possession of his share of the estate on the allegation that he was not bound by the mortgage:

Held, (1) that on a proper construction of the agreement arrived at between the claimants the consent of the heirs of a male claimant who should happen to die during the lifetime of the female was not necessary to validate a transfer by the female; [p. 889, col. 1; p. 891, col. 1.]

(2) (Per Mukerji J., Boys, J. dissenting).—that the consent of the surviving male claimant did not amount to a “substantial compliance” with the condition laid down in the agreement and that the mortgage could not, therefore, be held to be binding on the plaintiff; [p. 889, col. 1.]

Per Mukerji, J.—Broadly speaking till the majority or at least one-half of the persons whose consent is necessary to a transaction give such consent, it cannot be said that there has been a “substantial compliance” with the condition within the meaning of s. 26 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 889, col. 2.]

Per Boys, J.—The test to be applied to cases such as the one under consideration is whether it is possible to form upon all the known circumstances of the case as existing at the time the condition was made, a reasonable opinion as to whether the deceased persons would have been likely to agree that the consent of a survivor should be accepted as sufficient if they had foreseen the circumstances in which the sufficiency of his consent might be in question. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 15th December 1923.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal raises two points, viz., whether the mortgage dated the 14th of April 1917 is binding on the plaintiff-respondent Ekram Ahmad and (2) if not, whether the amount of share decreed to him is too large and if so, what is the proper share which should have been decreed to him.

The facts are briefly these. The pedigree of the family to which the respondent belongs is given in the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. One Karamat Ali owned a 16-annas share in the property in suit. That property descended to his son Hashmat Ali, as Hashmat Ali's mother who was the other heir did not claim any interest. Hashmat Ali died two years after his father and then a question arose as to who should have the property. Hashmat Ali was survived by his cousin Mahmud Ali being a son of Lutf Ali, a brother of Karamat Ali and also by Yakub Ali and Qadir Ali, sons of Ilahi Bakhsh, another brother of Karamat Ali. On the 2nd of February 1907 an agreement was arrived at between Mahmud Ali, Yaqub Ali and Qadir Ali on the one side and Musammât Imtiaz Bibi, the mother of Hashmat Ali, on the other. It was agreed that Musammât Imtiaz Bibi should remain in possession of her son's property, that she should pay the debts due from the estate out of the income of the property and should spend the rest of the income as best as she liked, that she would not transfer any portion of the property without the consent of the other party to the document and that on her death the three persons constituting the other party would get the property. It was further provided that should any of the party of the three male persons die before the death of Musammât Imtiaz Bibi, his share would descend to his heirs.

On the 14th of April 1917, Musammât Imtiaz executed an usufructuary mortgage for the sum of Rs. 3,000 in favour of the appellant Beni Chand. Ekram Ahmad, the respondent, is one of the sons of Yaqub Ali. He said that he did not consent to any transfer by Musammât Imtiaz and that the transfer was not binding on him. Musammât Imtiaz is dead and hence he claimed to recover a third share in the property on the ground that he was the sole heir of Yaqub Ali. Yaqub Ali had several children besides Ekram Ahmad, viz., Khadim Ahmad, Ghulam Ahmad, Musammât Kulsuman and Musammât Mahmuda. It was part of Ekram Ahmad's case that Khadim Ahmad was an illegitimate child and, therefore, did not inherit and that the rest of the children of Yaqub Ali had relinquished their interest in the property in favour of Ekram Ahmad.

The defence was that the mortgage of the 14th of April 1917 was executed to pay off a decree which was obtained by one Jagannath on foot of a mortgage executed in his favour on the 6th of September 1915 by Musammât Imtiaz with the consent of Mahmud Ali, son of Lutf Ali, and also with the consent of the plaintiff, his brothers and of the sons of Qadir Ali.

It was found that the plaintiff did not give his consent and that the mortgage of the 14th of April 1917 was not binding on him. The plaintiff sold 4 annas 3 pies out of his share, pending the suit, in favour of certain persons who were made defendants in the suit. The plaintiff's share was found to be 5 annas 4 pies and deducting 4 annas 3 pies out of the same a decree was made in his favour for 1 anna 1 pie share.

There was a connected suit which had been brought by Khadim Ahmad, already mentioned, a supposed brother of Ekram Ahmad, against the latter. In that suit the question was what was the share of Khadim Ahmad, if he was a legitimate child of Yaqub Ali. That litigation came up before us as Second Appeal No. 556 of 1924 and by our judgment of this date we held that Khadim Ahmad was entitled to get an 8 pies share in the property of his father, from Ekram Ahmad. Although the judgment in that second appeal may be no evidence in this particular case, it is conceded that the same evidence as was relied upon in that case might be read as evidence in this case. If that be so, the result would follow that Ekram Ahmad's original share would be reduced by 8 pies. The result would be that in case of his entire success, Ekram Ahmad would get a decree for a 5 pie share only, the share of 1 anna 1 pie decreed to him, having been reduced by the amount of 8 pies. This disposes of the second point.

Now we come to the first point concerning the validity of the mortgage. It is a fact that the mortgage of the 14th of April 1917 was executed to pay off a decree for Rs. 3,000 and odd obtained by one Jagannath on foot of his mortgage dated the 6th of September 1915. The mortgagee Beni Chand who is the appellant before us paid a sum of Rs. 3,059 and odd to satisfy that decree, although the mortgage in his favour is for Rs. 3,000 only. The mortgage in favour of Beni Chand is not attested by Mahmud Ali, but he identified the executant Musammât Imtiaz before the Sub-Registrar, at the time of registration of the deed. It is contended from this fact that Mahmud Ali was a consenting party to the transfer in favour of Beni Chand. Further, it is pointed out that the mortgage in favour of Jagannath had been attested by Mahmud Ali and by most of the male descendants of Yaqub Ali and Qadir Ali. On foot of these facts it is argued that the transfer in favour of Beni Chand is a valid one.

We shall take up the mortgage in favour of Jagannath first. If that mortgage be valid and within the competence of Imtiaz Bibi, we shall see whether the validity of that mortgage gives any validity to the mortgage in favour of Beni Chand. The argument on behalf of the respondent is this. By the agreement dated the 2nd of February 1907, consent for a valid transfer was to be obtained from all the three male executants of the deed. It being the fact that Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali died before the 6th of September 1915, the respondent contends, it was necessary to obtain the consent of the heirs of Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali. We have already stated that two of the sons of Yaqub Ali and Qadir Ali did not give their consent. It is, therefore, urged that the mortgage in favour of Jagannath did not comply with the condition laid down in the deed of agreement of the 2nd of February 1907 and, therefore, it is not binding on the respondent Ekram Ahmad.

On the other hand, the contention on behalf of the appellant is this. The agreement of the 2nd of February 1907 did not provide for any consent being given by the heirs of any of the deceased executants. It provided for consent being given by the male executants alone. Two of these executants were dead and only one was alive, viz., Mahmud Ali. As Mahmud Ali gave his consent, that was sufficient and it amounted to a "substantial compliance" with the condition within the meaning of s. 26 of the Transfer of Property Act. To this it has been replied on behalf of the respondent that where out of three persons, whose consent alone would validate a transfer, only one person's consent is taken it cannot be said that there was a "substantial compliance" with the condition. In my opinion the contention for the respondent is sound. There has been no "substantial compliance" with the condition laid down in the agreement. There can be no doubt that if all the three male executants had died, Musammatt Imtiaz could not transfer the property at all so as to bind their heirs. The mere fact that only one of the three male executants was alive would not justify the lady Imtiaz to make a valid transfer with his consent alone, unless we can say that such a transfer was a "substantial compliance" with the terms of the agreement. There must be some value to be attached to the word "substantial." If, say out of eight persons, whose consent is necessary, six be dead and only two be alive and if the consent of those two alone be taken, can it be said that there has been a "substantial compliance" with the condition? There is another word in English language which is "partial." I do not see that the words "partial" and "substantial" can have the same meaning. If it be the case, therefore, that on the death of all the three male executants the lady would be deprived entirely of her power of transfer, the mere fact that only one of the three persons was alive and consented would not, in my opinion, improve matters. Broadly speaking, till the majority or at least one-half of the people, whose consent is necessary, give it, it cannot be said that there has been a 'substantial' compliance with the condition. The compliance would be partial only. Some support to this view may be afforded by the fact that in the illustrations to s. 26 of the Transfer of Property Act (and the allied rule of law) and s. 115 of the Succession Act, the consent which has been regarded as 'substantial' was all given by the majority of the people whose consent was necessary.

In this view of the law, it is not necessary for me to express any opinion as to whether the consent of all the heirs of the deceased executants Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali would have improved matters. Even if such consent could improve matters it is clear that two of the sons of Yaqub Ali and Qadir Ali have not consented, although they are alive, and it must follow that there has been no compliance with the terms of the agreement.

The same remarks would apply to the transfer in favour of Beni Chand himself, even if we were in a position to say that because of the validity of the transfer in favour of Jagannath, the transfer made to pay off Jagannath's debt was valid. As already stated, the transfer in favour of the appellant was consented to by only one of the three male executants to the agreement.

I hold that the mortgage in favour of the appellant is not binding on the respondent Ekram Ahmad.

The result would be that I would allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by reducing the decree in favour of the respondent to the extent of 8 pies, thus reducing the decree in his favour to 5 pies share only.

Boys, J.—The facts have been fully set out in the judgment of my brother. Beni Chand had obtained on the 14th of April 1917 a usufructuary mortgage from Musammât Imtiazan. Musammât Imtiazan's right to mortgage the property depended on whether the transfer was made in compliance with the conditions of an agreement entered into on the 2nd of February 1907 between her and three nephews of her husband, Karamat Ali. These three nephews were Mahmud Ali, Qadir Ali, and Yaqub Ali. Briefly that agreement provided

(1) That Musammât Imtiazan should remain in possession of the entire property of her deceased husband Karamat Ali;

(2) that she was to pay debts out of the income as far as possible;

(3) that she was not to transfer the property without the consent of the three nephews;

(4) that on her death the remaining three nephews would take one-third each of the property; and

(5) if either of the three sons predeceased the lady, the heirs of that son would take his one-third.

The deed was silent on the questions whether in the event of a nephew predeceasing the aunt the consent of his heirs to a transfer was necessary or whether the consent of the surviving nephews was sufficient. These are the questions we have to decide.

The usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant Beni Chand was executed in part to discharge a decree which had been obtained by one Jagannath on a usufructuary mortgage dated the 6th of September 1915 executed by Musammât Imtiazan. Prior to the execution of these mortgages two of the nephews Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali had died. The mortgage in favour of Jagannath was attested by the surviving nephew Mahmud Ali, by three out of the four sons of Qadir Ali (the fourth son Abdul Khaliq did not sign and he is respondent to the connected Second Appeal No. 387 of 1924), and also by two out of the three sons of Yaqub Ali, that is, by Khadim Ahmad and Ghulam Ahmad, but it was not signed by Ekram Ahmad, the plaintiff-respondent in the present appeal.

The mortgage in favour of Beni Chand was not signed either by Mahmud Ali or by any of the sons of Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali, but Mahmud Ali identified Musammât Imtiazan, the executant.

Beni Chand having got possession, Ekram Ahmad, the son of Yaqub Ali, sued Beni Chand claiming the 5 annas 4 pies share, the whole share of Yaqub Ali, on the allegations that his brothers and sisters had transferred their interests to him and that the two mortgages were not binding on him as the consent required by the agreement made by Imtiazan had not been obtained.

The plaintiff's contention as regards the question of consent was two-fold. He contended

(1) That in the event of his father Yaqub Ali predeceasing Musammât Imtiazan as he, in fact, did, and the property having descended to the heirs of Yaqub Ali, the consent of Yaqub Ali's heirs was necessary before Musammât Imtiazan could execute a transfer affecting their interests and that the consent of the plaintiff Ekram Ahmad not having been obtained, at any rate, his share and any share he might have acquired was not bound.

(2) The plaintiff contended that even if the heirs of a deceased nephew had no right to demand that their consent should be obtained, at least, it was necessary that the consent of the three nephews should have been obtained, and that, as owing to the death of two out of the three nephews their consent had not been possible even if they would have given it, if alive, there was no consent within the meaning of the agreement executed by Musammât Imtiazan.

As to the first contention it was urged that it was only reasonable and in accordance with the spirit of the agreement that if the consent of the father was necessary for the protection of the property while he was alive, it should similarly be required in the case of the sons who had inherited that property; in other words that it was only reasonable to construe the agreement as giving the sons the same protection as had been stipulated for in the case of the father. This argument was supported by pointing to the fact that the agreement of 1907 had apparently been so understood by the majority of the persons alive at the time of the execution of the mortgage in favour of Jagannath. If it had not been so understood there would not have been found on that mortgage-deed the signatures of so many of the descendants of the two deceased nephews. There is to my mind considerable force in this argument.

I may note here that it found favour with both the lower Courts which decreed the plaintiff's claim and the similar claim in Second Appeal No. 387 of 1924 on the ground that the signatures of Ekram Ahmad and Abdul Khaliq had not been obtained without entering into the question whether by the signatures of most of the heirs there had been substantial compliance with the condition. But I am satisfied that the correct view is that to which expression is given in the judgment of my brother. The three nephews had complete power to dispose of their property. They thought it desirable to protect their own personal interests by stipulating for their consent being obtained. They thought it desirable to provide that their property should descend to their children. If they did not think it necessary to stipulate that the consent of those children should be obtained before any transfer was made, it is a reasonable conclusion that they were not sufficiently interested in this aspect of the case to make such a stipulation. They may well have considered that the consent of the surviving brother or brothers which in their own interests would not be recklessly given was a sufficient safeguard of the interests of their own children. In any case they did not make it any stipulation requiring the consent of their heirs and as they had power to deal with the property as they chose. I agree with my brother that we cannot read into that document a stipulation which the father did not in fact enter in it. On this point, therefore, I concur in holding against the plaintiff.

As to his second contention that the document stipulated for the consent of the three nephews being obtained and that in fact the consent of two of them Qadir Ali and Yaqub Ali was not obtained and that, therefore, the transfers were void, one thing is clear. It is admitted that the consent of the two other nephews was not obtained because they were dead and it has not been seriously contended that there was anything in the transfers executed by Musammamat Imtiazan which was improper or which would have led to the refusal of consent by the two nephews or either of them if they or he had been alive. This point is, I think, of importance in considering the main question which we have to deal with here. That main question is whether or no there was substantial compliance with the conditions in the agreement, it being suggested that the case is analogous to that provided for in s. 26 of the Transfer of Property Act.

On what principle is it to be determined whether there was substantial compliance? Illustration (a) to s. 26 says that where the consent of C, D and E is required and E has died, the consent of C and D is to be deemed sufficient. The illustrations to s. 115 of the Succession Act are very similar. These are merely illustrations and I do not think there is any suggestion underlying them that if both D and E had died the consent of C alone would necessarily be insufficient. In other words I do not think that the test of substantial compliance can be the mere existence one way or the other of a numerical majority. It is only necessary to give one illustration of this. Where the consent of C, D and E is necessary and D and E have died and C has in fact succeeded to their property, could it be suggested that the consent of C was not a substantial compliance with the conditions which had only been inserted for the protection of the property of all the three? As regards the property of D and E C would only be an heir, and it follows from our finding on the first question in which I concur with my brother that C's consent or absence of his consent in his capacity as heir of D and E is immaterial. If, then in the case that I have stated it would be unreasonable to hold that the consent of C alone did not constitute substantial compliance, the mere existence of a numerical majority one way or the other fails to furnish a satisfactory test, at any rate, it is not a principle applicable in all cases.

Is there, then, any other principle generally applicable to test whether there has been substantial compliance? I think there is. It must, I think, be conceded that the best judges of whether the compliance was substantial would be the deceased persons, if in any way their view could be ascertained. To ascertain that view directly is obviously impossible. But it is possible to form, upon all the known circumstances of the case as existing at the time the condition was made, a reasonable opinion as to whether the deceased persons would have been likely to agree that the consent of a survivor should be accepted as sufficient if they had foreseen the circumstances in which the sufficiency of his consent might be in question.

The test is sufficiently simple in practice. What answer must we give to the question in this case? Would Yaqub Ali have been quite content to answer in the affirmative if he had been asked at the time that he was making the condition. "In the event of your predeceasing your aunt, are you content that the consent of your surviving brother or brothers should be sufficient to enable her to deal with the property which at her death would otherwise descend to your children?" I think we have clear evidence that Yaqub Ali would have answered in the affirmative. That Yaqub Ali would have so answered is, I think, a reasonable conclusion from the circumstances existing at the time the condition was made and to one of which I have referred in dealing with the first question. Yaqub Ali contemplated the possibility of his death prior to the widow as is evidenced by the provision for the children inheriting, yet he did not think it necessary to provide for any special consent being required in place of his own when it could no longer be given. Is it not reasonable, then, to assume that he was content in the knowledge that the consent of his surviving brothers or brother would still be necessary?

The arrangement made by the deed was a perfectly natural and proper arrangement by which the old lady was provided for during her life subject to very reasonable conditions. It has not been contended that there was anything in the transfer made by the lady which would have led to the refusal of his consent by the plaintiff's father if he had been alive. It has not been contended before us that there is any evidence that Yaqub Ali had any reason whatever to distrust either of his brothers and that he would not, therefore, have been likely to consider their consent sufficient in the event of his own earlier death. He may well have considered the consent of his surviving brother or brothers a sufficient safeguard.

It was pressed upon us that if we were to hold that the absence of consent of the two deceased nephews did not invalidate a transfer made by the aunt a logical conclusion would be that the absence of consent of the third nephew also if he had been dead would not invalidate a transfer and that such a result would give the lady unfettered power to transfer. But that is not so. To hold that Yaqub Ali would, as evidenced by the circumstances, have been content with the security afforded by the necessity for the consent of even one surviving brother does not compel or even logically suggest the conclusion that he would have been satisfied that no consent at all should be requisite. I hold, therefore, that it is a reasonable and proper conclusion from the circumstances that Yaqub Ali would have considered the requirement by his surviving brothers or brother sufficient and I hold that there was substantial compliance with the condition requiring consent.

I may add that I am satisfied further that this conclusion is also in accordance with the equities of the case, though, of course, they cannot affect the purely legal question. There is no suggestion that either Jagannath or Beni Chand took advantage of the widow or of those who were interested in the property after her death, nor is there any evidence of collusion to defeat the interests of plaintiff. There is no suggestion of any unfair dealing, and that there was no such unfair dealing is further evidenced by the fact that no less than six out of the eight male members interested in this property were signatories of the transaction in favour of Jagannath and the surviving nephew was also a witness identifying the executant in the case of the later mortgage by which the decree on the first was paid off. The plaintiff makes no pretence of explaining how Ekram Ahmad would account for his alleged ignorance of transactions which were spread over several years. If, like his cousin, Abdul Khaliq, he was away on military service, that is only one more indication of the good faith attending the transactions, for it would explain why the parties to the mortgage were unable to obtain his signature when obtaining the signatures of all the other male heirs. Lastly it is noticeable that it was after the mortgages in question that the plaintiff secured a transfer to himself of the shares of his sisters and a second brother and alleged a third brother to be illegitimate (found by the lower Courts to be legitimate), and this would suggest that he was making the most of a chance to upset a bona fide transaction by taking advantage of the absence of his signature.

For these reasons I would hold that the consent of the heirs was not necessary; and that the consent of the surviving nephew, Mahmud Ali, was a substantial compliance with the condition in the agreement. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

As my brother would allow the appeal to the extent of 8 pies only and I would allow it to the full extent of dismissing the plaintiff's suit in its entirety, there is concurrence between us that the appeal should be allowed as to the 8 pies. As regards the remaining 5 pies, there is a difference of opinion between us and as my brother would to the extent of this 5 pies maintain the decree of the lower Courts though on different grounds from those on which the lower Courts proceeded, my judgment in so far as it would allow the appeal as to the 5 pies also will form no part of the order of the Court.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed to this extent that the decree of the Court below be modified by reducing the decree in favour of the respondent to the extent of 8 pies and maintaining the decree in his favour as to the remaining 5 pies. The parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to their respective failure and success.

ASHRAF ALI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

versus

ARMAN KHAN—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 48, 178—
Lease granted by raiyat—Rent payable at a rate not recoverable under Act—Covenant for renewal—Failure of lessee to pay stipulated rent—Renewal, whether can be claimed—Ejectment after expiry of lease—Notice, whether necessary.*

A lease granted by a raiya for a period of nine years stipulated for a rent which was more than the rent which the lessor was entitled to exact from the lessee under the provisions of s. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant agreed that if he did not pay the rent at the stipulated rate he was liable to be ejected without notice and the lease also contained a covenant for renewal if the lessee observed all the provisions of the lease. The lessee failed to pay rent at the rate stipulated in the lease and paid rent only at the rate at which he was liable to pay it under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. After the expiry of the period of the lease the lessor sued to eject the lessee from the land. The defendant objected that he was entitled to continue in possession of the land under the covenant for renewal contained in the lease :

Held, Per Greaves, J.—that the tenant having observed all the provisions of the lease which he was by law bound to observe, the mere fact that he had declined to pay rent at a rate at which he was not bound to pay by virtue of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not disentitle him from obtaining a renewal of the lease ; [p. 894, col. 1.]

Per Cuming, J.—(1) that there was nothing illegal in the stipulation to pay rent at a rate higher than that recoverable under the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the contract providing for the payment of such rent was not void; the mere fact that it was not enforceable in law did not prevent it from being a condition of the contract of renewal, the failure to comply with which justified the lessor in not carrying out his part of the contract ; [p. 894, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 2nd of May 1923, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 978 of 1921.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Subodh Chandra Roy Choudhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This appeal turns on a provision for renewal contained in a lease. The lease provides for a demise for a period of nine years at a rent which is more than the rent which the landlord the raiya, is entitled to exact from the under-raiya under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lease ends with this stipulation that the landlord will execute a fresh kabuliyat on the expiry of the period and the question that now arises is whether the tenant is entitled to a renewal by virtue of that provision. The two lower Courts decided that he was entitled to a renewal and Mr. Justice

Newbould has agreed with their conclusion and this Letters Patent Appeal is against the decision of Mr. Justice Newbould. Now what is stated is this that it was a term of the renewal that the tenant should observe all the provisions of the lease and that inasmuch as he has declined to pay rent at the higher rate reserved in the lease and thus has broken one of the covenants he is not entitled to a renewal at the expiration of the period. The Bengal Tenancy Act does not make a provision for a higher rate of rent than what the Act allows illegal but it provides that the higher rent cannot be enforced against a tenant. It seems to me that the tenant has observed all the provisions of the lease that he is by law bound to observe and the mere fact that he has declined to pay rent at a rate which he is not bound to pay by virtue of the provisions of the Tenancy Act does not, in my opinion, disentitle him from obtaining the renewal which he now claims. The Tenancy Act was enacted amongst other things for the protection of the tenant and I think that it would be a dangerous principle if the landlord by indirect means of this nature were in a position to exact or try to exact a higher rate of rent from the tenant than the law allows and I can well imagine that it would be a great inducement to a tenant to pay a higher rate of rent than he is bound to pay under the law if he is sure that by so doing at the end of his term he will secure a renewal of his tenancy for another period and that he cannot otherwise obtain a renewal.

I think that for the reasons I have indicated the decision of Mr. Justice Newbould is correct and that this Letters Patent Appeal should be dismissed. My learned brother takes a different view but under the circumstances in accordance with the practice of this Court the appeal is dismissed and with costs.

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal against the decree of my learned brother Mr. Justice Newbould dismissing an appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge of Noakhali which affirmed the decision of the First Munsif of Lakhipur. The facts are these:—The plaintiff is a raiyat and the defendant is an under-raiyat. They entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff covenanted to let his land to the defendant for nine years. The defendant agreed to pay the landlord rent at higher rate than was recoverable under s. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the tenant agreed that if he did not pay rent at that rate he was liable to be ejected without notice.

There was a further agreement for a renewal of the lease on the expiry of the said period of nine years. No terms were given for the renewal of the lease. The tenant did not pay rent as agreed at the higher rate. The nine years have now expired and the landlord refuses to renew the lease on the ground that the tenant has broken the terms of the agreement by refusing to pay rent at the rate at which he stipulated and, therefore, he is not entitled to a renewal of the lease. Mr. Justice Newbould held that as the condition to pay rent at a higher rate than was recoverable under the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act was illegal the failure to observe it cannot be regarded as a breach of the condition of the covenant and that as they had not given an opportunity of renewal which they were bound to do under the lease they cannot eject him. I regret that I am obliged to differ from the decision. There was nothing illegal in the stipulation to pay rent at a rate higher than that recoverable under the Act. Such a stipulation does not fall within the provision of s. 178, Bengal Tenancy Act. Neither is the contract void [see Sitanath Midda v. Basudeb Midda (1).] The mere fact that it is not enforceable in law does not prevent it from being a condition of a contract the failure to comply with which would justify the other party in not carrying out his share of the contract. The covenant to pay the rent at a higher rate than is recoverable under the Act may not be enforceable but it may still be a condition precedent to renewal.

The language in s. 48 is very different from the language in s. 29 (b) or s. 85, Bengal Tenancy Act.

It seems to me that the tenant having failed to fulfil his part of the contract, viz., to pay the enhanced rent the landlord is absolved from his part of the contract, viz., to grant a renewal of the lease. No notice it seems to me is necessary. The lease has expired. The defendants are trespassers and by his filing the suit the landlords clearly show the intention of not renewing the lease. I need not consider whether the Tenancy Act is an Act for the protection of the tenant or whether it is an Act to define the respective rights of landlords and tenants. It seems to me that a person who has entered into a contract should be held to it unless it can be shown that it is contrary to some provision of the law or has been obtained by fraud or undue influence.

I would allow the appeal and decree the plaintiff-appellant's suit.

Order accordingly.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1277
OF 1922.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 5 (5), 103A
—Landlord and tenant—Status of tenant, determination of—Test—Reclamation of land by tenure-holder —Appeal, second—Finding of fact—Interference by High Court—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), ss. 11
—Suit tried by Court not having jurisdiction—Appeal, interference in, when justified.

In determining whether the status of a tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act is that of a tenure-holder or a raiyat, what has to be considered is the purpose for which the land was granted and the extent of the tenancy. Where the original lease is inconclusive the attendant circumstances may be looked at for determining the purpose for which the tenancy was created. [p. 897, cols. 1 & 2.]

The expression "jot wa abad karke wa krake" in a kabuliyat is consistent both with the status of a raiyat and the status of a tenure-holder. [p. 897, col. 2.]

Though reclamation of the whole of a large jot by a settlement-holder and cultivation by his own ploughs may not be absolutely inconsistent with a tenure, it is entirely contrary to experience in the Province of Behar in cases where the tenancy is a tenure or the tenant proposes to settle raiyats upon the land and become a rent receiver, more especially where the settlement-holder belongs to an agriculturist caste or tribe. [p. 898, col. 1.]

In a second appeal the High Court is not entitled to go behind the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court unless such findings result from the misconstruction of a document of title or the misapplication of law or procedure. [p. 897, col. 1.]

The trial by a Court of a suit beyond its pecuniary jurisdiction is not in itself a ground for setting aside its order on appeal unless the Appellate Court is satisfied that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits. [p. 899, pp. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 16th June 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Monghyr, dated the 19th February 1921.

Messrs. Nirsu N. Singh and S. M. Mullick, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and Jagannath Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Macpherson, J.—This appeal has been preferred by the defendants first party from the decree of the District Judge of Monghyr in which he affirmed the decree of the Munsif for the ejectment of the appellants and of the defendants-second party from the land in suit.

The land in suit is a reputed area of 137½ bighas which at the time of the Cadas-tral Survey was found to be actually 157 bighas 2 kathas. In the Record of Rights finally published in 1908 the adoptive mother of plaintiff No. 1 and the plaintiff No. 2, who is his natural mother, as guardians of their respective minor sons were entered in the Record of Rights as jotdar istimrari lekin mukarrari nahi, signifying "permanent tenant but not at a fixed rent", the defendants first party, now appellants, as dar-jotdar istimrari lekin mukarrari nahi signifying "permanent under-tenant but not at a fixed rent", and the defendants-second party as occupancy raiyats under the dar-jotdar. The defendants-first party were also entered as in cultivating possession of a portion of the area and as Receiving Rs. 350 as rent from defendants-second party.

The plaintiffs sued for adjudication that the plaintiff No. 1 is occupancy raiyat of the land in suit, the defendants-first party are dar-raiyat of the land and not dar-jotdar istimrari lekin mukarrari nahi as shown in the Record of Rights, and the defendants-second party have no concern with the land, for khas possession thereof from the defendants and for mesne profits from Asin 1327.

The case on behalf of the plaintiffs was briefly as follows :—

The land in suit was a jot held by Hibharan Singh as an occupancy raiyat. On 29th November 1893 the jot was sold in execution of a rent decree and purchased by Nand Maharaj, the right sold being shown as "hak mokabzat". On the 25th October 1897 Nand Maharaj granted a dar-jote of the jot so purchased by him for the years 1305-1311 at an annual rent of

Rs. 400 to Khanro Singh father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. This grant is described as thika patta and the grantee as thikadar and as mustajir; and it is set out that after expiry of the term of the thika patta the thikadar shall not retain possession over the lands in suit without executing a new patta and will give up possession after the expiry of the term or if the grantor sells the land. On the expiry of that patta a new patta, Ex. D-1, for the period 1312-1320 was executed on the 5th February 1904 by Musammatt Mini widow of Jaisa Maharaj for herself and as guardian of plaintiff No. 1 and by plaintiff No. 2 who is the widow of Nand Maharaj for herself and as guardian of Durgapat Maharaj, her son now deceased. (It may be here observed that Jaisa Maharaj and Nand Maharaj were brothers, and Jaisa adopted plaintiff No. 1 that plaintiff No. 1 is the sole surviving male member of the joint family and that plaintiff No. 2 has been joined in this litigation merely to avoid future dispute). The patta Ex. D-1 differs considerably from the patta of 1897. The executants set out therein that they "have executed a patta conferring a dar-karindgi jot in respect of the land demised for a term of nine years at an annual rental of Rs. 400" and that "objection on the score of (loss through) inundation, drought, hail and storm will be the concern of you the raiyyat" and make provision for renewal which will be quoted and discussed later. The grantee is referred to as 'jot-dar' and in particular there is no mention of thika, thikadar or mustajir.

In the Record of Rights of 1908 the lessee is shown as Khanro Singh and Nandlal Singh, of whom the former is the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the latter (his brother) is the father of defendants Nos. 4 and 5. These five defendants constitute the defendants first party though plaintiffs do not admit that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have any concern with the land.

Towards the end of the settlement operations the Banili Raj which besides being proprietor of the village, had then become the immediate landlord of the plaintiffs' tenancy, applied under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of a fair and equitable rent in respect of it, the tenant having been, as will be remembered, recorded as jotdar istimrari lekin mukarrari nahi. The tenant thereupon claimed under s. 105-A to be an occupancy raiyyat and that claim was sustained. That decision, however, does not bind either defendants-first party or defendants-second party as they were not parties to the litigation.

After the expiry of the lease Ex. D-1 in 1913 the plaintiffs sued the defendants for recovery of possession of the leased land and for mesne profits. It was held in appeal that as plaintiffs had realized some rent for 1321, the year after the expiry of the period of the kabuliyat, notice under s. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was necessary before the defendants could be ejected. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff thereafter issued notice upon the defendants-first party under s. 49, which was served in 1325, calling upon them to relinquish the land from 1327; and as the defendants-first party failed to comply therewith, plaintiffs instituted the suit for ejectment out of which this appeal has arisen.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1 to 5. They contended that they were in fact occupancy raiyyats, and that in any case the plaintiffs could not, in view of the patta of 1904, eject them.

The Munsif decreed the suit holding that Hibharan Singh and, therefore, the purchaser of his interest, Nand Maharaj, who is now represented by the plaintiff No. 1, was a raiyyat, and that the defendants-first party have neither occupancy right nor any permanent right. On appeal the District Judge affirmed the decision holding that the evidence on record established that the tenancy of the plaintiff No. 1 is raiyyati and that the defendants have no permanent tenancy over the land in suit and are liable to be ejected.

In second appeal the decision of the lower Appellate Court is assailed on the following three grounds:

(1) The plaintiff No. 1 has wrongly been held to be of raiyyati status and entitled on that ground to eject the appellants.

(2) Even if the land is the occupancy holding of the plaintiff No. 1 the defendants-first party are not in view of the terms of the lease of 1904, liable to ejectment since that lease confers upon them a permanent tenancy.

(3) The suit was not within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif and his decision being void for want of jurisdiction, there should be a remand of the suit to a competent Court for trial.

Now as laid down in Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendra Mansingh Bhramarbar Roy (1), in determining whether the status of a tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act is that of a tenure-holder or a raiyat, what has to be considered is: (1) the purpose for which the land was acquired, and (2) the extent of the tenancy.

In the present case the area exceeds 100 bighas and, therefore, there is under s. 5 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act a presumption, until the contrary is proved, that the tenancy is a tenure. But if the first criterion is established the second does not arise, while if the first is not established the second is conclusive.

The finding of the final Court of fact is that the presumptions in favour of the defendants under s. 103-A and s. 5 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act have been rebutted by the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs and though a substantial question of law may and generally does arise in determining whether a tenant is a raiyat or a tenure-holder the point, as indicated by Lord Sumner in Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (2), depends ultimately on questions of fact. In second appeal the High Court is not entitled to go behind the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court unless such findings result from the mis-construction of a document of title or the misapplication of law or procedure [Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Uma Charan Mandal (3)].

On behalf of the appellants it is contended by Mr. N. N. Singh in regard to the finding on the question of status, first, that it is based on a mis-construction of the document of 1876 by which the tenancy of Hibharan Singh was created, and secondly, that there is a misapplication of the law inasmuch as the finding that the plaintiff No. 1 is a raiyat is based on evidence legally insufficient to support it, or rather that there is no evidence to support the finding.

Now Ex. B. the document of 1876, is a brief patta kaulkarar (agreement) in favour of Tekan Singh and Hibharan Singh executed by the darmustajirs in respect of 275 bighas for a period of seven years from 1284 at an annual rental of Rs. 221. The only relevant provisions are "It behoves that you cultivate and get cultivated the land in the said village (jot wo abad karke wo karake) and pay the said rent, etc." (literally). "It behoves that you (by doing and getting done ploughing and cultivation (reclamation) pay the said rent, etc.)" and "objection on the score of (loss through) inundation, drought and calamities of the sky will be your concern". The learned District Judge held that the expression "jot wo abad karke wo karake" was consistent either with the status of a raiyat or the status of a tenure-holder. It is now urged that taken in conjunction with the area of 275 bighas [or even with the moiety of that area held by each of the two lessees and (as the sale in 1903 of half of the area shows), accepted by the landlord as a separate tenancy] the word "karake" points to the grant of a tenure. In my opinion such is not necessarily the case, and it is impossible on that word alone to hold that a tenure rather than a holding is implied, especially when the grantees take from a darmustajir. Apart from the fact that the words 'jot wo abad' would seem in the word "abad" to imply reclamation of the soil in addition to cultivation, the lessees and each of them in his own moiety might well contemplate cultivation of such an area by their (or his) own family or hired servants without any idea of settling *raiya*ts upon it. Much the same language was indeed used in the leases discussed in Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendra Mansingh Bharamabar Roy (1), and in Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (2), but in those leases there were further clear indications that a tenure was intended, and it was so found by the final Court of fact. The District Judge has, in my judgment, taken a correct view of the terms of the original lease.

The original lease being inconclusive the attendant circumstances may be looked at to determine the purpose for which the tenancy was created. The learned District Judge found that that purpose was established by three pieces of evidence: (1) the statement of Kamla Singh, one of the original settlement-holders, who deposed that originally the settlement was a *raiya*ti one, (2) the deposition of Tilak Singh who is a nephew of Hibharan Singh and 71 years of age and who stated that the land was jungle at the time of the settlement and that the settlement-holders got the jungle cut and cultivated the land with their own ploughs, and (3) the mention in the sale certificate of 1893 "that Hibharan Singh, judgment-debtor, had 'hak mokabzat' i.e., occupancy right in the land sold".

Mr. N. N. Singh strenuously contends that the evidence relied upon by the District Judge is inconclusive as to the status of Hibharan Singh and his successor-in-interest and could not, especially as it is not contemporaneous, negative the statutory presumptions arising under ss. 103-B and 5 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is urged that the opinion of the witness Kamla Singh is valueless especially as the area is so large, that the reclamation of the land by the lessee is not altogether inconsistent with an intention to settle raiyyat upon it and so is inconclusive, and that "hak mokabzat" is not occupancy right" as used technically in the Bengal Tenancy Act, but is simply a loose expression meaning "the right to possession".

Now the lower Appellate Court had before it the evidence of Kamla Singh which has not been shown to us, and it is, therefore, impossible to say that he ought not to have relied upon it. Again, though reclamation of the whole jot by the settlement-holders and cultivation by their own ploughs may not be absolutely inconsistent with a tenure, it is entirely contrary to experience in this Province in cases where the tenancy is a tenure or the tenant proposes to settle raiyyats upon the land and become a rent-receiver, more especially where the settlement-holder belongs to an agricultural caste or tribe. It has also not been shown that from 1876 to the date of sale in 1893 there were any under-tenants. It was only when the "landlord and stamp-vendor", as Nand Maharaj describes himself, came into possession that sub-leasing began. Finally it is not possible to say that in the circumstances the term "hak mokabzat" does not, as the District Judge held, denote the "occupancy right" of the Bengal Tenancy Act which had been in force for eight years at the time of the sale.

There is no substance in the complaint of the learned Advocate that the defendants' evidence on the subject of status has not been considered. The learned Judge having referred to the presumptions proceeded to examine the nature of the settlement and as will be seen below, the patta of 1904 does not throw any light on the character of the tenancy of Hibharan Singh.

Findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court cannot be assailed in second appeal, however, gross and inexcusable the error therein—if as Lord Macnaghten said in Durga Chowdhuri v. Jowahir Singh Chowdhuri (4), "the lower Appellate Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of its finding". It is impossible to say that the learned District Judge had not before him evidence on which a finding of fact could legally be based that the presumptions in favour of plaintiff No. 1 being a tenure-holder were rebutted and that he is in fact a raiyyat as he claims to be. The first point, therefore, fails.

It is next urged that even if the plaintiff No. 1 is a raiyyat he is not entitled to eject the appellants. In support of this contention reliance is placed on a provision in the patta of 1904 which runs as follows:—"When the term of the patta will expire, you again taking a fresh patta from us (the executants) will cultivate, and if contrary to this provision you cultivate, then rent will be realised at the rate of Rs. 3 per bigha, the rate for adjoining lands, and if you the karinda will all along pay faithfully (?) punctually) the rent fixed under the patta then the land shall remain in your possession and occupation as before".

There are two branches to the argument. In the first place reference is made to s. 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and it is urged that it is for plaintiff No. 1 to show that he is not "a raiyyat at fixed rates" who is not precluded by s. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other enactment from making such a transfer as is involved in the provision quoted. The plaint, however, sets out that the plaintiff No. 1 is an occupancy raiyyat and presumably an entry to that effect was also made in the Record of Rights under s. 109-D of the Bengal Tenancy Act after the decision under s. 105-A. The appellants also never asserted that their landlord plaintiff No. 1, held his tenancy at fixed rates. Indeed the point was never previously taken, and it is not mentioned in the grounds of appeal. It, therefore, cannot be taken now. But apart from that the implied finding throughout is that the plaintiff No. 1 is an occupancy raiyat.

The main contention, however, is that the plaintiff is in some manner estopped by the provision quoted from ejecting the appellants. In support of it reliance is placed upon the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Chandra Kanta v. Amjad Ali (5), and it is urged that as in the lease of 1904 the plaintiffs' predecessors held themselves out to be tenure-holders, and so s. 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not a bar to the registration of the deed of sub-lease, though it purports to create a term exceeding nine years, the grantor, even if a raiyat, cannot now be permitted to derogate from his own grant and eject the grantee to whom he made a permanent grant. This argument manifestly lacks foundation unless it is found that the lessors of 1904 held themselves out as having a right higher than that of occupancy raiyat. The learned District Judge was not satisfied that the pardanashin ladies who executed the deed were even aware of the provision or accepted it. But apart from that finding, I am unable to hold that the executants of the lease of 1904 at all professed to have a higher status than the status of a raiyat. The period of nine years is a very common one for a sub-lease by a raiyat and less probable in a grant of an under-tenancy or a raiyati settlement. The word 'raiyat' is indeed used in Ex. B, but only in the stipulation that "objection on the score of (loss through) inundation, drought, hail and storm will be the concern of you, the raiyat" which, is merely an adaptation of the similar provision in the patta of 1876. The word "raiyat" has here not the usual technical meaning nor any special significance, being merely equivalent to grantee. Manifestly it must be interpreted in conjunction with the definite statement in the deed that the grantors have executed a patta conferring a darkarindgi jot, the literal meaning of which is "a sub-management jot". In the course of the document the term "karinda" signifying 'agent' or 'manager' is twice used of the grantee. The description in the last sentence of the lessee as 'jotdar' must also be read in the light of that description of the tenancy. The lease is perhaps one which might equally be executed by a raiyat or by a tenure holder, but that is all that can be said in favour of the contention on behalf of appellants. Accordingly it must be regarded as a sublease granted by the executants in the capacity which they actually occupied. Plaintiff No. 1 is, therefore, not estopped from denying that he holds a higher status than that of an occupancy raiyat. Exhibit D-1 appears to have been admitted to registration contrary to the provisions of s. 85 (2) through a misconception on the part of the Registering Officer, and whether the misconception was that the term of the sublease granted by a raiyat was not more than nine years, or was that the executants held a tenure, is immaterial. There is certainly no evidence that lessor and lessee conspired by false or equivocal recitals to evade the provision of the Statute. Exhibit D-1, therefore, does not affect the property demised, at any rate beyond the period of nine years. The first of the three cases dealt with in the Full Bench decision cited is that which applies to the present circumstances and the raiyat is entitled to eject the grantee upon giving notice under s. 49 (2), as has been done in the present instance. The second point also cannot prevail.

As to the third point the suit was valued at Rs. 1,100 and was instituted in the Court of the Munsif having jurisdiction to try suits of value not exceeding Rs. 2,000. Objection to the jurisdiction of the Court was taken before the Munsif. Before the District Judge in appeal the objection was renewed. But the trial by a Court of a suit beyond its pecuniary jurisdiction is not in itself a ground for setting aside his order on appeal unless the Appellate Court is satisfied that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits. The District Judge recorded that he was not so satisfied. It is, however now argued that in fact the disposal of the suit on the merits was prejudicially affected because the forum of appeal would, on a correct valuation of the suit, have been the High Court and not the District Judge and Mohini Mohan v. Gour Chandra Rai (6) is cited in support of the contention. That decision does not assist the appellants. Therein it was held that wherein a suit tried by a Subordinate Judge the appeal was wrongly preferred to the District Judge in disregard of his pecuniary jurisdiction in appeal, the appeal was incompetent and s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887 was inapplicable as in fact the under-valuation prejudicially affected the disposal of the appeal on the merits. In the present case the appeal lay to the District Judge whether the correct valuation of the subject-matter was Rs. 1,100 or was Rs. 3,650 as the District Judge found it to be for purposes of assessment of Court-fee. The real plea on behalf of the appellants is that the true valuation exceeded Rs. 5,000 so that the appeal from the decision in the suit would lie to the High Court. But that plea must fail in the first place because it is not taken in the grounds of appeal and in the second place because there is nothing before us which would lead us to hold that the valuation of Rs. 3,650 is erroneous and the appeal in a suit so valued lies to the District Judge and not to the High Court. The third submission also fails.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Miller, C. J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

VEERAPPA GOUNDAN AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 13 (f)—Easement—Increased burden.

The plaintiff and defendant were owners of two adjoining sites with houses thereon which fell to them on a family partition. The water from the plaintiff's site drained off across the defendant's site, and without flowing in any channel across the defendant's land used to be absorbed as it spread over the whole area. Subsequent to the partition, between the two sites a wall was built by both the parties in common and the plaintiff claimed the right to drain off the water from his house and site through a hole in the wall across the yard in the defendant's house to the street:

Held, (1) that the easement enjoyed before partition was of a different nature to that claimed, namely, collecting all the water into one spot and directing it on to the defendant's land in a concentrated form;

(2) that the easement right not being necessary for enjoying the plaintiff's share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect, and the burden cast upon the defendants being a more onerous burden now than it was before, plaintiff's claim must fail.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the District Judge, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 366 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Gobichettipalayam, in O. S. No. 697 of 1922.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri (Advocate-General), for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer and K. B. Ranganatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a question of easement. The plaintiff's father and the first defendant effected a partition about 25 years ago and now the plaintiff claims to have a right to drain off the water from his house and site through a hole in the wall, marked A, R, W on the plan and across the defendant's yard to the street in the north.

It is contended that this is not an easement of necessity but the learned Advocate-General contends that it is an easement within the meaning of s. 13 (f) of the Easements Act, namely, that it is an apparent and continuous easement and that it was enjoyed before the partition. It is however, admitted that since the partition took place this wall A, R, W has been built by the parties jointly. It is further clear that prior to the partition, there was no particular easement right to take water through that one point R. It is possible and indeed probable from the lie of the land that the water from the plaintiff's site did drain off towards the north across the defendant's site. That easement is of a different nature to collecting all that water into one spot and directing it on to the defendant's land in a concentrated form as sought to be done now. Before the partition it is unlikely that water flowed in any channel across the defendants' land and it would be likely to be absorbed as it would be spread over the whole area. Now that the whole amount of this water is concentrated into a narrow channel five inches across, it imposes a burden upon the defendants of a very different nature to that which was in existence before the partition. It cannot, therefore, be said that it is now necessary for enjoying the plaintiff's share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect. The burden cast upon the defendants is undoubtedly a more onerous burden now than it was before.

It is further argued that this arrangement must have been by agreement between the parties and from the fact that the wall was built by both in common and that this opening has been there for some time past it might be possible to infer such an agreement. Both the lower Courts have considered the question of agreement which was pleaded by the plaintiff and have definitely found that there was no such agreement. In this view, I do not think that this finding can be interfered with or that fresh finding is called for.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 37—Revenue sale—Purchaser, rights of—Structures on land, whether pass by sale—Structures, whether encumbrance.

What passes at a revenue sale is the land or the share in the land and not the structures or buildings thereon. [p. 902, col. 2.]

The rights of a purchaser at a revenue sale are radically different from those of a purchaser at a voluntary sale. [p. 902, col. 2; p. 903, col. 1.]

Structures and buildings are not "encumbrances" within the meaning of s. 37 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act. [p. 903, col. 1.]

Where land is sold for arrears of revenue the owner of a house built on the land is entitled as against the auction-purchaser to reside in or enjoy the house paying an equitable ground rent for the site to such purchaser and that whether the house was built by a person holding under a lease granted by the former proprietor or by the ex-proprietor himself. [ibid.]

On the failure of an owner to pay the Government assessment his estate or interest in the land is determined and sold under the provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act. Under such a sale what is sold is not the interest of the defaulter owner, but the interest of the Crown, subject to the payment of the Government assessment. In a sale held under that Act the estate is sold in the condition in which it stood at the time of the settlement; the purchaser does not derive his title from the defaulting proprietor but takes the estate from the Crown in the state in which it was at its inception at the time of the settlement. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, 24-Parganas, dated the 24th August 1922.

Mr. N. C. Bose, Babus Bireswar Bagchi and Anilendra Nath Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Sir Provash Chunder Mitter and Babu Satindra Nath Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—The appellants are the defendants, the successors-in-interest of Satyendra Nath Roy Chowdhury, who was the proprietor of a khas mahal holding. This holding was sold under the Revenue Sales Law by the Collector on December 17, 1919, and bought by the plaintiff. Satyendra's efforts to have the sale set aside were fruitless and on July 6, 1920, a certificate was issued to the plaintiff saying that his purchase took effect from May 1, 1920. Then on August 2, 1920, a declaration was made under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act in respect of the holding and on March 11, 1921, the Deputy Collector awarded Rs. 2,181 for the land, and Rs. 12,388 for the building standing on it. This building was admittedly erected at the expense of Satyendra, and it was standing on the land at the time of plaintiff's purchase. The suit was brought to determine whether the plaintiff or defendants were to take the compensation money. There is, of course, no question about the compensation for the land: that must go to the plaintiff. The learned Judge has held that the plaintiff should also get the compensation for the building. It is against that finding that the appeal is directed.

It is conceded on all hands that the holding is one that can be sold under the Revenue Sales Law. Unfortunately the language of Act XI and Act VII seems hardly to refer to a small holding like the present one. Here the holding is a homestead or a residential site, and in the occupation of the proprietor. The learned Judge proceeds frankly on the doctrine omne quod solo inædificatur solo cedit, although he admits that it has but a limited application in this country.

In this I think, he was wrong. The point was discussed, and settled in 1866, in the case of Thakoor Chunder Pramanick v. Ramdhone Bhattacharjee (1) and incidently it was pointed that the Civil Law gave some protection to the man who being in possession of land in good faith erected a building on it. On the authority of that decision I think it is clear that the plaintiff had the option of calling upon the defendants to remove the building or to accept such sum as might be found to be reasonable compensation. The plaintiff did not exercise that option. He says that he took delivery of possession through the Collector in August 1920, but that allegation is denied by the defendants and there is no evidence adduced in support of it. I need not consider when a purchaser must exercise his option in such a case: for my present purpose it is enough to say that the plaintiff had not exercised his option. It appears to me to follow from this failure on the part of the plaintiff that ownership of the building remained with the defendants, and that it was still with them when the award was made. Consequently, I think that the learned Judge's decision is wrong, and that it must be reversed. The defendants, however, are not entitled to the whole of the compensation for the building: they allowed it to stand on the plaintiff's land for a long time and they ought to pay a reasonable sum for the use of the land. I agree with my learned brother as to the sum.

We are told that the whole of the compensation money was withdrawn by the plaintiff after the decision by the first Court. The plaintiff must refund the balance after deducting the amount allowed to him as indicated above.

The appeal will be allowed and the suit decreed in the form indicated with proportionate costs in both Courts.

Mukerji, J.—I agree and wish to add a few words.

Act XI of 1859 is described in its title as an Act to improve the law relating to the sales of land for arrears of revenue in the Lower Provinces under the Bengal Presidency. In the Regulations and Enactments dealing with settlement of revenue it is the land which is assessed to revenue.

Under Act XI of 1859 what is sold for arrears of revenue is the 'estate.' The word is not defined in that Act but in Act VII of 1868. In the latter Act 'estate' has been defined as meaning any land or share in land subject to the payment to Government of an annual sum in respect of which the name of a proprietor is entered on the register known as the General Register of all Revenue paying estates, or in respect of which a separate account may in pursuance of s. 10 or s. 11 of the Act XI of 1859 may have been opened. These Registers are now prepared and maintained under the Land Registration Act VII of 1876, s. 2 of which gives a definition of 'estate' as including land, and it is the lands which are so entered as assessed or unassessed prima facie, therefore, and in the absence of anything else, I should think that it is the land or the share in the land, as stated above, which passes at the sale, and not the structures or buildings on the land.

To make out that the structures and buildings pass with the land or the share therein, several arguments have been put forward and I propose to consider them in their order.

Reference is made to the definition of 'land' as given in s. 3, sub-s. (a) of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) and the definition of 'immovable property' as given in s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). Both these definitions, however, are expressly restricted to the enactments in which they appear and cannot be imported into Act XI of 1859, with which the provisions of Act VII of 1868 have to be read by reason of s. 30 of the latter.

It is urged that though the provisions of s. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to a sale by operation of law the principles underlying those provisions will apply to a purchase made at a revenue sale. It is urged that at such a sale an unqualified transfer takes place which conveys all the interest which the defaulting proprietor possessed and the rule of interpretation that every grant is to be most strongly taken against the grantor is to be applied. It is contended that where there is no reservation the structures and buildings will pass by necessary implication. This argument is based upon a supposed analogy between a transaction as between a vendor and a vendee and a revenue sale. The rights of a purchaser at a revenue sale are entirely and radically different from those of a purchaser at a voluntary sale. The Judicial Committee in the case Surja Kanta Acharjya Bahadur v. Sarat Chandra Roy (2) dealing with the case of a sale held under Act XI of 1859 enunciated the proposition that on the failure of an owner to pay the Government assessment his estate or interest in the land is forfeited or rather determined, and that under such a sale what is sold is not the interest of the defaulter owner, but the interest of the Crown, subject to the payment of the Government assessment. In a sale held under that Act the estate is sold in the condition in which it stood at the time of the settlement; the purchaser does not derive his title from the defaulting proprietor but takes the estate from the Crown in the state in which it was at its inception at the time of the settlement.

The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is not, and, in my opinion, rightly not, sought to be supported by a reference to the expression 'free from encumbrance' appearing in s. 37 of Act XI of 1859. Structures or buildings are not encumbrances within the meaning of the section and the said expression is irrelevant for our present purposes.

It is conceded that the law of fixtures has but a limited application to this country and that the provisions of s. 108, cl. (h) of the Transfer of Property Act have no application.

The precise effect of a revenue sale on the building erected by the ex-proprietor was incidentally considered by this Court in the case of Shib Doss Banerjee v. Bamun Doss Mookerjee (3) wherein at page 361* Norman, C. J., observed as follows: "If the land had been sold for arrears of Government revenue; the owner of a house built on the land might have been entitled as against the auction-purchaser to reside in or enjoy the house paying an equitable ground-rent for the site to such purchaser and that whether the house were built by a person holding under a lease granted by the former proprietor—Act I of 1845, ss. 3, 26 and 27 and Act XI of 1859, ss. 3, 7 or even by the ex-proprietor himself, see Ram Koomar Sen v. Mohesh Chunder Sen (4)."

tion of law enunciated so far back as 1871 has not been dissented from at any time till now, and I am not convinced that there is any reason to hold that it is otherwise than a correct one. It has been argued that the case of Ram Kumar Sen v. Mohesh Chunder Sen (4) presents certain distinguishable features. I think it does; but the principle is there and that is entirely in consonance with the general rule which must govern the rights and liabilities of the purchaser on the one hand and the ex-proprietor on the other. That general rule was laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Thakoor Chunder Pramanik v. Ramdhone Bhattacharjee (1): "We think it should be laid down as a general rule that, if he who makes the improvement is not a mere trespasser, but is in possession under any bona fide title or claim of title, he is entitled either to remove the materials, restoring the land to the state in which it was before the improvement was made, or to obtain compensation for the value of the building if it is allowed to remain for the benefit of the owner of the soil—the option of taking to the building, or allowing the removal of the material, remaining with the owner of the land in those cases in which the building is not taken down by the builder during the continuance of any estate he may possess".

Applying this general rule in the present case there is no escape from the conclusion that the ownership of the structures or buildings, which were admittedly erected by the appellants' predecessor, the defaulting proprietor, did not pass to the respondent, the purchaser.

From this, however, it does not follow that the appellants are entitled to the whole of the compensation awarded by the Land Acquisition Collector for the structures and buildings. We must take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case and we are competent to pass such orders as the equities of the case demand. The learned Advocate for the appellants with his usual candour has conceded that we may allow reasonable compensation to the respondent for the appellants' laches in not removing the materials of the structures and buildings before 1st of May 1919 which was the date mentioned in the certificate from which the sale was to take effect and the fact that the latter did not exercise the option of calling upon the ex-proprietor to remove them suggests that he allowed them to stand subject to payment of reasonable ground rent. The structures and buildings remained on the land till the 11th March 1921, on which date the Collector took possession of the premises. In the absence of any arrangement which it was clearly the duty of the ex-proprietor to make with the purchaser for allowing the buildings and structures to remain on his land, I think we may reasonably assess the compensation at the rate of Rs. 100 per month.

The result is that out of the compensation awarded for the structures and buildings, the appellants should be held entitled to the whole amount less a sum of Rs. 2,300 due to the respondent, as compensation for 23 months during which period the structures and buildings stood on the land. There is no controversy as to the rest of the compensation money, that is to say, that awarded for the land or the trees.

The decree of the Court below is set aside and in lieu thereof a decree will be drawn up declaring the plaintiff's title to the whole of the compensation awarded for the lands and trees and also to the sum of Rs. 2,300 stated above, out of the amount awarded in Land Acquisition Case No. D, 37-95-96 of 1920-21 of the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector's Court at Alipur, and the rest will go to the defendants.

Having regard to the circumstances of the case, and the proportion of success and defeat of the respective parties I think the proper order to make is to allow proportionate costs in this Court as well as in the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 115, Sch. II, paras. 1, 15, 16—Arbitration—Reference by Court—Objection, disposal of—Revision—Order passed in revision, whether passed "on appeal"—Appeal to His Majesty in Council, whether competent.

An order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction is not an order passed "on appeal" within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 109 of the C. P. C. Such an order may, however, be open to appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. (c) of the section, if it is shown that the case is a fit one for appeal. [p. 904, col. 2; p. 905, col. 1.]

Under the C. P. C. of 1908 the policy of the law is to make all decisions in arbitration cases final and it is contemplated that any objection taken in respect of the validity of an award should be determined by the Court through which the reference was made, including an objection that what purports to be an award is by reason of certain events which are said to have happened prior to the reference not an award at all. [p. 905, col. 2; p. 906, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, in such a case an award is upheld by the Court which made the reference and a petition for revision of such order is dismissed by the High Court, an order of the Trial Court or of the High Court is not open to appeal to His Majesty in Council inasmuch as the order of the High Court being passed in revision cannot be said to have been passed "on appeal" within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 109 of the C. P. C., and cl. (c) of the section is inapplicable for want of the case being a fit one for appeal within the meaning of that clause. [p. 905, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicants.

Sir Dr. T. B. Sapru and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We have decided, after hearing arguments of Counsel in this case, to refuse this application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The order which it is sought to take in appeal is an order which was passed by this Bench in Civil Revision No. 125 of 1923. In other words it was an order passed under the provisions of s. 115 of the C. P. C. The matter came before this Court in connection with an arbitration award. The award having been attacked in the Trial Court was accepted by the learned Judge of the Court below, and we decided by our order that there was no case for interference in revision. We, therefore, allowed the order of the District Judge to remain as it was.

A preliminary objection has been raised before us and it is argued in this connection that having regard to the language of s. 109 of the C. P. C., cl. (a), the applicants have no right to apply for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. This argument is based on the consideration that the order which was passed by this Bench, and which is the order complained of, was not an order passed "on appeal" by a High Court. We agree with the argument and we do not think that an order which has been passed by this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction is an order passed "on appeal." We understand there is authority for the contrary view in a case reported as Harish Chandra Acharya v. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad (1). The view there taken followed the view which was adopted by the Madras Court in Chappan v. Moidin Kutti (2). This latter was a case in which the matter under discussion was the right of appeal under the Letters Patent.

We are not prepared to take the view that an order passed by this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction is an order passed "on appeal." There is a substantial difference between the powers of this Court when exercised in appeal and when exercised in revisional jurisdiction. As was very properly pointed out, the jurisdiction of this Court under s. 115 is a discretionary jurisdiction and the Court is not bound to interfere even if it is satisfied that an error of law has been committed by the Court below. It would be otherwise in a case which came before this Court "on appeal." We are, therefore, of opinion, that this application does not lie under s. 109 (a). On the other hand it is argued that if it does not lie under cl. (a) it does lie under cl. (c) which provides that an appeal would lie to His Majesty in Council from any decree or order when the case as hereinafter provided is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We are of opinion that the application could be entertained under this clause if it is made to appear that the case is a fit one for appeal. It was argued before us that in the present case, as in the case reported as Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (3), the application for a certificate ought to be made to the Court which passed the decree. We do not think this is so, and it may also be mentioned that in the case reported as Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (3), the matter never came before the High Court at all. There was no order by the High Court in that case.

We are left then to consider whether this application ought to be granted on the ground that the case is one certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is argued by Mr. Peary Lal Banerjee, who appears on behalf of the applicants, that a substantial question of law is raised and one of general importance. The argument is put in this way. It is said that it would be a great hardship on litigants who engage in arbitration proceedings if they were deprived of the opportunity of showing by means of an appeal that what purported to be an award was not an award at all. We think instead (and the law is so settled in this Court) that under the present C. P. C., the policy of the law is to make all decisions in arbitration cases final. We may refer in this connection to the Full Bench decision of this Court reported as Lutawan v. Lachiya (4) and to the observations of the learned Chief Justice at page 74* of the judgment where he says:—

"It seems to me that it was the clear intention of the Legislature by this amendment of the Code that objections to the award on the ground of invalidity from any cause whatever should be decided by that Court and by no other Court."

Similarly Mr. Justice Banerji observes at page 75* of the report:—

"It is manifest from the provisions of the C. P. C., that the intention of the Legislature is to give finality to the decisions of arbitrators and to the decrees passed in accordance therewith."

We agree respectfully with these observations on the scope of the arbitration law as it now stands and we think it is impossible to say that any hardship is caused whereas at present, the law contemplates that any objection taken in respect of the validity of an award is to be determined by the Court through which the reference was made. This is clear from the provisions of Sch. II, para. 1, sub-para. (1) (c) of the C. P. C., when the award is returned by the arbitrator any party then has the opportunity of attacking the award in the Court which made the reference and showing that it is invalid for various reasons which are specified in para. 15 "or otherwise." It seems to us, therefore, that this paragraph contemplates the entertaining by the first Court of all possible grounds which can be urged against the validity of the award and amongst those grounds, we conceive, is included the ground which has now been raised here, namely, that what purports to be an award is by reason of certain events which are said to have happened prior to the reference not an award at all.

Paragraph 16, Sch. II, shows clearly that the right of appeal in the case where an award has been made is of a strictly limited nature, and it was, no doubt, for that reason, that the Full Bench held, as we have said above, that it was the policy of the Legislature to give finality to the decisions of arbitrators. We, therefore, hold that no proper case has been made out which would justify our granting the certificate asked for, and we accordingly dismiss this application with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Mistake of fact—Payment of money towards non-existing debt—Suit for refund—Cause of action, accrual of, subsequent to suit—Relief, right to.

A person is entitled to recover money which he pays to another under a bona fide forgetfulness of fact. [p. 907, col. 1.]

The plaintiff sent money to the defendant with intent to discharge a particular promissory note, but by mistake wrongly described it. The defendant took advantage of the mistake and allotted the money for the discharge of this fictitious pro-note and thereupon endorsed the real pro-note to a third person who ultimately got a decree. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for recovery of money paid under mistake:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, and it was immaterial that his suit was instituted before the endorsee's suit was actually decreed. [ibid.]

There is no general rule that Courts have no power to grant a decree where the cause of action arises subsequent to the suit. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, in A. S. No. 40 of 1920, (A. S. No. 676 of 1919, on the file of the District Court, Ramnad), preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Srivilliputhur, in O. S. No. 87 of 1918, (O. S. No. 977 of 1917) on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Srivilliputhur.

Mr. K. V. Venkatasubramania Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri (Advocate-General) and K. S. Ramabhadra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts so far as they are necessary for the purpose of this second appeal may be thus shortly stated. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are members of a joint family carrying on money-lending business sometimes taking documents in the name of one and sometimes in that of the other and one or the other collecting money and giving discharges on the documents. The plaintiff borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,250 and executed to the 2nd defendant a promissory note Ex. R in Ananda Chitrai (29th April 1914). To discharge this promissory note the plaintiff sent money to the 1st defendant and, in so sending it, the promissory note for discharging which the money was sent was by mistake referred to as executed to the 1st defendant in Ananda Vaikasi (see Ex. D). This was on account of forgetfulness as the plaintiff had kept no copies of memoranda of the various promissory notes. Availing himself of this mistake in the dates, the 1st defendant allotted this money for the discharge of a promissory note of Ananda Vaikasi which, as a matter of fact, did not exist. Later on the promissory-note executed to the 2nd defendant for which really the money was intended by the plaintiff when he sent it was endorsed to another person and he instituted a suit against the plaintiff for the recovery of that amount. It was decreed against him since the institution of this suit. I may here mention that, in a preliminary order passed in the suit instituted by the endorsee, the District Munsif, overruling the plea of payment urged by the present plaintiff, who was defendant therein, said that "The defendant may no doubt have his remedy to claim back the amount paid by mistaken understanding of the real claimant to the money." The suit out of which this second appeal arises has been instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of the amount declared due from him to the 1st defendant in the circumstances which I have narrated. Both the lower Courts, holding that the money was paid by the plaintiff under a mistake of fact, have given a decree in his favour and the defendants have preferred this second appeal against that decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found "that there was no second promissory note for Rs. 1,250, that the plaintiff executed only one promissory note for Rs. 1,250, Ex. R, dated the 29th April 1914, that the reference in Ex. D to a promissory note for Rs. 1,250 in Ananda Vaikasi was made owing to the forgetfulness, and that the defendants are not entitled to appropriate it towards that fictitious promissory note but are bound to refund it." At the very outset I may point out that the arguments of the learned Counsel for the appellants at the bar were not directed to show that there is any equity upon which the appellants could retain this money. It is conceded that the defendants have committed a deliberate fraud, but it is argued that since the plaintiff intended to send the money to the 1st defendant, the finding of the Subordinate Judge based upon a mistake of fact cannot stand. It appears to me that, when once it is conceded that the money that was sent was intended for quite a different promissory note, though it was sent to the 1st defendant, it was money which he had no right to retain and which he had from the date of its receipt been holding for the plaintiff. The circumstances of the case show that the money was sent by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant under a bona fide forgetfulness of fact which disentitles the 1st defendant to receive it. I think, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the money which he has paid to the 1st defendant on the ground of mistake.

It was argued that the suit is premature inasmuch as it was instituted before the decree in the suit brought by the endorsee was actually passed. I do not think that there is any substance in this argument. I have already pointed out that in the preliminary order the District Munsif had indicated that the plaintiff had no defence to the endorsee's suit. The defect indicated can certainly be cured by an amendment. Further it cannot be said as a general rule that Courts have no power to grant a decree where the cause of action arose subsequent to the suit; see Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (1). In the special circumstances of this case I overrule this plea. I may also mention that this argument does not appear to have been put forward in the lower Appellate Court.

I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 12 OF 1924.

March 20, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lentaigne.

MAUNG PO KA—DEFENDANT

versus

MAUNG SAN PE—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Notice sent to person in occupation of land not to cultivate it—Damages, suit for—Malice—Burden of proof.

The law encourages persons who have bona fide rights to give notice to other persons who are likely to be affected by such rights, and it is not the policy of the law to presume either malice or mala fides in such cases on the part of the person who gives such notice, but to require clear proof of the same. [p. 910, col. 1.]

Where in consequence of such a notice warning the person to whom the notice is sent to desist from cultivating the land without the permission of the person sending the notice, the person to whom the notice is sent ceases to cultivate the land, he cannot claim damages from the person who sent the notice unless he proves actual malice on his part. If the defendant in such a case proves that he sent the notice in the bona fide assertion of his own right, real or supposed, to the property, the action will not lie. [ibid.]

Mr. Leong, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ko Ko, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This Second Appeal No. 12 of 1924 has been heard with two other Second Appeals Nos. 13 and 14 of 1924; and as the three appeals cover the same points with the only material difference as to the amount of damages decreed, this judgment will cover all three cases, which had been similarly decided by the same judgment in the lower Appellate Court.

The facts which gave rise to all three suits are summarised in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as follows:—The lands to which these suits relate originally stood in the name of one Ma Nge Le, who died; and the appellant Po Ka claimed that on the death of Ma Nge Le the land devolved on her sister Ma Pu who was the wife of the appellant. Ma Pu died shortly after Ma Nge Le and the appellant then claimed that the lands became his property. The lands, however, were, in the possession of Ma Sein who was the aunt of Ma Pu and Ma Nge Le; and shortly afterwards the appellant Po Ka is said to have executed a registered deed of gift of the lands in favour of Ma Sein. Then the appellant is said to have changed his mind and to have executed a registered deed purporting to cancel the deed of gift to Ma Sein; and he is also said to have instituted a suit for the cancellation of the deed of gift to Ma Sein.

and that in such suit he was unsuccessful. This suit does not appear to have been made an exhibit in the cases now under appeal, but these facts have been referred to as explanatory of the facts more directly concerned with the three cases now under appeal.

The plaintiffs in each of these cases were tenants who had leased separate portions of the land from Ma Sein; and after they had partially cultivated the land, the appellant Maung Po Ka informed these tenants that he claimed the land and that they must pay the rents to him; and he then served each of them with a copy of the written notice of which the following is a translation:—"On the first Waning Tazaungmon 1283 B. E., I, Maung Po Ka, send this written notice to you, Ko On, Maung San Pe and Maung San Ba. On the eighth Waning Tabaung 1282 B. E. corresponding to the 31st March 1921, I gave and kept my own paddy land with Ma Sein. As I now did not want to give it to her, I took it back into my possession in accordance with law on the thirteenth Waning Tazaungmon 1283 B. E. corresponding to the 12th November 1921. So the rental paddy amounting to 1,050 baskets of the said paddy land must be given to me. If you fail to do so or use it in any way without my permission, legal steps will be taken and you shall incur payment of costs. Moreover, you shall not grow without my permission any crop or sugarcane, etc., on the paddy land belonging to me either this year or next year, and you are hereby forbidden."—Signed Maung Po Ka.

The plaintiffs, the said tenants, subsequently on the 24th October 1922 instituted the three suits now under appeal alleging that portions of the land had been leased to them respectively by Ma Sein, and they had ploughed certain portions; that the defendant (appellant) Maung Po Ka sent for each plaintiff and "prevented him and others from cultivating the land both orally and by the written notice" (as above); and that owing to the action of the defendant the plaintiff could not plant certain crops; and the prayer was for specified sums as compensation for the losses so sustained.

The defendant in each case admitted sending the notice but denied liability for any of the damages alleged in the plaint; and he pleaded that the losses and damages alleged in the plaint were too remote as a basis for the claim of the plaintiff. At settlement of issues the defendant stated that Ma Nge Le, the owner of the land died in March 1921 leaving no children; that his wife Ma Pu inherited the land; that his wife died seven days later, and then the land became his; that pitying Ma Sein the aunt of his wife, he had given the land to Ma Sein by a registered deed dated the 31st March 1921; but that as Ma Sein failed to give him the jewellery of Ma Nge Le which belonged to him, he cancelled the deed of gift by a registered deed to which Ma Sein was not a party; and he had then instituted the suit in the District Court for the cancellation of the deed of gift, but before doing so, he had sent the notice to the plaintiffs and that he did not know whether the plaintiffs had stopped work; and he also admitted that his suit against Ma Sein was dismissed. He further admitted having verbally told the plaintiffs not to work the land before he sent the written notice.

Five issues were framed:—

(1) Was the plaintiff a tenant of Ma Sein in the year 1283 B. E. in respect of a portion of holding No. 6 of 1921-22;

(2) If so, what was the area of that portion?

(3) Did the plaintiffs suffer any loss in consequence of the written or verbal notice of the defendant?

(4) If so, how much? and

(5) What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to;

These issues did not satisfactorily raise the points of the defence, as to denial of liability and remoteness of damage, though the last issue would cover the defence.

The learned Township Judge stated in his judgment that the defendant had set up the defence that when he gave the notice, the plaintiffs had replied that they could not stop planting; and he held that this reply was not proved satisfactorily, but that even if it were proved, it would not matter, because the plaintiffs might have subsequently stopped further planting through fear of consequences on account of the notice. The remainder of his judgment was occupied with the discussion of the value of crops which might have been got from a small area alleged to have been left unplanted in each case; and he awarded as damages Rs. 224-7-8 for an area of decimal 92 of an acre alleged to have been left unplanted in San Pe's case; Rs. 244 for an area of about one acre alleged to have been left unplanted in San Ba's case; and Rs. 430-5-0 for an area of 1.78 acres alleged to have been left unplanted in Ko On's case. He granted the plaintiffs decrees for these amounts with costs in the respective cases.

Both sides appealed in each case to the District Court, which dismissed the appeals in all the cases and allowed costs to the original plaintiffs. The learned District Judge considered the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any damages at all.

He held that as the defendant was a townsman and the plaintiffs were cultivators, they would be impressed with the order forbidding them to work the land, and that they were not bound to continue working until the defendant resorted to any means of forcible prevention; but the learned Judge did not consider any precedents or authorities or attempt to clearly indicate what branch of the law of torts was applicable. He expressed the opinion that if a man orally forbids another to work certain land and then serves him with a written notice forbidding him to do so, and invests his actions with all the forms of formality that he can, it is quite impossible for him to plead afterwards (when the man whom he has forbidden to stop work does actually stop work) that this stopping is not the natural and probable consequence of his action in ordering a stoppage.

The present second appeal is against that decision. I think that it is obvious that if the above were a correct statement of the law, the amount of litigation in India would be greatly increased for a time, as numerous lawyer's notices warning persons not to take certain specified action with property pending a law suit would at once give rise to claims for damages and encourage the recipients to take or pretend to take an immediate holiday on receipt of the notice in anticipation of the damages to be recovered from the other party. Consequently, it is necessary that such a class of claim should be carefully scrutinised with grave suspicion. The first question for determination is to ascertain under what category of the law of torts the claim can lie. I think that it is clear that it cannot be treated as a trespass to the lands of the plaintiff, because the nature of such class of tort is indicated by the old writ quare clausum fregit (wherefore he broke the close); which indicates that there must be an entry on the land in order to enable plaintiff to maintain the suit. In this case it is not alleged that there was any entry on the land in the possession of the plaintiff, and consequently I do not think that there can be any claim on an allegation to a trespass.

The only cases which might appear to be analogous are actions for slander of title; but clearly such a cause can only arise when the slander is uttered to a third person and damage arises in consequence. It is pointed out in Pollock's Law of Torts that slander of title is in truth a special variety of deceit, which differs from the ordinary type in that third persons, not the plaintiff himself, are induced by the defendant's falsehood to act in a manner causing damage to the plaintiff. I think that the only cause of action which the plaintiffs could have had, if at all, for the loss arising on the receipt of the notice in question would be a claim as on an action for deceit. But it is clear that the essential points for an action for deceit have not been alleged or proved in this case. It would be necessary for the plaintiffs to allege and prove not merely that the statements in the notice were untrue in fact, but also that the person making the statement knew the statement to be untrue or was culpably ignorant, that is, recklessly and consciously ignorant whether it be true or not, besides the further elements as to the intent and the acting upon it in the manner intended or contemplated and the consequent suffering of damage. It was held in Derry v. Peek (1) that there is no cause of action in such a case without both fraud and damage. Here there is no allegation of fraud; and no attempt has been made to prove fraud.

If we test the question on the analogy of cases of slander of title, the same point becomes apparent. Such cases are commonly cases in which a property is being sold by public auction and the sale is stopped and damage is caused to the owner by reason of disparaging remarks being made as to the title of the owner or as to the disadvantages which the purchaser will be under from certain facts.

(1) (1889) 14 A. C. 337; 58 L. J. Ch. 864; 61 L. T. 265; 38 W. R. 33; 1 Meg. 292; 54 J. P. 148.

It was held in the case of Pater v. Baker (2) that it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove actual malice to sustain the action. It has also been held in the case of Hargrave v. Le Breton (3) that if the statement is made in the bona fide assertion of the defendant's own right, real or supposed, to the property, no action lies. It was similarly held in Halsey v. Brotherhood (4) as regards warnings by the holder of a patent to the public warning them against infringement that the wrong is a malicious one in the only proper sense of the word and the absence of good faith is an essential condition of liability.

If that is the position in the case of a statement disparaging a title made to a stranger to the title, who is more likely to be misled than the owner or tenant interested in the property, a fortiori, the same points must be established when the statement is made to the owner or tenant so interested in disregarding the notice. The law encourages persons who have bona fide rights to give notice to other persons who are likely to be effected by such rights; and consequently it is obviously not the policy of the law to presume either malice or mala fides in such cases, but to require clear proof of the same. If the plaintiffs in this case had any doubt as to the right or wrong of the notice which they had received, it was to their interest to go at once to Ma Sein, who would have informed them of the strength of her title. If the plaintiffs were foolish enough to act on the notice, it was their own lookout and they acted at their own risk. As I have indicated above, I believe that if such cases were encouraged, it would quickly result in persons deliberately pretending to take a rest and to have been misled by the notice in the hopes of levying blackmail from the sender of the notice. Where a litigant fails in a case, it is more difficult for him to prove his bona fides than if he had won, but that is no reason for presuming that he was not bona fide, and it is often noticeable that many persons who bring erroneous claims are more confident of success than those who do succeed.

In the cases now before me there is no

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Appeal, second—Appeal filed after expiry of period of limitation—Time spent in obtaining copy of Trial Court's judgment, whether can be excluded.

Where under the rules of the High Court a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court is required to be attached to a memorandum of second appeal, and it appears that several days were spent in obtaining such copy, whereas copies of the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court were obtained within a comparatively short time, the appellant is entitled to the indulgence of the Court under s. 5 of the Limitation Act if the appeal is filed after the expiry of the period of limitation, provided it appears that he acted with diligence. [p. 911, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Pyapon, in Civil Appeal No. 97 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.

Lentaigne, J.—This is a second appeal against the judgment of the District Court of Pyapon confirming the judgment and decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Pyapon and dismissing the suit and appeal of the plaintiffs-appellants with costs in both Courts.

The appeal was presented on the 21st January 1925 and would be one day too late, if time is allowed for the one day occupied in obtaining the certified copies of the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court; but the appellant has applied that he should also be allowed the period of nine out of the ten days occupied in obtaining a certified copy of the judgment of the Trial Court which was applie for on the 4th November 1924 and was ready for delivery to appellant on the 13th November 1924. Technically, under s. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, the only deduction should be for the time occupied in obtaining the copies of the decree and judgment of the lower Appellate Court, but it has apparently been held in certain cases reported in unofficial reports that where the rules of the High Court required that a certified copy of the judgment of the Trial Court should also be filed with the appeal, the Court might in its discretion excuse the delay caused in obtaining the copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance. It is obvious that second appeals in the High Court are usually filed by Advocates who have not appeared in the lower Courts, and that it is difficult for them to advise on the question whether an appeal should be filed without seeing a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court, and in a case like that now before us where only one day was occupied in obtaining the copies of the lower Appellate Court, whilst the much longer period of ten days was occupied in obtaining the copy of the judgment of the Trial Court, there would appear to be some ground for exercising the discretion where only one extra day beyond the unusually short period of one day allowed would be required. The question seldom arises in cases where the more experienced Advocates have been concerned, because they usually have the common sense to apply for both sets of copies at the same time, with the result that even the shorter judgment and decree of the Appellate Court are entered as ready and supplied on the same date as the usually longer copy of the judgment of the Trial Court; but where an inexperienced Advocate is engaged or the client makes his own application for copies, we are apt to find first an application for the copies of the judgment of the Appellate Court and then an application for the equally necessary copy of the judgment of the Trial Court, as has occurred in this case. The question, therefore, resolves itself into the question whether the rules should be strictly enforced for the purpose of penalising inexperience. Under the rule it is open to an Advocate to file an appeal without the copy of the judgment of the Trial Court if he applies for time to comply with the rule requiring the filing of both judgments with the appeal; but that rule would not apply here where all copies had been previously obtained. If this were otherwise a suitable case for admission, I would, under the circumstances, exercise the discretion; but on a perusal of the evidence for the plaintiffs in the case, I have come to the conclusion that it is a case which should not be admitted in any event; and that the case against the appellants is much stronger even than appears on the judgments appealed against.

Heald, J.—I concur.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second civil appeal. The defendant is the appellant. There were nine plaintiffs. Admittedly they are the owners of abadi Nos. 124 and 117 in the village of Kakori. Their case was that in January 1922, the defendant, without any right, took possession of 6 biswas of land in these plots and planted a Banyan tree there, and in March 1922, he began to build a chabutra and a pucca wall. The actual construction at that time appears to be true. Defendant admits that he made the construction. In fact he calls the building a temple. No doubt he says that it is very much older, but a Commissioner, who was directed to report upon the point, reported both the building and the tree to be of about that age. There was no temple. The idols were there but they were in the open or in a box. Defendant, in the third paragraph of his written statement, admitted that he was in possession of a portion of land out of plots Nos. 124 and 117, but went on to say that his possession was not what the plaintiffs allege. That admission was evidently considered to be withdrawn, or at least much whittled down, because an issue was framed in these words ;

"Does the plot marked by red letters, A, B, C, D in the map filed by Babu Jhumman Lal form part of the No. 124 abadi? Have the plaintiffs been in possession of it within limitation?"

In the same written statement, in para. 12, it was stated that the plaintiffs are in possession of some land in plots Nos. 40 and 74, which belonged to the defendant, and that there had been an agreement between the parties that plaintiffs might keep possession of that, and in return they would not object to the building of the temple on Nos. 124 and 117. It has been found, however, by the Courts below that the agreement as regards Nos. 40 and 74 was in consideration of land is plot No. 412 and had nothing to do with these plots Nos. 124 and 117. The usual course was taken of directing a commission to take measurements on the spot before issues were framed. The object, no doubt, was that the issues should be directed to the real points of dispute. Accordingly one Nabi Bakhsh, an amin, was appointed, and he submitted a report in which he said that the land in question was part of plaintiffs' plot No. 124. Objections were taken to his report, and it was rejected by the Court on the ground that he had not taken his measurements on a proper basis of fixed points agreed upon between parties. Accordingly a second commission was issued in favour of Babu Jhumman Lal, a Pleader. The learned Munsif, after considering a considerable mass of oral evidence and also the report of the Commissioner, decided the suit in favour of plaintiffs and gave them a decree for possession of the land.

The defendant appealed, and the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that none of the oral evidence was trustworthy. He said, "We have got no satisfactory evidence to decide the point in issue and we have only to fall back upon the report of the Commissioner, Babu Jhumman Lal, whose report is the only satisfactory evidence upon the point on the record." Basing himself on that report the learned Subordinate Judge varied the Munsif's decree by allowing the plaintiff slightly less land than had been given him by that decree.

The defendant comes here on second appeal. He admits that the finding against which he appeals is a finding of fact, but he says that it is vitiated by an error of law, namely, a misconstruction of the report and map of the Commissioner. This report being a document, a misconstruction of it is an error in law. The respondents contend that the report of the Commissioner is not documentary evidence which might be misconstrued. It is, in fact, an investigation made by him and it takes the place of oral evidence. I think that this contention is sound. It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Midnapur Zemindary Co. Ltd. v. Uma Charan Mandal (1) that it is not every document, the construction of which is to be treated as involving an issue of law. I know of no authority for saying that the report of a Commissioner, under O. XXVI, r. 10, is to be regarded as a document, the constructing of which involves a point of law. This is sufficient for the determination of the appeal which is dismissed with costs as involving no point of law.

The cross-objection is not pressed in view of this finding. The cross-objection is dismissed. No order as to costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 30, 477—Valuable security—Invalid document, whether valuable security—Intention to cause damage or loss, whether necessary.

A document, which upon certain evidence being given may be held to be invalid, but on the face of it creates or purports to create a right in immoveable property, although a decree could not be passed upon it, falls within the purview of the definition of "valuable security" in s. 30 of the Penal Code. In the absence of an intention to cause damage or injury a conviction under s. 477 of the Penal Code cannot be maintained. [p. 914, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Basti, dated the 22nd May 1925.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Basti under s. 477, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 2½ years' rigorous imprisonment.

The charge against him is that he destroyed a patta which he and Sheo Agyan had executed in favour of Sheobalak, son of Jagai, on the 11th of February 1925.

It appears that there was a suit filed in the Court of the Munsif of Basti by the accused and some others against Jagai for a declaration that certain land was their khudkasht. Jagai defended the suit on the ground that the land was his occupancy tenancy. Jagai was referred by the Munsif under the provisions of s. 202 of the Tenancy Act to the Revenue Court to get his status qua this land declared. In the meantime a riot took place in the village, and he the appellant, and several others were prosecuted for offences of rioting and hurt. While that case was pending, a patta (together with a kabuliyat) was executed on the 1st of October 1924 in favour of Sheobalak, son of Jagai, relating to the land which was in dispute in the Court of the Munsif. This patta along with many others was executed the same day, and this patta was kept with Thakur Ansuman Singh, Vakil, at whose house they were executed, on condition that the entire litigation, both civil and criminal, was to be compromised after which the patta would be registered, and Thakur Ansuman Singh was to hand over the patta to the adversary of the party that did not carry out the terms of the compromise. The land comprised in the patta belonged to a family of six, of which Ram Harakh and Sheo Agyan were members, and the patta although written on behalf of all the members of the family, was only signed by Ram Harakh and Sheobalak.

After this Jagai confessed judgment in the civil case and a decree was recorded by the Munsif against him. It appears that an attempt was made to compromise the riot case, but the Trying Magistrate did not allow the case to be compromised. The result was that Ram Harakh and others were convicted and sentenced to substantial fines. Ram Harakh refused to register the patta and thereupon Jagai instituted a suit to set aside the "confession decree" on the ground of fraud. This suit was instituted on the 18th of November 1924 against all six members of the family whose names appear in the first part of the patta, praying that the patta be registered. On the 4th of January 1925 a written statement was filed by Ram Harakh and Sheo Agyan in that suit, and the averments of fact with reference to this patta were not traversed by these two persons. Various legal pleas were taken as to the validity of the patta, but, as I have stated, there is no controversy as to what was written in the patta. It appears that on the 11th of February the clerk of Ansuman Singh gave this patta to Jagai, and Ram Harakh and Jagai had a dispute as to the possession of this document, the result of which was that a portion of it was left in possession of Jagai, and another portion in that of the accused Ram Harakh. These are the main facts upon which the charge has been framed against Ram Harakh. Jagai has in Court given details which are at variance with those given by him in the first report, but there can be no doubt, whether the account given by Jagai in the first report is correct or whether the account now given by him is correct, that the patta was torn in a struggle between Jagai and Ram Harakh, and that it is proved beyond all doubt, and that the account given of it by Balramji, to whom Jagai made a statement immediately after the occurrence, is substantially correct. The points for consideration in this case are:—

(1) whether the document was or was not a valuable security, and (2) whether Ram Harakh destroyed the document with intent to cause damage or injury to Jagai.

It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that this document was not a valuable security, inasmuch as the document purports to have been executed by six persons, but that two only signed the document, and that, therefore, it was not a document which could be said to be a valuable security within the meaning of s. 30 of the Indian Penal Code. I am, however, of opinion that the document comes within the definition of valuable security in s. 30. That document purports to create a legal right in Sheobalak in the land referred to therein. The use of the words "which is" or "purports to be" in s. 30 of the Indian Penal Code to my mind indicates that a document, which, upon certain evidence being given, may be held to be invalid but on the face of it creates, or purports to create a right in immovable property, although a decree could not be passed upon the document, is contemplated within the purview of that section. Had it not been so, any forged document, if the forgery was admitted, or any document which was not executed or stamped according to law and on which no decree could be passed by a Civil Court, could not be called a valuable security. In this case we have not the written statement in the civil suit of the other four members of the family. If the two persons, namely, Ram Harakh and Sheo Agyan had signed the document as representing the family, there was nothing illegal in that. Reference has been made to the cases reported as Jawahir Thakur v. Emperor (1) and Ramasami Iyer v. Emperor (2) by the Government Pleader. I do not think that these cases have any bearing on the point before me. They are clearly distinguishable.

With regard to the next point, I am of opinion that the prosecution has not been able to show that the act of Ram Harakh in destroying the patta was done with the intention of causing any damage or injury to Jagai. The facts as set out in the plaint of Jagai in the civil suit are admitted by the accused. It is admitted that the patta only bore the signature of Ram Harakh and Sheo Agyan. There is no controversy on any point regarding the facts, and I do not see how it could be said that Ram Harakh in any way intended to cause damage or injury to Jagai, and in the absence of any such intention the charge under s. 477 of the Indian Penal Code fails. I am, therefore, of opinion that the act of Ram Harakh was not proved by the prosecution to have been with intent to cause damage or injury. The act of destroying the patta may have been a very foolish act, but I am of opinion that the conviction of Ram Harakh under s. 477 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be maintained. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence of Ram Harakh. He need not surrender to his bail.

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 315; 38 A. 430; 14 A. L. J. 643; 17 Cr. L. J. 203.

(2) 43 Ind. Cas. 593; 41 M. 589; 19 Cr. L. J. 177.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 227, 234, 235—Misjoinder of charges—Offences committed at different times—Single trial—Irregularity—Procedure—Striking out of one charge and conviction for another, legality of.

Under ss. 234 and 235 of the Cr. P. C., a Magistrate is entitled to try an accused person for more offences than one in one trial, if the offences have been committed in the course of the same transaction, or for three different offences of the same kind committed during the course of a year. [p. 915, col. 1.]

What can be done under s. 227, Cr. P. C., is only to alter or modify the charge at any time before judgment. The section does not permit a Court to try two distinct offences, such as assault and abuse, which are in no way connected with one another, and which were committed at different times, in the same trial. [p. 915 col. 2.]

Where it is discovered that two charges have been improperly joined together the proper procedure is to initiate separate trials in respect of each charge. [p. 915, col. 1.]

Where a Magistrate on discovering that he had improperly joined together two charges merely struck out one of the charges already framed and convicted the accused under the other charges:

Held, that the procedure adopted was illegal and that the conviction could not be sustained. [p. 915, col. 2.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tanjore, in Criminal Appeal No. 16 of 1924, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate, Papanasam, in C. C. No. 120 of 1923.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Panchapegesa Sastri, for the Complainant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Second Class Magistrate of Papanasam, who convicted the petitioner under s. 504, Indian Penal Code, confirmed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tanjore. The Magistrate inquired into the complaint preferred by the complainant and framed a charge under ss. 352 and 504. At the time of writing the judgment, he discovered that the occurrences were different and that the charges under ss. 504 and 352 could not be tried together and finding the illegality of the charges he struck out the charge framed, and framed a charge under s. 504 alone, against the accused and asked the accused whether the prosecution witnesses were to be re-called and examined and whether he had any defence witnesses to examine. The accused stated that he did not want to examine the witnesses and the Magistrate convicted him under s. 504.

It is contended before me that this procedure is irregular. Under the Cr. P. C. a Magistrate is entitled to try an accused for more than one offence in one trial, if the offences have been committed in the course of the same transaction or three different offences of the same kind committed during the course of a year. Here the offences were of different kinds committed at different times. The one was an assault and the other one was an abuse. Therefore the Magistrate was wrong in trying the two charges in one trial. When he discovered the irregularity of it, instead of starting a fresh enquiry in respect of the two offences, that is, separate enquiries, one in respect of s. 504 and another in respect of s. 352 he struck out the charge framed already and framed a charge under s. 504. This procedure is not sanctioned by s. 227, Cr. P. C.; and what could be done under s. 227 is only to alter or modify the charge at any time before judgment. But it does not permit the Court to try two distinct offences which are in no way connected with one another, in the same trial. That the procedure adopted by the Sub-Magistrate is illegal is clear from the judgment of the late Chief Justice in Manavala Chetty v. Emperor (1).

The conviction is, therefore, set aside and considering the length of time that has elapsed since the occurrence I do not think I should order a re-trial. The fine imposed on the petitioner will be refunded to him.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190 (1) (c), 191—Magistrate transferring person from witness-box to dock—Right of such person to be tried by another Court—Error of law—Revision.

A Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence, not of offender. Therefore, if he transfers a person from the witness-box to the dock, he does not act under s. 190 (c), Cr. P. C., and take cognizance of an offence at all. Consequently the person so transferred is not entitled, under s. 191 of the Code, to be tried by some other Court. [p. 916, col. 1.]

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in criminal revision. The order complained of is one by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow refusing to interfere with an order of the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate's order was one transferring a case in the following circumstances:—

Bhawani Din lodged a complaint against the present applicant, Sri Kishan, charging him with an offence under s. 420, Indian Penal Code. This complaint was lodged before the Bench Magistrates of Kakori, who have power to receive complaints. They took cognizance of the case on the complaint. They issued process and they proceeded to try the case. One Debi Dayal, patwari, was produced as prosecution witness. After hearing his deposition, the learned Magistrates transferred him from the witness-box to the dock. Thereupon, Debi Dayal applied for a transfer on the ground that the Magistrates had taken cognizance of the offence, so far as he was concerned, under s. 190 (1) (c), and, therefore, that s. 191 was applicable, and that he was entitled to be tried by some other Court. The District Magistrate, taking the same view of the law, transferred the case to the Court of Syed Hasan Zaheer, I. C. S. Sri Kishan, co-accused, objecting to this transfer which had been made without hearing him, applied in revision to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge, taking the same view of the law as the District Magistrate, refused to interfere, holding that the District Magistrate was bound to act as he did. Sri Kishan and Shiam Lal, who are both accused in the case, now apply to this Court in revision.

The first point for decision is, whether the Magistrates when they put Debi Dayal in the dock, were acting under s. 190 (1) (c). My own view is that they were not. I hold that when they put Debi Dayal in the dock they were not taking cognizance of the offence at all. They had already done that when they decided to issue process against the accused. As was pointed out by a Full Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in Mehrab v. Emperor (1), a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence, not of an offender. When he adds an accused person at any stage of the proceedings he is not acting under s. 190 at all. In Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (2), the facts were that a complaint was filed before a Magistrate against certain persons, of whom Jagat Chandra Mazumdar was not one. The Magistrate summoned and examined the complainant's witnesses before issuing process. Then, after hearing evidence, he drew up a charge-sheet against certain persons including the petitioner. It was held that cognizance had been taken under s. 190 (1) (a) of the Code, and not under s. 190 (1) (c). In Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar (3), there was a complaint before a Magistrate.

(2) 26 C. 786; 3 C. W. N. 491; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1103;

There was a proceeding under s. 202, and there was a withdrawal of the complaint. The Magistrate refused to drop the case and ordered the witnesses to be summoned. After examining the witnesses he issued process against the petitioner. The learned Sessions Judge referred the matter to the High Court because he considered that after the complaint was withdrawn, the action taken by the Magistrate would have to be under s. 190 (1) (c), and that the Magistrate was not empowered to act under that section. The High Court, however, refused to interfere, considering that the Magistrate having begun to act under s. 190 (1) (a), continued to do so. There were two of the petitioners who were made accused on evidence which came to light after the complaint. This case, therefore, also supports my view. No doubt there is a case to the contrary, namely, Khudiram Mookerjee v. Queen-Empress (4), but in that case no authorities were referred to, and that case was itself considered in Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Das Malakar (3) and was by implication dissented from. I know of no other authority for the view taken by the District Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge.

I have now to consider whether I ought to interfere in revision. I do not think so. The order of transfer proceeds upon an error of law. But apart from that error it may, for aught I know, be a proper order. The District Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the transfer. If he wishes to do so, he has jurisdiction to transfer the case back to the Bench. I have laid down the law, and I leave it to the discretion of the District Magistrate to act or not as he pleases in the matter. His order of transfer is not set aside.

MEWA RAM AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—
ACCUSED.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 420, 421, 439—Appeal preferred through mukhtar—Subsequent appeal through jail, rejection of, effect of—Revision.

Where in ignorance of the fact that a convict had already preferred an appeal against his conviction through a mukhtar, the Sessions Judge rejected an appeal subsequently preferred by the convict through Jail:

Held, that the High Court had, in revision, power to set aside the order of rejection and to direct the Sessions Judge to re-hear the appeal after giving the convict an opportunity of appearing by Counsel.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Budaun, dated the 11th July 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—I have the honour to report for the information of the Hon'ble High Court that a criminal appeal on behalf of four persons Mewa Ram, Khiali Ram, Sobha Ram and Chunni Lal was presented in this Court on 12th June 1925 through a mukhtar along with an application for bail. As I had been permitted by the Hon'ble High Court to avail of the first half of the vacation, the application for bail together with the appeal was sent to the Sessions and Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, who was to receive and pass orders on urgent criminal applications of this Judgeship during that period. The papers reached Bareilly on the 13th June, but the postman delivered the envelope containing them to the Subordinate Judge on 6th July 1925 when the Courts re-opened. The Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, sent the papers to me on 7th and I received them on the 8th July. On 16th June four appeals on behalf of the very same four persons were received through jail. Through mistake of my office it was not brought to my notice that an appeal through a mukhtar on behalf of the very same persons was presented on 12th June and was sent to Bareilly with an application for bail. After the expiry of the usual period of one week, which is allowed to enable an accused to engage a Pleader to support his jail appeal, I took up the jail appeals on 27th of June for disposal and after perusing the judgment and going through the record rejected them summarily. If an appeal through a mukhtar had been presented after the disposal of the jail appeals, then according to the ruling of the Hon'ble Chief Justice and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Piggott the subsequent appeal would have been rejected. But in this case an appeal through a mukhtar was presented before the jail appeals were received, heard and decided and it was through the mistake of the office that the institution of the appeal through mukhtar was not brought to my notice when I decided the jail appeals. Under s. 421 (1) of the Cr. P. C. the appeal presented by the mukhtar cannot be disposed of without hearing him.

I, therefore, beg to suggest that if the Hon'ble Court thinks fit my order rejecting the jail appeals summarily be set aside and I may be permitted to hear the appeal presented by the mukhtar, or any other order, which the Hon'ble Court thinks fit, may be passed.

The clerk of the office, who is at fault, is being punished and the Postal Authorities are being asked to make enquiry into the long delay made in delivery of the envelope to the addressee at Bareilly.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Sessions Judge of Budaun has reported that while jail appeals on behalf of four persons, Mewa Ram, Khiali Ram, Sobha Ram and Chunni Lal were pending a petition of appeal on behalf of some persons was filed through a mukhtar. The Sessions Judge was away on vacation at the time, and the latter petition of appeal, which was accompanied by an application for bail was placed before the Sessions and Subordinate Judge of Bareilly who was receiving urgent criminal applications relating to the Budaun Judgeship at that time. Owing to some delay in the post the learned Sessions Judge decided and summarily rejected the jail appeals in ignorance that an appeal from a mukhtar in which Counsel was to be heard had been presented. The learned Judge asks if he has power to set aside his own order dismissing the appeals. He has no such power, but this Court has power to do so, and in the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court I hereby set aside the orders rejecting the appeals of the four persons mentioned above, and direct the learned Judge to re-hear the appeals after giving them an opportunity of appearing by Counsel,

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 6—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 149, 325—Rioting—Statements made by members of unlawful assembly prior to occurrence, whether admissible—Buddhist Law, Ecclesiastical—Pongyis, duties of—Participation in politics, whether permissible.

Where a procession attempts to pass through certain streets of a town in defiance of an order of the Superintendent of Police prohibiting it from passing through such streets, and a collision takes place between the members of the procession and the Police force resulting in a riot, evidence led on behalf of the prosecution in the riot case to prove statements made by the members of the procession showing their determination to force their way into the streets into which their entry was prohibited in spite of the resistance of the Police is admissible as forming part of the res gestæ and indicating that the intention of the members of the procession was to ignore the order of the Superintendent of Police. [p. 921, col. 1.]

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law it is the bounden duty of the laity to do their utmost to discourage pongys from transgressing the bonds which the vinaya lays down for them and the rules which, by donning the yellow robe, they voluntarily promised to observe. And it is the bounden duty of a pongyi who desires to participate in party politics to put off the yellow robe and re-assume the responsibilities as well as the privileges of ordinary civil life. [p. 922, col. 2.]

Pongyis are subject to the laws of the land they live in. If they are dissatisfied with such laws it is not for them to oppose the authorities but to move to other parts where the laws will be more congenial. So long as the civil laws are not in conflict with the rules to be observed by monks they must be obeyed by them. [p. 922, col. 2; p. 923, col. 1.]

According to Burman Buddhist ideas he who dons the yellow robe has one of two duties to perform:—

- (1) to practise austerities and meditation in order to work out his own salvation; or
- (2) to learn the sacred scriptures and to impart the knowledge to others.

Those who follow the first are known as Patibatti Sangha and those who adopt the second as Pariyatti Sangha.

When a pongyi belongs neither to the Pariyatti nor to the Patibatti, he is no longer entitled to live on the offerings of the laity, nor to receive respect from them. He has no raison d'être. [p. 923, cols. 1 & 2.]

In attempting to oppose the orders of the executive a monk not only breaks his own personal law but sets an example to the laity which is greatly to be lamented. [p. 923, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mandalay, in Sessions Trial No. 25 of 1924.

Mr. Lambert, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—By way of preface we take this opportunity of thanking the learned Advocates in this case for the great help we have received from them in dealing with this heavy appeal. Mr. Lambert has stated the appellants' case with great clearness and has argued it with great care and ability.

This is an appeal from the convictions and sentences passed upon eleven appellants by the Sessions Judge of Mandalay in what is commonly spoken of as the Mandalay Riot case.

The appellants were found guilty of offences under s. 326, read with s. 149, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced as follows:—

- | | | |
|----------------------|----------------|---------------------------------|
| (1) Maung Tok | ... | 7 years' rigorous imprisonment. |
| (2) Maung Saw Maung | 2 | " " |
| (3) U Thuseikta | ... 18 months' | " " |
| (4) Maung Mya | ... 7 years' | " " |
| (5) U Zagaya | ... 1 year's | " " |
| (6) Maung Maung Gyi | 3 years' | " " |
| (7) C. P. Khin Maung | 4 | " " |
| (8) Maung Shwe Po | ... 1 year's | " " |
| (9) Maung San Nyun | 7 years' | " " |
| (10) Maung Saung | 18 months' | " " |
| (11) Maung Tun Aung | | |
| Gyan | 7 years' | " " |

In addition Maung San Nyun was found guilty under s. 325, Indian Penal Code. He was sentenced to suffer seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 325, Indian Penal Code, besides one year's rigorous imprisonment under s. 326 read with s. 145, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run concurrently.

As stated by the appellants' Advocate and indeed what is familiar to any resident in Burma the advent of the Constitutional Reforms in Burma led to a split in the ranks of the General Council of Burmese Associations familiarly known as the G. C. B. A., one party known as the twenty-one or Council Entry Party urging co-operation with Government for the successful working of the Reforms and the other the Hlaing-Pu-Gyaw Party whose policy was to boycott the Councils and refuse to co-operate with Government. The name is derived from the leaders of the party. U

Chit Hlaing, a Barrister of Moulmein, U Pu, a Pleader of Tharrawaddy and U Tun Aung Gyaw, the 11th appellant, Manager of the Burma Urban Co-operative Bank whose head-quarters are in Rangoon with branches, among other places, at Mandalay. In 1923 certain politicians endeavoured to bring about a re-union between the two parties and in this connection formed an association called the Union Party with its head-quarters at Mandalay and with one U Kyaw Yan as President. It is in evidence that certain Buddhist monks, more especially those of the Mogoung Taik, sympathised with the Union Party. The Hlaing-Pu-Gyaw Party were opposed to the policy of the Union Party and were backed by a powerful association of Buddhist monks called the Sangha Samaggi. The Union Party in August last invited a leading Buddhist monk, the Weluwun Sayadaw, to come to Mandalay and deliver a lecture at the Eindawya Pagoda on the advantages of good fellowship and unity. The Hlaing-Pu-Gyaw Party invited a leading monk of their party, one U Ottama, at present undergoing three years' rigorous imprisonment for an offence under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, to visit Mandalay and deliver a series of lectures. The principal organization of the latter party in Mandalay is the Ratanabon Council whose head-quarters were in the premises of the Burma Urban Co-operative Bank in 84th Street, of which Bank the 11th appellant was the head. The Ratanabon Council appointed a Reception Committee to organize the welcome to be given to U Ottama consisting of U Nyaneinda, Maung Tok, the 1st appellant, C. P. Khin Maung, the 7th appellant, Maung Maung Gyi, 6th appellant, Maung Kyu, Saya Lon and Ba Than. Handbills were printed and circulated inviting the public to attend the reception and to join in the procession keeping to the left hand side of the road. The route was to be from the Shanzu Railway Station through the Arakan Pagoda up 84th Street through the Zegyo Bazaar along 26th Street turning south past the Mogoung Taik to the Sagu Taik whose monks are adherents of the Sangha Samaggi where U Ottama was to stay during his visit. It was not until the 15th August that application dated the 14th was made by the 2nd appellant, Saw Maung, Secretary of the Ratanabon Council, for a permit for the procession, both to the Deputy Commissioner and District Superintendent of Police. No mention of the route was made in the application itself, but it was indicated in the handbill attached to the application. The Deputy Commissioner was absent on tour, but the head-quarters assistant sanctioned the application, but his sanction was not communicated till 8 A. M., on the 16th and did not lay down any route for the procession. The District Superintendent of Police at first sanctioned the procession and the proposed route, but before the permit was issued circumstances were brought to his notice which led him to alter the proposed route. A deputation waited on him on the afternoon of the 15th pointing out that on that day a procession of first four gharries and afterwards 50 gharries, filled with pongyis with objectionable placards and bands playing, encircled the Pitaka Taik where the Union Party were holding a meeting, with the object of disturbing it and that if the Ottama procession were permitted to pass along the proposed route past the Mogoung Taik they anticipated trouble by the processionists annoying and provoking the monks there who were opposed to them. He thereupon altered the route by making it go first along Des Vœux Road and thence north to the Sagu Taik. For the appellants it is urged that the District Superintendent of Police's action in this respect was unreasonable. We consider that the District Superintendent of Police was fully justified. The route prescribed by the District Superintendent of Police was shorter and more direct and admittedly broader than one part of the original route at or near the Zegyo Bazaar, but the deciding factor from the point of law and order was that it obviated a likely collision at the Mogoung Taik.

The District Superintendent of Police's permit with the new route prescribed was conveyed to the Ratanabon Council by U Po Hnon, Sub-Divisional Police Officer East, at about 8 P. M. on the 15th. He states that he was accompanied by Inspector Udailak Ram and the witness Ba Tun. He met Tun Aung Gyaw, Maung Mya, Maung Tok, Saw Maung and three others whom he did not notice. Of these latter, Ba Tun states that C. P. Khin Maung was one. Po Hnon treated Tun Aung Gyaw as the responsible leader and gave him the order which he read and passed to Maung Mya who in return read it and passed it Saw Maung. The change of route was objected to and Po Hnon referred them to the District Superintendent of Police. In conversation Po Hnon referred the pongyis' procession of gharries at the Betaka Taik that afternoon and Tun Aung Gyaw told him that the pongyis threatened to go on foot to the Betaka when he hired fifty gharries and paid Rs. 240 to drive them round it. It is urged that this is unlikely as the fare would not be Re. 1 each. Tun Aung Gyaw may have exaggerated the extent of his bounty. It is not uncommon or he may have had to pay as the Sessions Judge suggests extra to induce the gharry-wallahs to undertake what might well bring injuries to themselves and their gharries. But we see no reason to disbelieve U Po Hnon in this particular, as his evidence has impressed us as truthful and has been given with care not to press it beyond what he actually observed. This incident must be borne in mind when considering the presence and co-operation of a large body of pongyis at the time of the riot. Saw Maung, the Secretary, sent an application to the District Superintendent of Police to revise his order and sanction the original route proposed about 11 P. M. On this being communicated to the District Superintendent of Police early next morning he refused to alter the route and gave orders for this refusal to be communicated at once. Ba Zin, Head Constable, took the message and was received by Maung Mya who declined to receive a verbal order and refused to allow the Head Constable to speak to Tun Aung Gyaw who with Maung Tok, C. P. Khin Maung and Saw Maung were seated at a table within hearing. The written order was communicated about 11 A. M., to the Ratanabon Council Secretary, Saw Maung, who replied by Ex. F, stating that he didn't think the original route could be changed and that the District Magistrate had granted permission to hold the procession along the original route. As the Sessions Judge has remarked the latter statement is inaccurate as no route was prescribed in the letter from Deputy Commissioner's Office. The Ratanabon Council must have known perfectly well that the District Superintendent of Police was the proper officer to prescribe the route for the procession and their duty was, if dissatisfied with his decision, to get it reversed on application to his superior, or else to obey it. It is perfectly clear that they chose to do neither.

It may be a matter for regret that the District Superintendent of Police does not seem to have realized the full significance of Ex. F, as if he had, one would have expected him to have requisitioned such a force of Military Police as would have ensured compliance with his request. But the question whether a different disposition of the Police or Military Police would have prevented the riot or ensured a different result is not before us but rather the intention of the appellants.

Before the train conveying U Ottama arrived at Shanzu, Maung Mya and Tun Aung Gyaw were informed of the District Superintendent of Police's order confirming the previous orders that the procession was to turn west into DesVœux Road, and both appellants said that they had got the District Magistrate's order permitting them to go along the route advertised by the Reception Committee. U Ottama arrived at Shanzu Station shortly after 1 P. M. on the 16th August and he entered the Arakan Pagoda to pray. When he came out of the west entrance the procession formed and started along 84th Street on which tram lines are laid. A number of pongyis led the van. Then came what is referred to as the sundawgyi. It means the offering for the Lord Buddha. It generally consists of the food served up to pongyis and other requisites allowable to pongyis according to the vinaya. But no sundawgyi is ever offered after mid-day as pongyis are not allowed any meals after that hour. This so called sundawgyi seems to have been a pretext for doing exceptional honour to U Ottama and carrying him round in royal state. The sundawgyi was followed by osi players and men dancing, then came women; and U Ottama in his litter with a golden umbrella over his head. Under the Burmese regime any commoner assuming any of the insignia of royalty especially in public would very soon die of official colic. To the Burmese mind only those equipped with proper karma can safely assume high dignities or the insignia thereof and the more ignorant masses are only too ready to assume the converse that those who do assume such insignia belong to high estate and are possessed of karma which makes them independent of the law, and they are eager to follow in the train of such persons.

From the evidence of the two detective officers Maung Talok and Maung Ba Shin, Maung Tok, Maung Saw Maung, U Thuseikta, Maung Mya and Tun Aung Gyaw were with or near U Ottama when the procession left the Arakan Pagoda.

Another significant feature is that long before the procession appeared pongyis had begun to concentrate in front of the Ratanabon Council premises and the Pariyatti Taik immediately to the south of DesVœux Road in 84th Street. Trams stopped here and several witnesses depose to pongyis visiting several trams and requesting the passengers both pongyis and laymen to alight; so that a large crowd had concentrated here when the van of the procession arrived. The District Superintendent of Police and about 40 men were stationed immediately to the north of DesVœux Road in 84th Street outside Ma Mya's building. It is noteworthy that though the procession was advertised to pass north up 84th Street to the Zegyo Bazaar no appreciable gathering of pongyis or laymen had concentrated north of Ma Mya's building. There is a considerable amount of evidence about statements by members of the procession and by those concentrated outside the Ratanabon Council premises of their determination to force their way through the Police. The learned Advocate for the appellants has objected to its admissibility as hearsay. We consider that it was rightly admitted. It indeed forms part of the res gestæ and indicates that the promoters' intention to ignore the District Superintendent of Police's orders had been communicated to sections of the crowd.

When the van of the procession neared DesVœux Road the pongyis concentrated to the south-west side, joined in and swelled the van which moved north till stopped by the District Superintendent of Police and the Police. The judgment of the Sessions Judge sets out in some detail what occurred and we do not intend to repeat it. For the appellants it is urged that the whole affray was unpremeditated, that the Union Party had an office in Maung Mya's building and that stones thrown were from that building at the processionists and that this precipitated the riot. We consider that it is clearly established that the first stones did not come from Maung Mya's building, but from the south-west corner, i.e., from the direction of the Paryatti Taik, and that the first stones thrown were succeeded so quickly by such a shower of stones as to negative the suggestion of accident or unpremeditation. The Trial Court has classified the appellants into major and minor accused. Among the former are Maung Tok, Saw Maung, Maung Maung Gyi, C. P. Khin Maung, Maung Mya and Tun Aung Gyaw, while Shwe Po, Maung Saung, San Nyun, U Thuseikta and U Zagaya were among the latter or followers. The Sessions Judge has dealt with the evidence in detail and analysed it, and on this evidence we are bound to accept his finding except as to the following appellants, Maung Maung Gyi, Maung Saung and Maung Shwe Po. We consider that it is clearly established that there was a conspiracy in which Tun Aung Gyaw, Maung Tok, Maung Mya, C. P. Khin Maung and Saw Maung took a leading part to overawe the Police and disobey their lawful orders, that in pursuance of this conspiracy there was an unlawful assembly with the common object of overawing the Police and disobeying their orders, and that in pursuance of that common object, offences under ss. 325 and 326, Indian Penal Code, were committed by members of the unlawful assembly. While we cannot accede to the argument of the appellants' Advocate to regard the riot as over once the District Superintendent of Police left the scene, we think for the reasons given by the Sessions Judge that it will be sufficient if the appellants are punished under ss. 325 and 326 read with s. 149, Indian Penal Code.

We shall now deal with the findings of the Sessions Judge which we are not prepared to accept.

Maung Maung Gyi.—It is clear that this appellant was not present at the Ratanabon Council on the evening of the 15th when the orders of the District Superintendent of Police were communicated. He allowed his name to appear among the members of the Reception Committee. He was present at the station on U Ottama's arrival and he was present at the earlier part of the riot, but there is no evidence that he took an active part in urging the mob to break through. In these circumstances we consider that there is not enough evidence on the record to justify us in classing him as one of the leaders. His appeal will be allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside.

Maung Saung.—The evidence of his throwing stones rests upon the two detective witnesses Maung Talok and Ba Shin. The learned Sessions Judge considers that certain of Ba Shin's statements are inaccurate to say the least though he regards, Maung Talok as a truthful witness. Even though truthful, in a situation so full of changing incidents as a riot, corroboration is very needful. It is true that Maung Kyu states that he saw him among the crowd that threw stones at the Police, but he does not say that Maung Saung actually threw. In these circumstances we think that the case is not established beyond a reasonable doubt. His appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside.

Maung Shwe Po.—The case against him rests upon the evidence of Maung Kywe, Paw Byu and Maung Thoung. The lower Court considers Maung Kywe to be a truthful witness but he only states that he saw Shwe Po and Maung Daung among the crowd who were throwing stones, not that Shwe Po actually threw stones. Maung Daung was discharged by the Committing Magistrate. Paw Byu does not inspire, one with confidence and his evidence does not go any further than Maung Kywe's. Maung Thoung alone states that Shwe Po and Maung Yeik (discharged) threw stones. He appears to be a casual witness. Though present as he says at the corner of Des Vœux Road he cannot or will not give evidence against any other accused. We do not consider that the case against Shwe Po is established beyond a reasonable doubt. His conviction and sentence will be set aside.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has urged us in case we hold them guilty to reduce their sentences. We are unable to do so. The riot has resulted in four deaths and a large number of injuries, a considerable number of the latter being grievous. As far as the leaders were concerned, their intention, their common object was deliberate and the results that followed were such as a reasonable person must know were likely to be committed in prosecution of that common object.

This case is another illustration of the growing participation of the yellow robe in public affrays. And we desire to emphasize the grave responsibility incurred by any political leader who employs or allies himself with pongyis for any party object. From the evidence on the record there is no doubt that among those who assaulted the Police the majority were pongyis, yet such is their hold over the people that only two of them have been sent up for trial. It is the bounden duty of the laity to do their utmost to discourage pongyis from transgressing the bonds which the vinaya lays down for them and the rules which, by donning the yellow robe, they voluntarily promised to observe. And it is the bounden duty of a pongyi who desires to participate in party politics to put off the yellow robe and re-assume the responsibilities as well as the privileges of ordinary civil life.

In 1226 B. E. (1864) at the request of the King of Burma the Thathanabaing in Council in the presence of monks and laymen examined exhaustively the sacred Pali texts, the commentaries and sub-commentaries bearing on the question of the status and duties of a Buddhist monk.

Relying on the Pali text which begins:—

"Na mundake na samano, abhato alikam bhanam, icchalobha samapanno samano kim bhavissati. The mere shaving of the head and begging with an alms bowl does not make one a rahan (pongyi). How can any one be a rahan who does not control his senses, does not observe his personal law, discourses on subjects unprofitable (to a rahan) and is still filled with a craving for worldly things." The Thathanabaing in Council declared that those who having entered the order did not observe their personal law (The vinaya) were not true rahans; that laymen who supported such persons were like the man who waters a poison tree and that when they pass out of this existence both the pseudo raahan and his supporter will be consigned to avichi or the lowest of the hells.

On page 391, Volume XIII, Sacred Books of the East, which is a translation of the vinaya text by the late Professor Rhys Davids, we have this passage "I prescribe O Bhikkhus, that you obey Kings."

This was in connection with the request of the King of Maghada that the Sangha should begin their lent on a certain day fixed by him. When the Bhikkhus told this to the Lord Buddha, he replied that Kings must be obeyed, that is Bhikkhus are subject to the laws of the land they live in. If they are dissatisfied with such laws it is not for them to oppose the authorities but to move to other parts where the laws ground that as he had been cross-examined at length his examination as defence witness was not necessary :

Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the accused as the result of the refusal of the Magistrate to summon the witness, it could not be said that the Magistrate had acted entirely without jurisdiction. [p. 925, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad, dated the 17th March 1925, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 16th February 1925.

Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. D. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Opposite Party,

JUDGMENT.—This was an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction made by some persons who were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Arrah on the 16th of February last of offences punishable under the provisions of ss. 143 and 379 coupled with s. 34, Indian Penal Code. The applicants appear to have been sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under the provisions of s. 379, Indian Penal Code and in default of payment thereof to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months, no separate sentence was passed upon them in connection with the provisions of s. 143, Indian Penal Code.

The only ground which has been put forward upon which it is urged that this Court should interfere, is because it is suggested that there has been a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction by the Deputy Magistrate in connection with the procedure. It is unnecessary to go into the facts relating to the offences with which these men were charged further than to say that the affair related to blocking up of a water-course. In the course of the trial which proceeded in the usual manner a certain Sub-Inspector of Police was examined as a witness for the prosecution, he was cross-examined at considerable length by the defence. Now it would seem that the defence wished to call this Sub-Inspector either as a defence witness or for the purpose of what was in effect further cross-examination, and on the 28th of January last it seems that the Magistrate at that time was ready to agree that this should be done. At a later stage, however, namely, on the 9th of February he altered his view. The note in the order sheet of the 28th of January last so far as it is here material, reads: "The defence prays that Sub-Inspector of Sahar who had been summoned has not turned up to-day and his evidence is necessary. Summon him afresh". The Magistrate's note on the 9th of February last reads: "The defence filed a petition that the Sub-Inspector is not forthcoming to-day and that his examination is necessary as a defence witness. It appears that he was examined as a prosecution witness (No. 5) and he was cross-examined at length by the defence side. I have already granted two adjournments for this, and I cannot wait any longer for time now".

Now it is suggested that this action taken by the Deputy Magistrate is illegal. The Deputy Magistrate in his explanation, which appears to be dated about the 28th of May last, says:—

"The Sub-Inspector in question was examined as a prosecution witness (No. 5) on 3rd January 1925.

"Charge was framed against the accused on 14th January 1925, and the accused persons had ample opportunity of cross-examining the Sub-Inspector, before charge and after the charge.

"The Sub-Inspector was cross-examined, at great length by the defence side on 15th January 1925 and then discharged.

"Technically speaking, the Sub-Inspector could not have been summoned as a defence witness, under such circumstances.

"He could have only been summoned under s. 257, Cr. P. C., for further cross-examination, on the discretion of the Court, if the Court was satisfied that it was necessary. But no such necessity appears to have been mentioned in the petitions of the accused dated 28th January 1925 (vide flag A) and 9th February 1925 (vide flag B). Even then, I had granted two adjournments for this. But the Sub-Inspector was not available. So I did not think it proper to drag on the case any more, thereby causing delay in the administration of justice".

Now the defence applied to the Sessions Judge of Shahabad upon this point and the learned Sessions Judge dealt with the matter on the 17th of March last. It is perhaps useful to refer to what the learned Sessions Judge has said in his judgment. It reads "On behalf of the petitioners it has been urged that once the Magistrate had directed that the Police Sub-Inspector should be re-called for cross-examination after the accused had entered on their defence, he was bound to insist on his appearance. The proposition so stated is will be more congenial. The commentary on the passage which begins "anujanami bhikkhave rajuman, etc.," explains that so long as the civil laws are not in conflict with the 227 rules to be observed by monks they must be obeyed.

In the Pali text of the Pacittiya we have the passage which begins "vigarahi buddho bhagava kathamhinama tumhe mogha parisa vikale gamam pavicitva, etc. (page 206), (Pacittiya Palidaw, Kavimyetmhan Press).

In this text the Lord Buddha admonishes certain of the monks for frequenting the villages after the hour of noon and indulging in talk which is unprofitable to a Bhikkhu, i. e., will not help him to attain Nirvana. The text says—

"What is this unprofitable talk:—

Politics and official matters, dacoities, the doings of ministers and officials, warriors, dangers, wars, feed, drink, clothing, dwelling, scents and flowers, relatives, etc., etc.

Any discourse on these subjects is unprofitable to rahans or pongyis.

There are three baskets of the Law as preached by the Lord Buddha, viz., Abhidhamma, Vinaya and Suttas.

The Abhidhamma is the Dhamma taught to those who are more spiritually evolved. The vinaya or the Sama Dharma adopted for monks: and the Suttas contain the Sama Dharma explained popularly for those who are less spiritually evolved.

The preceding passage of the Pacittiya finds its parallel in the Samanna-phale Sutta of the Digha Nikaya. There is an excellent translation of this Sutta by the late Professor Rhys Davids (Volume II, Sacred Books of the Buddhists) Dialogues of the Buddha. The meaning of the Sutta is "the fruits of the life of a recluse." This Sutta has a bearing on the vinaya and its ethical precepts.

According to Burman Buddhist ideas he who dons the yellow robe has one of two duties to perform:—

(1) to practise austerities and meditation in order to work out his own salvation; or

(2) to learn the sacred scriptures and to impart the knowledge to others.

Those who follow the first are known as Patibatti Sangha and those who adopt the second as Pariyatti Sangha.

When a pongyi belongs neither to the Pariyatti nor to the Patibatti, he is no longer entitled to live on the offerings of the laity, nor to receive respect from them. He has no raison d'être.

We have touched on this point as the majority of those concerned in the riot were according to the evidence, members of the order. In attempting to oppose the orders of the executive they are not only breaking their own personal law but are setting an example to the laity which is greatly to be lamented. As for the laymen we have shown from the pronouncement of the Thathanabaing in Council in 1226 B. E. that those who support pongyis who do not live in accordance with the vinaya are but watering a poison tree which will prove fatal to themselves.

In view of what we have stated, we are unable to accept Mr. Lambert's prayer for any reduction of sentence. In the circumstances we are of opinion that the sentences passed by the lower Court are not unduly severe.

The appeals of (1) Maung Tok, (2) Maung Saw Maung, (3) U Thuseikta, (4) Maung Mya, (5) U Zagaya, (7) C. P. Khin Maung, (9) Maung San Nyun and (11) Tun Aung Gyaw are dismissed and the convictions and sentences passed upon them are confirmed.

The Magistrate acceded to this request and granted two adjournments for the purpose of summoning the witness, who, however, could not attend and eventually the Magistrate dispensed with the attendance of the witness on the ground that as he had been cross-examined at length his examination as defence witness was not necessary :

Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the accused as the result of the refusal of the Magistrate to summon the witness, it could not be said that the Magistrate had acted entirely without jurisdiction. [p. 925, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad, dated the 17th March 1925, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 16th February 1925.

Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. D. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction made by some persons who were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Arrah on the 16th of February last of offences punishable under the provisions of ss. 143 and 379 coupled with s. 34, Indian Penal Code. The applicants appear to have been sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under the provisions of s. 379, Indian Penal Code and in default of payment thereof to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months, no separate sentence was passed upon them in connection with the provisions of s. 143, Indian Penal Code.

The only ground which has been put forward upon which it is urged that this Court should interfere, is because it is suggested that there has been a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction by the Deputy Magistrate in connection with the procedure. It is unnecessary to go into the facts relating to the offences with which these men were charged further than to say that the affair related to blocking up of a water-course. In the course of the trial which proceeded in the usual manner a certain Sub-Inspector of Police was examined as a witness for the prosecution, he was cross-examined at considerable length by the defence. Now it would seem that the defence wished to call this Sub-Inspector either as a defence witness or for the purpose of what was in effect further cross-examination, and on the 28th of January last it seems that the Magistrate at that time was ready to agree that this should be done. At a later stage, however, namely, on the 9th of February he altered his view. The note in the order sheet of the 28th of January last so far as it is here material, reads: "The defence prays that Sub-Inspector of Sahar who had been summoned has not turned up to-day and his evidence is necessary. Summon him afresh". The Magistrate's note on the 11th of February last reads: "The defence filed a petition that the Sub-Inspector is not forthcoming to-day and that his examination is necessary as a defence witness. It appears that he was examined as a prosecution witness (No. 5) and he was cross-examined at length by the defence side. I have already granted two adjournments for this, and I cannot wait any longer for time now".

Now it is suggested that this action taken by the Deputy Magistrate is illegal. The Deputy Magistrate in his explanation, which appears to be dated about the 28th of May last, says:—

"The Sub-Inspector in question was examined as a prosecution witness (No. 5) on 3rd January 1925.

"Charge was framed against the accused on 14th January 1925, and the accused persons had ample opportunity of cross-examining the Sub-Inspector, before charge and after the charge.

"The Sub-Inspector was cross-examined, at great length by the defence side on 15th January 1925 and then discharged.

"Technically speaking, the Sub-Inspector could not have been summoned as a defence witness, under such circumstances.

"He could have only been summoned under s. 257, Cr. P. C., for further cross-examination, on the discretion of the Court, if the Court was satisfied that it was necessary. But no such necessity appears to have been mentioned in the petitions of the accused dated 28th January 1925 (vide flag A) and 9th February 1925 (vide flag B). Even then, I had granted two adjournments for this. But the Sub-Inspector was not available. So I did not think it proper to drag on the case any more, thereby causing delay in the administration of justice".

Now the defence applied to the Sessions Judge of Shahabad upon this point and the learned Sessions Judge dealt with the matter on the 17th of March last. It is perhaps useful to refer to what the learned Sessions Judge has said in his judgment. It reads "On behalf of the petitioners it has been urged that once the Magistrate had directed that the Police Sub-Inspector should be re-called for cross-examination after the accused had entered on their defence, he was bound to insist on his appearance. The proposition so stated is not without force. But in this case the petitioner had had an opportunity of cross-examining the Sub-Inspector before the framing of the charge and had cross-examined him at some length after the charge had been framed. The attendance of the Sub-Inspector, therefore, was not to be compelled unless it was necessary for the purpose of justice. It appears that his non-attendance on the first date, 28th January 1925, was due to the fact that he never received the summons till 31st January 1925 (the application for his attendance made by the accused was filed so late as 23rd January 1925) and that it was due on the second date, 9th February 1925, to his inability to attend the Court owing to an accident. It is now said that the petitioners wished to question this officer for the purpose of finding out whether he had observed any sign of the placing of the karah in, or of the removal of the karah from, the pyne, a question of importance which they had omitted when the officer was cross-examined. I have consulted the record of the case, and am doubtful whether the Sub-Inspector could have afforded useful assistance to the Court on this point. There is no doubt but that the pyne was blocked and that of the materials used for this purpose, bamboos and paddy bundles formed a part; there is corroboration here of the prosecution story. I am not satisfied that this is a fit case for interference".

I entirely agree with what the learned Sessions Judge has written. The question of the saucepan appears to me to be one of very slight importance. As the learned Judge has pointed out, the principal matter was the blocking up of the pyne with various materials and what assistance could seriously have been afforded to the defence by the Police Officer's remarks upon a saucepan it is difficult to gather. Did I in the least think that the applicants had been in any way prejudiced by what has taken place I should have no hesitation in interfering, but as it has in no way been shown or proved to me that there has been the least prejudice against the applicants I do not think that it is proper that I should interfere. It may be said as has been pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, that as a general proposition it should be considered that once a Magistrate has given orders that a certain witness should be called he should take such steps as may be necessary and possible to enforce his attendance. I, however, am not prepared to assent to the suggestion that in no case it is possible for the Magistrate, if he comes to the conclusion that the attendance of the witness is not really necessary, to dispense with that person's attendance. In this case the circumstances were such that I think he was not only competent to dispense with this Sub-Inspector's further attendance but that he was right in so doing.

The application, therefore, will be dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 146—Attachment of property, withdrawal of—Delivery of possession—Discretion of Court.

Where property attached under s. 146, Cr. P. C., is released by the Magistrate on being satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace, it is open to the Magistrate to make over possession of the property to any party he thinks fit. He is not bound simply to direct the Receiver to abandon the property, leaving the parties to scramble for the estate. There may, however, be cases in which it might be sufficient for him to make an order withdrawing the attachment, and leave some party to take possession.

Application against an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 20th April 1925, rejecting an application for revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Sultanpur, dated the 26th March 1925.

Messrs. Niamatullah, Naimullah and M. H. Kidwai, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh (with him Mr. A. P. Sen), for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is an application in revision. The order complained of is one by the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad rejecting an application for revision against an order of the learned District Magistrate of Sultanpur. It is this last order which is really attacked. Certain property had been attached under s. 146 of the Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate, acting under the proviso, has released it because he was satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is argued before me that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace, but that is a question of fact which this Court will not go into. It is the Magistrate that has to be satisfied, not the Judicial Commissioner. It is further argued that even if the Magistrate is entitled to withdraw the attachment, his order is wrong because he has made over the possession in certain fractional shares to two parties. This is a novel point, which so far as I know has not yet been before any High Court. The applicant's contention would amount to this, that the Magistrate, being in possession of the subject of dispute, which is in most cases a landed estate, is bound simply to direct his Receiver to abandon the property without making over the possession or the books of account to anybody and leave the parties to scramble for the estate. I do not believe that this was the intention of the Legislature. I think it is open to the Magistrate under the proviso to make over possession of the property to any person that he thinks fit. He must, of course, exercise a judicial discretion in deciding to whom the possession is to be given, but a judicial discretion has been exercised in this case. I do not say that he is bound to make over the possession to anybody. There may be cases in which it is sufficient for him to make an order withdrawing the attachment and leave some party to take possession, but I do hold that it is also open to him to make over possession to any one according to his discretion. The application raises no other points. It is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 258, 349 (1) (a)—Joint trial of several accused—Accused, some, held guilty—Reference to Sub-Divisional Magistrate with regard to all accused, legality of.

Under sub-s. (1) (a) of s. 349 of the Cr. P. C. only the case of those accused who are in the opinion of the Magistrate guilty should be forwarded to the District or Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Those accused in the case who in the opinion of the Magistrate are not guilty of the offence charged should be acquitted and an order referring their case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate along with the case of those accused who are guilty is illegal and in contravention of the sub-section. [p. 926, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 11th May 1925.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge directing a re-trial. The application is made on behalf of Mahbub Hasan Khan and eight other accused persons. A complaint under s. 147 read with s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code was made by Abdul Aziz Khan against these accused in the Court of the Tahsildar of Kasganj, a Magistrate of second class powers. The evidence of the parties was produced before the Magistrate. In his order, dated the 29th of April 1925, the Trying Magistrate came to the following conclusion "In my opinion only Mahbub Hasan Khan is guilty and he voluntarily caused grievous hurt to Ibrahim Ali Khan and caused somewhat serious hurt to Abdul Aziz Khan and deserves more punishment than I have power to inflict." Under s. 258 (1) the Magistrate ought to have recorded an order of acquittal of all the accused persons except Mahbub Hasan Khan. He, however, made the following order "I submit the record under s. 349 of the Cr. P. C. to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and direct the accused to present themselves in that Court on the 2nd May." It is obvious that this order was illegal and in contravention of s. 349 (1) (a) so far as the accused other than Mahbub Hasan Khan were concerned. Under that subsection only the case of those accused who were in the opinion of the Magistrate guilty could have been forwarded to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The Magistrate, however, did not record any formal order of acquittal of the other accused and sent all of them to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

When the case went to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate he after a perusal of the evidence came to a slightly different conclusion. In his opinion all the accused were guilty. He accordingly convicted all of them,

On appeal to the learned Additional Sessions Judge, the learned Judge has held that inasmuch as the Tahsildar was not authorised to send the case of any of the appellants except Mahbub Hasan Khan to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate the latter has acted with illegality and without jurisdiction in convicting them. As, however, he thought that the opinion of a more experienced officer like the Sub-Divisional Magistrate carried more weight he has ordered a trial de novo of all the accused.

So far as the case of Mahbub Hasan Khan is concerned the Trying Magistrate being of opinion that he was guilty had jurisdiction to refer it to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the latter acted legally in convicting him and passing a sentence on him. Mahbub Hasan Khan's appeal should, therefore, have been heard and disposed of on the merits. There seems to be no ground for ordering his re-trial. If, however, the learned Additional Sessions Judge on an examination of the record comes to the conclusion that there have been some irregularities which have prejudiced Mahbub Hasan Khan, he would be entitled to order his re-trial, otherwise his appeal should be disposed of.

As regards the other accused persons, I am of opinion that their further prosecution should be stopped. The learned Tahsildar, although perhaps less experienced than the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, had an opportunity of seeing the witnesses and marking their demeanour. Having heard them and seen them he recorded his opinion that the case against these other accused had not been established. On that expression of opinion these accused were certainly entitled to an order of acquittal which, however, the learned Tahsildar omitted to pass. The mere fact that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate on a perusal of the evidence on paper has come to a different conclusion seems no good ground for ordering a re-trial. The accused have already been put to considerable expenses and worry, and they have in their favour the opinion of the Tahsildar who heard all the evidence for the prosecution that could be brought against them and which would now be produced de novo. Under the circumstances I think the proper order is to quash the order of re-trial passed by the Additional Sessions Judge and to direct that the appeal of Mahbub Hasan Khan be restored to its original number and disposed of according to law. The proceedings against the other accused persons are quashed and they are discharged.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 325—Public servant acting without jurisdiction—Right of private defence—Assault on public servant—Grievous hurt.

Section 99 of the Penal Code has no application to a case where the initial proceeding and the power under which a public servant purports to act are altogether without jurisdiction and entirely ultra vires. [p. 928 col. 1.]

A Police Officer noticing one H. going about at night time armed with a long handled hatchet asked him to hand over the hatchet, but H. refused to give it up whereupon the Police Officer laid his hands on the hatchet in order to snatch it from H. The latter resented this and shouted out, on which certain persons came up to his assistance and assaulted the Police Officer causing grievous hurt to him. H. and his companions were tried and convicted of an offence under s. 325 of the Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the act of the Police Officer in trying to snatch away the hatchet from H. was wholly without jurisdiction and that, therefore, s. 99 of the Penal Code was not applicable to the case; [p. 928, col. 2.]

(2) that, however, the accused had no right to assault the Police Officer as they knew that he was not trying to commit a theft of the hatchet nor had they any reason to fear that the Police Officer would cause hurt to H. and that, therefore, they had been rightly convicted. [ibid.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge Mianwali, dated the 12th January 1925.

Mr. Ram Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, convicting Haq Dad under s. 325, Indian Penal Code and Sohan and Ali Khan under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing the first named to three years' rigorous imprisonment and the latter to one year's rigorous imprisonment each. The hurts were said to have been caused, in the course of a fight with Fazal Shah, Sub-Inspector, in the following circumstances:—

Fazal Shah was in charge of the Punitive Police Post in the appellants' village and was sitting on the thara outside his house talking to Allah Dad Khan and Budha Khan, pathans, when Haq Dad, appellant, passed along the lane in front of the Sub-Inspector's house, he was carrying a long-handled kulhari in his hand. The Sub-Inspector thought that Haq Dad was perhaps on his way to attack one Mamrez with whom he had enmity and called to him that he should not go about at night time armed with such a kulhari and asked him to hand over the kulhari to him. Haq Dad replied that the Sub-Inspector had no authority to take the kulhari from him and refused to give it up. Upon this the Sub-Inspector went up to Haq Dad and laid his hands on the kulhari in order to snatch it from him. Haq Dad resented this and shouted out to his Pathan associates who came up to his assistance and are said to have assaulted the Sub-Inspector. Out of six persons challenged by the Police the three appellants only were convicted, the Sessions Judge holding that each of them struck the Sub-Inspector one blow. The chalan was under s. 333 of the Indian Penal Code, but the learned Sessions Judge held that at the time of the occurrence the Sub-Inspector was not acting in the discharge of his duty as a public servant because he had no right to snatch away the kulhari from the hands of Haq Dad, it not being an arm the possession of which without a license was forbidden by law. At the same time the Sessions Judge held that under s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code the appellants had no right of private defence against the act of the Sub-Inspector when trying to snatch away the kulhari, as such act did not cause the apprehension of death or grievous hurt, the act being done by a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office though that act might not be strictly justifiable by law. Mr. Rattan Lal in his Law of Crimes, 9th Edition, in his notes under s. 99 at page 185 states as follows :—

"This section has no application to a case where the initial proceeding, and the power under which any public servant purports to act are altogether without jurisdiction and entirely ultra vires. But the protection afforded under it to public servants is not lost to them by reason of any mistake on their part in the exercise of their proper functions. The section thus applies to cases where there is an excess of jurisdiction as distinct from a complete absence of jurisdiction, to cases where the official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly, but not to cases where the act could not possibly have been done rightly."

These remarks of the author are supported by authority, one of which is Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Nath Mukerjee (1). Now, there can be no doubt that the act of the Sub-Inspector in trying to snatch away an axe from Haq Dad was wholly without jurisdiction, and, therefore, in my opinion, s. 99 is not applicable. At the same time I do not see how the appellants had any right to make an assault upon the Sub-Inspector. They knew perfectly well that he was not trying to commit a theft of the kulhari, and, therefore, they had no right to attack him in order to protect Haq Dad's property from being taken away by him. Nor had they any reason to fear that the Sub-Inspector would cause hurt to Haq Dad.

As regards the merits, I see no reason to differ from the learned Sessions Judge in his finding that the three appellants did each of them give one blow to the Sub-Inspector. The point that really requires consideration in the case is whether the sentences awarded are suitable. There can be no doubt that the appellants acted with undue violence, and that they had no justification for assaulting the Sub-Inspector. At the same time it must not be forgotten that the latter was in the wrong in doing an act or trying to do an act which was unlawful. The hurt caused to the Sub-Inspector by Haq Dad was technically grievous hurt. Under the circumstances I think that the sentences awarded are unduly severe. I accept the appeal and reduce the sentences as follows:—In the case of Haq Dad to nine months' rigorous imprisonment, and in the cases of Sohan and Ali Khan to four months' rigorous imprisonment each.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—On the facts found by the learned Additional District Judge he was right in passing the decrees which he did pass. Two questions have been argued before us by Mr. Manuk on behalf of the defendants-appellants; first, that the inclusion of 1 cottah of land in Patna City was a fraud on the registration law and that the registration obtained by its means was invalid; and, secondly, that the enhancement of rent in the leases which were also the basis of the suits constituted an infringement of s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and cannot be supported by a Court of Law.

I will first consider the point in regard to the registration. The written statement raises the following case: "In order only to get the registration made at Jhauganj, an imaginary plot of land in Mohalla Diwan in the City of Patna, was included in the patta and kabuliyat. These defendants did not take in settlement the land in Mohalla Diwan in the City of Patna, nor was any contract made with regard to the settlement thereof nor did the defendants ever get possession of the same. Hence the afore-said kabuliyat is illegal, void and inoperative, and the same cannot be binding on the defendants. The plaintiff's suit on the basis of patta and kabuliyat like this, is not tenable and is fit to be dismissed at once." The Court of first instance found that the plot of land in Mohalla Diwan in the City of Patna did not exist and in this view he came to the conclusion that the inclusion of this property was a fraud on the registration law. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the finding of fact of the Court of first instance on this point. The learned Judge says as follows:—"I have examined the evidence on the point and the case-law relating to the matter and am disposed to differ from the finding of the learned Munsif and to hold that the kabuliyats were valid, and were not fraudulent documents, and had been entered into with the knowledge and consent of both the parties and that the properties were real existing properties and not fictitious or non-existent. This appears to be clear from the depositions of the three consenting defendants themselves given before the Court below. The finding that the plot of land in Mohalla Diwan is "existing property and not fictitious or non-existent" is a finding of fact which is binding on us in second appeal.

This is not disputed by Mr. Manuk; but he contends that the learned Judge should have considered the other point raised by him, namely, whether there was any intention on the part of the parties to deal with the plot of land in Mohalla Diwan. Now in my, opinion, the question was not raised in this form in the written statement. The whole point made in the written statement is that "an imaginary plot of land in Mohalla Diwan in the City of Patna was included in the patta and kabuliyat." There is no suggestion that the parties did not intend to deal with this property on the assumption that it did exist. Mr. Manuk relies on the judgment of the Court of first instance and contends that that Court expressly found that the parties did not intend to deal with this property; but I can find no support for this argument in the judgment of the learned Munsif. He no doubt refers to the contention on the part of the defendants that they never got possession of the Diwan Mohalla properties and that it was never intended that they should get possession of them and that these properties were included only to facilitate registration at Jhauganj. But the finding of the learned Munsif is that "these areas are only fictitious." That this was the only finding will appear from the cases to which he refers and discusses. In dealing with these cases which were obviously cited on behalf of the plaintiffs, he says as follows:—"In the first of these cases it transpired later that the executants' interest had become extinguished in the property mortgaged and without knowledge of this the parties entered into a bona fide mortgage of same. In the second case the existence of the property mortgaged was not denied. In the third it was actually found the mortgagor intended this small property should also be a security for the mortgage debt. Thus in none the question arose of the non-existence of the property" and he concludes as follows:—"In the present case it is plainly alleged in the written statement the property in Diwan Mohalla was a fictitious one. The kabuliyats in the recitals in them make no mention of them and hence it was incumbent on plaintiff to adduce some evidence of existence of those properties. In absence of such evidence the case is covered by the case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1) and the registration of Jhauganj is invalid and plaintiff cannot take advantage of these kabuliyats."

It will appear from the judgment of the learned Munsif that the only question which he intended to try and did try was whether the properties alleged to be fictitious by the defendants did exist. He found that they did not exist and he held that the inclusion of those properties was a fraud on the registration law.

That being so how are we entitled now in second appeal to go into the question of the intention of the parties? It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that having regard to s. 92 of the Evidence Act the Court is not entitled to go into the question of intention. I am unable to agree with this contention. The authorities establish that though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, yet evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible. In Pym v. Campbell (2), Erle, J., said as follows: "The point made is that this is a written agreement, absolute on the face of it, and that evidence was admitted to show it was conditional; and if that had been so, it would have been wrong. But I am of opinion that the evidence showed that in fact there was never any agreement at all. The production of a paper purporting to be an agreement by a party, with his signature attached, affords a strong presumption that it is his written agreement; and, if in fact he did sign the paper animo contrahendi, the terms contained in it are conclusive and cannot be varied by parol evidence; but in the present case the defence begins one step earlier: the parties met and expressly stated to each other that though for convenience they would then sign the memorandum of the terms, yet they were not to sign it as an agreement until A was consulted: I grant the risk that such a defence may be set up without ground; and I agree that a Jury should, therefore, always look on such a defence with suspicion; but, if it be proved that in fact the paper was signed with the express intention that it should not be an agreement the other party cannot fix it as an agreement upon those so signing. The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, but evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible." And Lord Campbell said: "I agree. No addition to, or variation from, the terms of a written contract can be made by parol: but in this case the defence was that there never was any agreement entered into." This case was followed in Guddalur Ruthna v. Kunnattur Arumuga (3). The last mentioned case was decided without reference to the Indian Evidence Act and probably before the Evidence Act came into operation. But the principle of that case was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in a judgment delivered by it on the 5th of December 1924. So far as I know that case has not been reported; but the judgment has been pronounced in Privy Council Appeals Nos. 21, 31 and 32 of 1923 [Bajinath Singh v. Vally Mahomed Hajee Abba (4)]. In delivering the judgment of the Board Sir Lawrence Jenkins said as follows:—"It is true, as was laid down in Balkishen Das v. Legge (5) that under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, as between the parties to an instrument, oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds or of proving the intention of the parties. But in the view their Lordships take of the circumstances of this case the section and the ruling have no application to it." The learned Judge then proceeded to say as follows:—"The preamble to the Evidence Act recites that 'it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the Law of Evidence' and s. 92 merely prescribes a rule of evidence; it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances." I am of opinion, therefore, that it was open to the Court to examine the surrounding circumstances with a view to enable it to decide whether the parties intended to arrive at any agreement in regard to the Diwan Mohalla property; but in the view which I take of this case the question is a question of fact and should have been raised by the defendants specifically. It should certainly have been raised by them in the Courts below. The judgment of the learned Munsif is silent on this point and so is the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. I must, therefore, hold that the only question which was raised by the defendants in the Courts below and the only question discussed by the Courts below is whether these properties were fictitious properties or not. That being so, it is not open to us to enter into the question whether the parties intended to enter into an agreement with regard to these lands.

The next question relates to the applicability of s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now in order to understand the point it ought to be pointed out that the registered kabuliyats were executed in 1322. By these kabuliyats the defendants took leases of the lands comprised in the kabuliyats from 1323 to 1329 at a rent of Rs. 5 per bigha. It appears, however, that the defendants were actually in possession of the properties comprised in the leases ever since 1301 and that they were paying a rent of Rs. 3 per bigha. It is, therefore, contended on behalf of the defendants that there was an enhancement of rent by the fresh arrangement of 1322 and that the rent was enhanced so as to exceed by more than 2 annas in the rupee, the rent previously payable by the raiyyat.

Section 29, it will be noticed, only applies to the case of an occupancy raiyyat and before invoking the aid of s. 29, the tenant must prove that he is an occupancy raiyyat in regard to the rent claimed lands. Now these lands are admittedly diara lands and s. 180 provides that a raiyyat who holds land of the kind known as char or diara shall not acquire a right of occupancy until he has held the land in question for 12 continuous years; and the section further provides that until he acquires a right of occupancy in the land, he shall be able to pay such rent for his holding as may be agreed on between him and his landlord.

On the admitted facts, therefore, there is no room for the application of s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act unless the defendants establish that they had held the lands in question for twelve continuous years. The learned Judge in the Court below accepted the contention of the plaintiffs that the defendants have not "been successful in proving continuous possession." Mr. Manuk in this Court contends that the learned Judge should have considered the evidence with a view to find out whether the defendants have been in continuous possession of any portion of the land comprised in the lease. He says that it may be that he has not been in continuous possession for 12 years of the entire block of land comprised in his lease; but he contends that it is possible that he may have been in possession for 12 continuous years of some portion of the land and that inasmuch as the learned Additional District Judge has not dealt with this point we should remand the case to him to enable him to decide the point. The onus of establishing an exception under s. 180 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was upon the defendants and it was for them to make a specific point in regard to the applicability of s. 29 in the written statement; but they have not made such a case in the written statement. No doubt the Courts examined the contentions in regard to the applicability of s. 29; but a new point is made before us, namely, that although the defendants may have failed to prove that they were in possession for 12 continuous years of the entire block of land, they may succeed in proving that they were in possession for 12 continuous years of some portion of the land. I find that the learned Munsif in the course of his judgment says "The defendants themselves could not give verbally what area they were in possession of in which year": It is extremely unlikely that a remand would be productive of any good for the defendants have no evidence on the point and the papers of the landlords could not possibly identify the lands which have been in the possession of the defendants, the lands being subject to inundation and there being no Record of Rights in regard to them. Having regard to all these facts and especially having regard to the fact that the defendants have not made out a case under s. 29, I must decline to remand the cases to the lower Appellate Court to enable it to decide the point contended before us.

(3) 7 M. H. O. R. 189.

(5) 27 I. A. 58; 22 A. 149; 4 O. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. O. J. 601; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1130 (P. C.).

I must dismiss these appeals with costs.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 4, 19—Submission to arbitration—Signatures, necessity of—Bias of arbitrator, effect of—Reference at option of one party, validity of—Validity of contract, plea of, effect of.

Lyon Lord & Co. v. Firm of Champsi Umersi, 49 Ind. Cas. 135; 12 S. L. R. 55, Baker v. Yorkshire Fire Assurance Co., (1892) 1 Q. B. 144; 61 L. J. Q. B. 838; 66 L. T. 161 and Narsidas Nanji v. Dosa Kalian, 8 Ind. Cas. 925; 4 S. L. R. 149, relied upon.

A submission is not invalid merely because an arbitrator or an umpire is to sit in judgment on his own acts, if parties with their eyes open chose to agree to a submission providing for a reference to such an arbitrator or umpire, unless it be shown that the arbitrator or umpire has made up his mind so as not to be open to change it upon argument. [p. 934, col. 2.]

Jackson v. Barry Ry., (1893) 1 Ch. 238; 2 R. 207; 68 L. T. 472, Forwood v. Watney, (1880) 49 L. J. Q. B. 447 and Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand v. Ramchand Manjimal, 47 Ind. Cas. 783; 12 S. L. R. 41, relied upon.

An agreement to refer a dispute to arbitration providing for a reference at the option of one of the parties is still an agreement within the meaning of s. 4 of the Arbitration Act [ibid.]

Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Co., (1919) 1 K. B. 593; 88 L. J. K. B. 706; (1919) W. C. & Ins. Rep. 181; 120 L. T. 556; 34 Com. Cas. 237; 83 J. P. 125; 63 S. J. 352, relied upon.

Where it is contended that a clause in a contract providing for the submission of disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration is not enforceable on account of the plea of the defendant that the contract is void and impossible of performance, the true test to apply is whether what is alleged by the defendant is something which gives the go-by to the contract, that is to say, which arises and exists independently of the contract and avoids it by its own force, or whether what is alleged is some ground of defence arising upon the contract itself. In the former case alone the submission would be unenforceable. [p. 935, col. 2.]

Application for stay of suit under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Assudamal Rewachand, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application filed by the applicants Mulchand Sobhraj and Ramchand Mulchand under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for the stay of suit No. 285 of 1924 filed by the opponent Radhakishin Parumal against the applicant on the ground that the suit is based on contracts for the sale of sugar which contained a clause that any dispute of whatever character relating to or arising out of the contract was to be referred to the arbitration of members of the New Sugar Merchants Association Karachi that the applicants have all along been ready and willing to refer the disputes to arbitration and have taken no steps in the suit.

Mr. Kimatrai opponents' Pleader has urged six objections against the application. He denies the existence of any submission clause binding the opponent. He contends that even if a submission clause exists, since applicant has repudiated the contract as void and impossible and has urged frustration of commercial adventure, he cannot take advantage of the submission clause. He further contends that the dispute should not be referred to arbitrators, because the President of the Sugar Merchants Association who has to appoint an umpire is biased, because the arbitration clause is vague and indefinite inasmuch as it provides for arbitration by two members of the Sugar Merchants Association while the members of the Sugar Merchants Association are firms and not individuals, because the arbitration clause only gives one of the parties the option to refer the dispute to arbitration. He lastly contends that the application should be refused on the ground that the acts of the Sugar Merchants Association are in question and the members of the Association should not sit in judgment on their own acts.

With regard to the first objection all that the opponent has sworn in his affidavit is that so far as he re-collects he has not signed any agreement to refer matters to arbitration. Against this Mulchand Sobhraj has produced the soudagiri book showing the opponents' signature; he has also produced a printed form which he swears is the printed form referred to in the contract. It is also indicated in the opponents' plaint itself that the contract in suit was based on a printed contract for the plaintiff stated that he would rely on printed contracts in the possession of the defendants. I see no reason to doubt the statement in Mulchand's affidavit that the printed contract which he produced was the printed form referred to in the contract between the parties. The tendency of English Courts is to regard actual signatures as immaterial provided that the agreement is in writing and there is evidence that its terms are assented to by both parties: See Lyon Lord & Co. v. Firm of Champsi Umersi (1); see also Baker v. Yorkshire Fire Assurance Co. (2) approved in Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheep Breeders' Association (3) and followed in Narsidas Nanji v. Dosa Kalian (4). In support of the third objection the opponent has produced the plaint and defence evidence recorded with exhibits and judgment in Suit No. 4241 of the Small Causes Court Karachi and also the plaint and written statement in Suit No. 286 of 1924 which is sought to be stayed.

According to the printed contract filed by Mulchand the contract was subject to the rules and regulations of the New Sugar Merchants Association at Karachi and such changes made and rules framed from time to time by the New Sugar Merchants Association.

Mr. Assudomal for the defendant in Suit No. 4241 of 1923 contended that since the Karachi Sugar Merchants Association resolved that no contracts should be made in the Bazar for July 1923 delivery and since the plaintiffs are members of the Association and had signed their assent to the resolution the contract was void. In the cross-examination of Lunidaram Rochaldas he elicited the fact that there was a standing rule of the Association that no contract could be made while two *raid*as were still unsettled, i. e., no contract for July delivery could be made in May that on the 31st May the rate of the day is fixed by the Association and after that a resolution made whether the next raida should be opened or not. On 31st May 1923 it was resolved to forbid the July delivery voida.

The opponent in para. 12 of his affidavit dated 27th September 1924 alleged that both the President and the Secretary of the Sugar Merchants Association were summoned by the defendants in Suit No. 4241 of 1923 to give evidence in their behalf. Mr. Dipchand, however, for applicant has pointed out that it was not Kishindas the President who was summoned to give evidence but his partner Ghumanmal Tekchand and that it was not as alleged the Secretary of the Sugar Merchants Association who was summoned but the Vice President Jethalal Kalianji. The allegations as regards Kishindas the President, therefore, are not established. Mr. Dipchand further points out that in the case of Jackson v. Barry Ry. (5) in which a dispute arose between a Company and a contractor whether the interior of an embankment was to be made of stone or rocky mark, and the Engineer of the Company expressed the view that it should be of stone, and after the matter was referred to his arbitration, and on the day for which the first appointment had been made, he again wrote repeating the same opinion, it was held by the Court of Appeal that considering the position of the Engineer who as Engineer of the Company must necessarily have already expressed an opinion on the point in dispute his writing after the commencement of the arbitration a letter repeating the same opinion would not disqualify him from acting as arbitrator unless on the fair construction of the letter it appeared that he had made up his mind so as not to be open to change it upon argument. The facts in that case seem to me much stronger than in the present one for in that case it was the Engineer himself who was the arbitrator, in the present case it is merely the duty of the President of the Sugar Merchants Association to nominate an arbitrator. In that case the arbitrator himself had twice expressed in writing views adverse to the contentions of the contractor. In the present case all that the opponent can urge is that the President of the Sugar Merchants Association as such may be inclined to favour the enforcement of the resolutions of the Association even though one of the parties to the contract was not a member of the Association. I do not think the facts established show that the President will appoint an umpire who has made up his mind so as not to be open to change it upon argument, or that the umpire will most certainly tilt the scales against the opponent as in Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand v. Ramchand Manjimal (6). Since the opponent chose with his eyes open to agree to refer disputes to the arbitration of members of the New Sugar Merchants Association and since the submission clause formed part of the consideration for the contract see Forwood v. Watney (7), it does not appear to me to be open to the opponent now to contend that members of the New Sugar Merchants Association should not sit in judgment in questions affecting the validity and applicability of their own resolutions. If that was his view he ought not to have agreed to the submission clause for the contract which was subject to the rules and resolutions of the New Sugar Merchants Association expressly provided that disputes should be referred to members of the Association.

It is now urged by Mr. Kimatrai that firms are members of the New Sugar Merchants Association and not individuals but it seems to me clear that the intention of the parties to the submission clause was that disputes should be decided by persons who were partners in firms belonging to the New Sugar Merchants Association. There does not appear to me any force in this contention. Nor do I think there is any force in the contention that the agreement to refer merely provided for a reference at the option of one of the parties. The agreement was a written agreement to refer subject to a condition, i.e., the exercise of the option given to one of the parties. The fact that the agreement was subject to an option does not, in my opinion, prevent it from being an agreement within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Arbitration Act. In Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Co., (8), the Court of Appeal held that a Company which had the option of requiring a reference to arbitration could rely on the arbitration clause as a defence to an action. This, no doubt, was a decision under the English Arbitration Act but the definitions of "submission" in s. 1 of the Indian Act and in s. 27 of the English Act are the same.

With regard to the last objection urged by Mr. Kimatrai, viz., that since the applicant has repudiated the contract as void and impossible and has urged frustration of commercial adventure he cannot take advantage of the submission clause, the evidence shows that the applicant in para. 1 of his written statement in Suit No. 286 of 1924 drew attention to the fact that the contract was made subject to the rules and regulations of the New Sugar Merchants Association and that the plaintiff was bound by the rules which might be framed and changes that might be made from time to time by the Association. In para. 2 he referred to the fact that the Association about 31st May prohibited the merchants from doing any business in white Java sugar for the July vaida and prohibited the giving or taking delivery in respect of sugar of outstanding contracts of July vaida, and contended that all the dealings in respect of the July vaida were suspended, the contract having been declared cancelled. In para. 2 (b) he contended that in view of the contract between himself and the opponent and the prohibition to deal in July vaida sugar he could not pay for and take delivery of the sugar being exempted from performing his part of the contract which became impossible. In para. 2 (c) he alleged that the contract being in contravention of the rules of the New Sugar Merchants Association and without their sanction was void. In para. 2 (d) he denied liability to pay damages and contended without prejudice that at most plaintiff could only claim damages at the rate prevailing on 31st May when the Association prohibited business for the July vaida and the plaintiff came to know that the defendant would not perform his part of the contract. In para. 3 (b) he contended that the contract was void on account of frustration of commercial adventure and on account of change of circumstances. In other words as was pointed out by Dake, L. J., in the Court of Appeal in the case of Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Co. (8), the defendant founded himself upon the contract and not upon a repudiation of the existence of the contract "as was pointed out by Lord Reading, C. J. in Stebbing v. Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., (9), the material question upon this matter of repudiation is whether what is alleged by the defendants is something which gives the go-by to the contract, that is to say, which arises outside and exists independently of the contract and avoids it by its own force, or whether what is alleged is some ground of defence arising upon the contract itself. In the present case the ground upon which it is said that the plaintiff has no claim is spelt out of the language of the contract itself. Taking this view it seems to me that Jureidini v. National British and Irish Millers Insurance Co. (10) which depended entirely upon the repudiation of the contract by the defendants has no application". The distinction between those cases where the defendant alleges circumstances existing independently of the contract and avoiding it by their own force and cases where the defendant alleges a ground of defence arising upon the contract itself was emphasized by Raymond, A. J. C., in Jivraj Lakhamji v. Tahkandas Mohandas (11). If the test referred to in the above case and in Woodoll v. Pearl Assurance Co. (8) is applied to the present case it is abundantly clear that the present case belongs to the latter group of cases in which the defendant seeks to avoid the contract by alleging a ground of defence arising upon the contract itself. For there was nothing in the contract itself to offend against public policy or morality or any other extraneous circumstance which would render the contract inherently void in itself or impossible of performance. What the defendant relied on was that the contract declared that it was made subject to the rules and regulations of the New Sugar Merchants Association and such rules and changes as might be enacted thereafter. The New Sugar Merchants Association on the 31st May passed a resolution prohibiting contract for the July vaida and prohibiting the giving and taking of delivery in contract already made for the July vaida. Such prohibition of course could have no effect whatever but for the clause in the contract itself. So it is clear that the defendant founded himself upon the contract and not on a repudiation of the existence of

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV,
r. 3, cl. (2)—Decree for foreclosure—Discretion to extend time—Good cause.*

Under the proviso of O. XXXIV, r. 3, cl. (2), C. P. C., it is only upon good cause shown that the Court may postpone the day fixed for the payment of money under the foreclosure decree. But a very wide interpretation is to be given to those words. The fact that the judgment-debtor was not able to raise money, but could do so if time was given, is a good cause. [p. 936, col. 2; p. 937, col. 1.]

Jokhan Singh v. Debi Singh, 50 Ind. Cas. 201; 6 O. L. J. 94, referred to.

Judgment-debtors in decrees for foreclosure are always treated with indulgence. A mortgage is a transaction in which money is lent and immoveable property is pledged as security for re-payment. The Courts have always lent in the direction of enforcing the original contract, that is to say, the re-payment of the money, rather than the penalty, that is, the foreclosure. [p. 936, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, in Regular Suit No. 5 of 1924, dated the 29th day of November 1924.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radhe Krishna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the first miscellaneous appeal. The order appealed from consists of the single word "rejected." What was rejected was an application under O. XXXIV, r. 3 for extension of time for depositing money due under a decree absolute for foreclosure. The absolute decree was passed on 13th May 1924. The amount was Rs. 7,000 mortgage money, together with Rs. 545 costs with future interest on Rs. 7,000 from the date of institution, that is 10th January 1924, to the date of realization, that is 13th November 1924. The decree was in the usual form, and provided that in default of deposit of the money, the mortgaged property should be foreclosed. The decree-holder put in his application without delay on 15th November 1924. No money had been deposited but the mortgagee, the present appellant, had already on 30th October 1924 put in an application for three months' extension of time up to 13th February 1925. This application came up for orders with the decree-holder's application on the 29th November 1924, and it was dismissed, as I have said, by the single word "rejected."

Now judgment-debtors in decrees for foreclosure are always treated with indulgence. A mortgage is a transaction in which money is lent and immoveable property is pledged as security for re-payment. The Courts have always lent in the direction of enforcing the original contract, that is to say, the re-payment of the money, rather than the penalty, that is the foreclosure. In Fisher's Work on Mortgages, 6th Edition at page 979, para. 1955 it is said:

"The enforcement of the strict terms of that part of the judgment in a foreclosure suit which directs absolute foreclosure upon non-payment of the redemption money on a certain day, is in the discretion of the Court, which may relieve against it either by a postponement of that day, or by an actual opening of the foreclosure, after the day has been suffered to pass without payment."

He goes on to explain in the following paragraph that, "It is only in a foreclosure action, as a general rule, and not in an action for redemption, that this indulgence is granted, because, in the latter case, the mortgagor comes to the Court for relief professing that his money is ready; but, in a foreclosure suit, he redeems by a compulsion. So the mortgagor's suit for redemption will be dismissed after the day appointed for payment has passed, though he has subsequently tendered the principal and interest due to the day of the tender."

He adds that a third and even a fourth extension of time have been given. No doubt under the proviso of O. XXXIV, r. 3, cl. (2), it is only upon good cause shown that the Court may postpone the day fixed. But a very wide interpretation is given to these words. In Jokhan Singh v. Debi Singh (1), it was said:

"Good cause is required. But good cause is present. The good cause is that the mortgagees lose nothing by the arrangement according to the terms of the decree."

The Court was referring to O. XXXIV, r. 8. But that makes no difference. An order for foreclosure is if anything a better case for indulgence than an order for sale. In the present case the cause given was that the mortgagor could not raise the money at that time, but that he could do so if he was given three months. That was enough to allege for a first postponement.

The order appealed against is clearly wrong, because if the learned Subordinate Judge considered that there was no good cause for enlarging the time, he ought to have said so. There is nothing to show that he applied his mind to the question at all.

For these reasons, I allow the appeal, and set aside the order dismissing the application. But the appellant has had many months more than the three months which he asked for in October 1924. He is entitled now only to a very short postponement. I allow him one month from to-day's date within which he must pay the entire sum due under the decree, otherwise the foreclosure will take effect. I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Injunction restraining transfer of property—Sale in defiance of injunction, validity of—Vendee taking bona fide without notice.

A temporary injunction restraining a party to a suit from making a transfer of certain property has not the effect of avoiding a sale of the property carried out in defiance of the restraining order where the transferee is a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of any fraud or collusion on the part of the vendor. [p. 938, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 18th April 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 21st June 1920.

Messrs. Badri Das, M. N. Mukerji and Kidar Nath, for the Appellants.

Lala Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Fforde, J.—On the 30th of October 1918 Ram Lal, the plaintiff in the present suit obtained a decree for Rs. 2,057-6-0 against Muhammad Hussain and his wife Musammam Moti Begam, who are the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the present suit. During the pendency of the previous suit, namely, on the 2nd of February, 1915, the Court issued a temporary injunction restraining Muhammad Hussain and Musammam Moti Begam from transferring a certain house situate on the Railway Road.

On the 28th of October 1918 the house in question was sold by Musammam Talia Begam (mother of Musammam Moti Begam), who is defendant No. 4 in the present suit to Messrs. Beli Ram and Brothers, Druggists of Lahore, the first named defendants in the present suit, for Rs. 25,000, the sale-deed being registered on the 4th of November 1919. This deed was signed by Musammam Moti Begam as a witness.

The plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the house in question is still the property of Muhammad Hussain and Musammam Moti Begam, and that it is liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of the 30th of October 1918. He prays that the sale effected by Musammam Talia Begam in favour of Messrs. Beli Ram and Brothers be declared null and void as against him, on the ground that it was a collusive and fictitious transaction carried out with a view to prevent the realisation of plaintiff's decree.

The defendants Beli Ram and Brothers contend that they are bona fide purchasers of the house for value and without notice of the injunction or of any fraud or collusion on the part of the vendor to defeat creditors.

It appears that the site of the house in question was originally bought by Musammam Moti Begam with the proceeds of dower money given to her by her husband. The purchase was effected in the name of her mother Musammatt Talia Begam in order to safeguard the property from the creditors of Muhammad Hussain and his wife.

In order to provide money to build the house now in dispute the site was mortgaged by a number of mortgage-deeds executed by Musammatt Talia Begam. It is recited in one of these deeds that Musammatt Moti Begam is the owner of half the house. Two of these deeds were executed by both Musammatt Talia Begam and Musammatt Moti Begam.

The Trial Court has held that in view of Musammatt Moti Begam's conduct in attesting the deed of conveyance to Messrs. Beli Ram and Brothers she is estopped from disputing the latter's title to the premises, and that as the judgment-creditor can have no better right than Musammatt Moti Begam to contest this sale, he is also, estopped. In my opinion the conclusion of the first Court in this respect is sound.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the sale to Messrs. Beli Ram and Brothers was invalid owing to the injunction prohibiting Muhammad Hussain and Musammatt Moti Begam from transferring the property. In my opinion this view as regards the effect of the temporary injunction is incorrect. Apart from the fact that the injunction was not directed against Musammatt Talia Begam, the assignor of the premises, such an injunction has not the effect of avoiding a sale carried out in defiance of the restraining order. The learned District Judge has treated the order for an injunction as though it were an order attaching the property. It has been held in Delhi and London Bank, Ltd. v. Ram Narain (1) that where property has been attached by order of the Court, any transfer of the property in face of such an attachment is void if the attachment has been made by "actual seizure or by written order duly intimated or made known." But a temporary injunction has no such effect. The plea of the defendants, Messrs. Beli Ram and Brothers that they are bona fide purchasers for value does not appear to have been challenged. There is no finding by the learned District Judge that there was anything collusive or fictitious as regards the sale to them and accordingly we must take it that they were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of any fraud or collusion on the part of the vendor.

For the reasons I have given I would accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the first Court. Costs in the Court below and in this Court to be paid by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's costs in the first Court to be paid by defendants Muhammad Hussain and Musammatt Moti Begam.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Application asking for attachment and sale of property outside jurisdiction of Court—Good faith—Extension of limitation—"For execution", "step-in-aid of execution", meaning of.

The words "for execution" and "step-in-aid of execution" in cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act mean "for the purpose of obtaining execution" and "step taken for the purpose of obtaining execution" respectively. [p. 940, cols. 1 & 2.]

The bona fides or mala fides of an earlier application for execution is an important ingredient in determining whether that application is effective for the purpose of saving limitation under cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act for a later application, though the bona fides or mala fides of the later application cannot be judged at the time when it is presented from anything that has gone before and, therefore, cannot at the time of presentation be entered into. [p. 943, col. 1.]

An application for execution which asks the Court for a relief which the Court cannot grant, for instance, the attachment and sale of property outside the jurisdiction of the Court, is not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and does not operate to extend limitation under that clause. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Lala Sheo Prasad, appellant here obtained a simple money decree against Isri Prasad, husband of Musammatt Narainibai respondent here in the Court of the Munsif of East Budaun on the 9th of March 1915. On the 12th of November 1918 he applied for execution. On the 23rd of January 1920 this application was struck off with the consent of the decree-holder. On the 4th of March 1921 he applied again for execution to the Munsif of East Budaun. The relief asked for in that application was that certain property be attached and brought to sale. There was a further reference to the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor but it is admitted now on behalf of the respondent that there had been a previous application to bring the heirs on the record and that the reference to these heirs in the application of the 4th of March 1921 can have no bearing on the matter which we have to decide. This matter need not, therefore, be further referred to and the application of the 4th of March 1921 will be considered as being simply one for the attachment and sale of certain property. On the 19th of April 1921, if not before, the attention of the decree-holder was drawn to the fact that all the property for attachment and sale of which he prayed was outside the jurisdiction of the Munsif of East Budaun and he was ordered to explain how the Court had any power to proceed against it. Pending that explanation being received the application was to remain pending. On the 29th of April 1921 as no explanation had been given by the decree-holder, the application was dismissed and on the same date he took back all the process-fees that he had deposited. A further application was filed by the decree-holder for execution on the 12th of January 1923. This time the property detailed was within the jurisdiction of the Munsif of East Budaun who had passed the decree. The Munsif dismissed the application holding that it was barred by limitation, limitation not being saved by the previous application of the 4th of March 1921, in that that application was not in accordance with law, as the property was outside the jurisdiction of the Court and no application had been made, even after opportunity had been given, to transfer the decree to the Court in whose jurisdiction the property was situate. In appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the application was made to the proper Court and concurred with the Munsif that it was not in accordance with law and, therefore, could not save limitation.

It is not suggested that during the twelve days prior to the dismissal of the previous application on January 23rd, 1920 any act was done by the decree-holder which would bring his present application of January 12th, 1923 within the period of limitation. The sole question, therefore, is whether the proceedings on the application of March 4th, 1921 constituted an "application in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution".

The memorandum of appeal to this Court contains two grounds:—

(1) that the application of the 4th of March 1921 was a "step-in-aid of execution," and

(2) that the application was made to a proper Court.

We have noted that the Subordinate Judge held that the application was made to a proper Court and this ground was, therefore, superfluous. As to the second ground it may be remarked that the application is more correctly to be described as an application for execution rather than as a step-in-aid of execution.

For the appellant it has again been argued here (1) that the application was made to a proper Court; (2) that the fact that the property specified as liable to attachment was outside the jurisdiction of the Court did not render the application one not "in accordance with law".

A third point taken that an alleged request in the application that the heirs be brought upon the record would in any case prevent the application being wholly one not in accordance with law was, as we have noted, abandoned in this Court as not being justified by the circumstances of the case. We have further pointed out that it was conceded by the lower Appellate Court and we may add that it has not been disputed here that the application was made to a proper Court. There is, therefore, only one question remaining for determination, namely, do the facts that all the property specified was outside the jurisdiction of the Court and that there was no prayer at any time before the application was struck off (though the Court allowed time for amendment) to transfer the decree for execution to the Court in whose jurisdiction the property was situated render the application of the 4th of March 1921 one "not in accordance with law."

What is the meaning of this phrase? At an early stage of the case Counsel for the appellant was asked whether, if it were to be held in the circumstances that the application was not made with any bona fide intention of proceeding to execution but merely with the intention of saving limitation, it could rightly be held to be "an application for execution" or "a step-in-aid of execution". Counsel very properly and frankly admitted that it was a very common practice for decree-holders to put in a colourable application asking for execution which they did not mean seriously to prosecute, but which they allowed to be dismissed, merely with the intention of relying upon the fact that they had made such an application in order to obtain a further period of three years before execution of the decree could be held to be barred by limitation. He urged that the test of whether the application was made in good faith with a real intention to proceed to execution was never applied.

It may be true to say that this aspect of such proceedings has been to a great extent lost sight of, but it is not accurate to say that the test has never been applied.

On general principles it would seem clear that the Legislature when it used the phrases "application for execution" and "step-in-aid of execution" had in mind a bona fide intention on the part of the decree-holder to proceed with his right to have execution. It does not seem possible that the Legislature should have ever contemplated an indefinite period being added to the life of a decree by permitting a decree-holder to take colourable steps in a very thinly disguised pretence of a desire to obtain execution when he really did not want execution at all, but only wanted to secure a further period of limitation during which the amount of his decree might go on increasing. It would, therefore, seem on the face of it a proper interpretation of the words "for execution" and "step-in-aid of execution" that the decree-holder must really be desiring execution and that the words cannot be read as "an application made with the sole object of extending the period of limitation" and "a step taken with the sole object of extending limitation." The words "for execution" mean "for the purpose of obtaining execution" and the words "step-in-aid of execution" mean "step taken for the purpose of obtaining execution." This which appeared upon a consideration of Art. 182 to be a natural and proper interpretation re-search has shown to have the support of weighty judicial authority, though the decisions would seem to have been to some extent lost sight of, or, if we may say so misinterpreted.

In Jahar v. Kamini Debi (1) while Prinsep and Hill, JJ, held that the application which was filed to save limitation was a good application in accordance with law, reliance was further placed on the fact that even if the alleged defect on account of which it was urged that the application failed in effect was a real defect, the prosecution of the proceedings had been 'bona fide' and reference was made to the Privy Council decision in Hira Lal v. Badri Das (2). To this Privy Council decision we shall refer later.

In Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (3), the application was held to be a valid application. There was no suggestion that the applicant did not really desire to press the execution proceedings; in other words, there was no suggestion of a mere desire to save limitation.

Banerji, J., in his order referring the case to a Full Bench held "It is not every informality that would vitiate an application and take it out of that clause. Were it otherwise, bona fide applications for execution would fail to save limitation owing to trivial defects of form, a result which I do not think the Legislature could have intended." Maclean, C. J., in delivering the judgment of a Full Bench of five Judges in which all concurred, said "I am in entire agreement with the opinion he (Mr. Justice Banerji) has expressed upon the question of whether the application for execution of the 7th July 1891 was or was not one according to law. I concur both in the reasoning and in the conclusion expressed by Mr. Justice Banerji." Here we find again a clear reference to the importance to be attached to the question whether the application was a bona fide effort to proceed with execution.

In Adhar Chandra Dass v. Lal Mohun Das (4), Banerji, J., in rejecting various cases that had been referred to as supporting the argument that the application was not in accordance with law said "None of those cases is in point; and I do not think we should be doing right in straining the law and in holding that an application made bona fide with the object of obtaining satisfaction of a decree should be held to be not in accordance with law, merely because the Court in which the application was made thought fit, for some reason, not to allow the same." Stress was here again laid on the aspect of bona fides.

In Mangal Sen v. Baldeo Prasad (5) though there was no detail of the property given in the application, the decree-holder further stated in his application that he would file a list later, but "at present for the purposes of saving limitation, this application is made owing to the defendant having become insolvent." The application was registered but no list was filed and no further steps were taken and a month later the application was struck off. Mahmood, J., held that by the very statement of the decree-holder and the fact that he took no steps to make the application effective, the application was clearly shown to be nominal and fictitious, and was, therefore, not in accordance with law.

In Chattor v. Newal Singh (6), the application asked for something which "the Court was not competent to do" Straight and Tyrrell, JJ., held that the application must be for "something which by law the Court is competent to do" and not for "something which either to the decree-holder's direct knowledge in fact, or from his presumed knowledge of the law, he must have known the Court was incompetent to do." Here again is a strong indication that the application must be made with the bona fide intention of getting execution.

In Mahtab Kuar v. Sham Sunder Lal (7), Mahmood, J., held that if he had not been dismissing the application on another ground he would further have held that it did not amount to a step-in-aid of execution because it was not made bona fide to obtain execution. The decree-holder had failed to pay process-fees and when called upon to do so had declared his intention of not prosecuting the application.

We now come to three decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri (8) when holding that an application was effective their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked "nor was there any finding of either of the Courts below that the several proceedings were not bona fide for the purpose of enforcing the decree or of keeping it in force." And they gave reasons why it could not be held that the application of the decree-holder to strike off his application could not be held to be other than bona fide.

In Hira Lal v. Badri Das (2) which came before their Lordships in 1880, the decree-holder had been prosecuting execution in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who was believed by both the parties and moreover by the Subordinate Judge himself to have jurisdiction; though subsequently he was held not to have jurisdiction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the principle of s. 14 of Act XIV of 1859 (now s. 14 of Act IX of 1908) based on bona fides must be applied to s. 20 of Act XIV 1859. (Now Art. 182 of Sch. I of Act IX of 1908), and, applying that principle, that bona fide proceedings in the wrong Court gave a new starting point of limitation. They referred to Roy Dhunput Singh v. Madhomotee Debia (9) and said "their Lordships are of opinion that a proceeding taken bona fide and with due diligence before a party whom the party bona fide believes, though erroneously, to have jurisdiction, specially when the Judge himself also supposes that he has jurisdiction, and deals with the case accordingly, is a proceeding to enforce the decree within the meaning of s. 20." It should be noted that the principle was applied not merely to exclude the time mistakenly occupied but to give a new starting point. This is clear from the passage quoted and also from the reliance placed on Roy Dhunput Singh v. Madhomotee Debia (9). It is also clear from the fact that an examination of the dates quoted by their Lordships shows that if merely the time mistakenly occupied was to be excluded, the later application would still have been long after the period of limitation had expired.

In Roy Dhunput Singh v. Madhomotee Debia (9), the application failed owing to a bona fide mistake by the decree-holder as to an attachment that he thought he had made of money standing to the credit of the judgment-debtor while the attachment had in fact been made in another suit. The Privy Council held that the application having been made bona fide the period of limitation began to run from the date of the disposal of the application by the Court. In delivering their judgment at page 31* their Lordships said "it is said that this proceeding cannot be held to be one to keep the judgment in force, because it was a petition to obtain execution of a sum of money which it was not possible that the execution could reach and that that must have been so to the knowledge of the decree-holder. It seems to their Lordships that these circumstances really affect only the bona fides of the proceeding. If their Lordships could infer from these facts that the petition was a colourable one, not really with a view to obtain the money; if they could come to that conclusion in point of fact, the proceeding would not be one contemplated by the Statute; but their Lordships cannot come to that conclusion". They, therefore, came to the conclusion that the proceeding, although abortive, was a proceeding within the meaning of s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 (now Art. 182 of Schedule I of Act IX of 1908).

The above cases suffice to show that the application of the test of bona fide to determine whether an application is really one for execution is not novel.

It is only necessary to note that though there are differences between the contents of s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 and of Art. 182 of Sch I of the present Act IX of 1908 there is no difference that is material to the matter we are considering. The words in s. 20 were "no process of execution"; the words in Art. 182 are "no application for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution". In neither section is there any specific mention of bona fides. If their Lordships held that bona fides was necessary to make "a process for execution" effective, it follows that the same interpretation should be put on the words application for execution or step-in-aid of execution."

Counsel for the appellant stated that since 1871 the bona fides or mala fides of the application has been immaterial. He did not develop this proposition beyond relying on a passage that he quoted from a commentary. It is true that the author makes that statement but we have not been able to find any real support for it in the authorities quoted by him.

The idea, in so far as it exists, would appear to have its origin in the decision of the Full Bench, Eshan Chunder Bose v. Prannath Nag (10). In that case Jackson and McDonell, JJ., in their referring order, wanted to maintain the incorporation of the principle of bona fides to stop a succession of colourable applications.

The idea underlying both the referring judgment and that of the Full Bench was that the question was whether the later application could be refused being held to be colourable merely because the previous application had been colourable, i.e., mala fide as indicated by the fact that the decree-holder had allowed it to go by default.

Clearly the Full Bench was right in holding that the later application could not be refused merely for that reason. The decree-holder was entitled to make an application and until he defaulted in prosecuting it (when it would for that reason be struck off) it could not be known whether that latest application was being made with a bona fide intention to proceed or not. The later application might well be being made with a bona fide intention to proceed though the previous one was not, and the later could not, therefore, be treated as mala fide merely because the earlier was.

But the proceedings on the earlier application having ex hypothesi been concluded, it would be possible to determine whether the facts showed it to have been mala fide, and, if it was, then, though it could not be held to show that the later application was also mala fide it could be held not to be an application "for execution," i.e., "intended to obtain execution" and, therefore, ineffective to save limitation.

The two aspects are quite distinct. The former was clearly before the Full Bench, the latter was not; and on the principle stated in Quinn v. Leathem (11) particular phrases used by Couch, C. J. should not be treated as governing a question not directly considered.

Jackson, J., when reluctantly concurring, remarked that inasmuch as the Legislature must be supposed to have been aware of the earlier decisions incorporating the rule of bona fides into s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 and as it, "as I supposed designedly omitted to incorporate in the Act of" (of 1871) "the principle of those decisions, I think we ought now to abstain from qualifying the precise terms of the Act." It would seem, however, that the Legislature would presumably have only legislated if it disagreed with the principle already strongly affirmed judicially.

We think that it is clear from the cases later in date that we have quoted that the principle has been frequently recognised that the bona fides or mala fides of the earlier application is an important ingredient in determining whether that application is effective to save limitation for the later application; though the bona fides or mala fides of the later application cannot be judged at the time that it is presented from anything that has gone before and, therefore, cannot at the time of presentation be entered into.

To examine now the circumstances of this case, the decree-holder had obtained a decree as long ago as March 9th, 1915. He then made two applications for execution both of which he allowed to be struck off for non-prosecution (baadam pairawi). Next he made an application on November 12th, 1918 which he allowed to be struck off on January 23rd, 1920. His next application was on March 4th 1921, and this is the crucial application in the case. It contained a prayer that certain property be attached and brought to sale, but none of that property was within the jurisdiction of the Court passing the decree and to which application was made. This was drawn to his attention and he was given an opportunity to amend his application. All that he had to do was to apply for the transfer of the decree. This he failed to do and it was not till a period of nearly two months had elapsed that his application was struck off, and on the same day he withdrew all the process fees that he had deposited. The property in regard to which he had applied was not situated in any other Province or at any great distance; it was situated in the jurisdiction of the adjoining Munsif, i. e., in the jurisdiction of the Munsif of West Budaun, and if the decree-holder had been serious in an attempt to obtain execution there would have been no difficulty in applying for a transfer to the Munsif of West Budaun and prosecuting the execution in that Court. Further we note that when he made the present application in regard to which the question of limitation has to be considered he applied in regard to property within the jurisdiction of the Munsif of East Budaun. It would appear, therefore, that there was property within that Munsif's jurisdiction. Finally we note that after his application of March 4th, 1921 which was struck off on the 29th April 1921 he made no further attempt to obtain execution until he filed the present application on January 12th, 1923, nearly two years later. Under these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the application of March 4th, 1921 was a bona fide application with the intention of obtaining execution. It was merely a colourable application intended to save limitation and with that intention only. Such applications made only with the intention of keeping the decree alive have, it may further be noted, since 1877 been dropped out of the appropriate Article of the Limitation Acts.

We have been asked to remand the case. We see no reason to do so as we have the whole history of the case before us. Counsel for the appellant who has displayed great industry on behalf of his client has had more than a month since the question was raised at the first hearing before us, in which to consider this matter of the good or bad faith of the earlier application, and it is certainly no fault of his if he has been unable in the circumstances of the case to take up any other position than that decree-holders habitually file colourable applications merely to save limitation and allow the debt to accumulate and the question of their bona fides is never challenged. As we have shown it cannot be challenged at the time of presentation and if the application is not prosecuted it is struck off, but it can be and should be challenged when the application comes to be used to save limitation. Further we may note that a remand could not in any event avail the appellant for as we shall proceed to show, the appeal must fail on a second ground also.

This being our view of the law and of the facts we hold that the application of March 4th, 1921 was not an application "for execution" or "a step-in-aid of execution" and that the application of January 12th, 1923, was barred by limitation and the appeal must be dismissed.

As to the second point we hold that the application of the 4th March 1921 was not in accordance with law in that it asks the Court to do something which it was not competent to do. On behalf of the appellant we have been referred to Ramasami Ayyangar v. Seshayyengar (12), Ramanandan Chetti v. Periatambi Shervai (13), Rama v. Varada (14), Samia Pillai v. Chockalinga Chettiar (15), Mangal Khan v. Salim Ullah Khan (16), Aptapuddin Ahmad v. Jogendra Narain Tewari (17), Nathubhai Kusandas v. Pranjivan Lalchand (18) and Bando Krishna Kanbargi v. Narsinha Konher Deshpande (19). We will very briefly consider these cases.

In Mangal Khan v. Salim Ullah Khan (16), the applicant filed no succession certificate and it was held that that did not render the application one not in accordance with law. There is nothing in that case to show that the decree-holder was given any time to file the certificate as he should have been and that he neglected to file it. The case is clearly analogous to the case in Nathubhai Kasandas v. Pranjivan Lalchand (18) quoted by the appellant but which is really against his contention. In both cases the Court was competent to order that the execution should begin on the decree-holder making good the defect within a certain time. In the present case the Court could not order execution at all; it could not do at all what it was asked to do, i. e., to attach and sell.

The same remarks apply to Ramasami Ayyangar v. Seshayyengar (12). In the case of Rama v. Varada (14), there was a purely formal defect and in Samia Pillai v. Chockalinga Chettiar (15) a bona fide mistake. In view of the rulings of this Court to which we shall next refer none of the above cases nor the case of Ramanandan Chetti v. Periatambi Shervai (13) which to some extent helps the appellant need be further considered.

For the respondent we have been referred to Chattar v. Newal Singh (6), Munawar Husain v. Jani Bijai Shankar (20), Langtu Pande v. Baijnath Saran Pande (21) and Jamilunnissa Bibi v. Mathura Parshad (22). These cases clearly establish the proposition that whereas in this case the Court could not give the relief asked for, i. e., attachment and sale of property outside its jurisdiction, the application is not in accordance with law and at any rate in this Court must far outweigh any such slight inference as may possibly be drawn from the Madras cases quoted for the appellant. We, therefore, hold that the application was further not in accordance with law because it was made to a Court which was not competent to grant the relief asked for.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Before an order can be made for the appointment of a Commissioner to examine accounts, the examination and adjustment of accounts or the taking of accounts must be considered necessary. [p. 947, cols. 1 & 2.]

The determination of the factum of the liability of an agent to account is a matter which falls entirely within the province of the Court and cannot be delegated to a Commissioner appointed for the purpose of taking accounts. [p. 947, col. 1.]

Where in a suit for accounts it is found that the defendant has delivered to the plaintiff all the papers containing the account, it lies upon the plaintiff to point out entries in the account which he alleges to be erroneous or in respect of transactions not shown in the accounts and to state what moneys have been received and not credited and the Court will have to deal with the questions thus raised between the parties treating each item separately. In such a case it is the duty of the plaintiff to produce the accounts together with a succinct statement of what they contain and what the balance is, whether in favour of the plaintiff or against him. The Court will then decide as to each particular item or series of items, giving the defendant an opportunity of explaining, supporting or accounting for the said items. If on dealing with the questions so raised it is found that the defendant is liable a preliminary decree should then be passed directing a Commissioner to be appointed to examine and adjust the accounts on the basis of the findings of the Court on the questions decided as aforesaid and special directions should be given to the Commissioner as to the scope and limits of the investigation to be held by him so as to determine the extent of the defendant's liability. [p. 948, col. 2; p. 949, col. 1.]

It is only to prevent a waste of public time that resort is to be had to the appointment of a Commissioner, but when it is found necessary to have recourse to the provisions of r. 16 of O. JUDGMENT.

Mukerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant who worked as their Tahsildar. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision and passed a preliminary decree for accounts for the period in suit to be taken by a Commissioner to be appointed for the purpose. The defendant has thereupon preferred this appeal.

The appellant's contention substantially is to the effect that upon the finding of the Court of Appeal below the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed. It is also urged that in view of the finding that the defendant has submitted all the papers which it was his duty to prepare and submit, the plaintiffs are not entitled to any decree in the absence of circumstances justifying the granting of liberty to the plaintiffs to surcharge and falsify. This last mentioned argument, however, is based upon a misconception, for it is not pretended that the accounts were ever settled between the parties in the present case. It is only in the case of settled accounts that liberty has to be obtained by a plaintiff to surcharge and falsify. A suit by a principal for accounts on the allegation that the defendant, his agent has not rendered any account, has manifestly an entirely different scope from that of a suit in which a principal alleges that the defendant, his agent has rendered accounts and prays to have them re-opened or to have liberty to surcharge and falsify them, on the ground of fraud or material error. The distinction has been clearly pointed out in the case of Prasanna Kumar Mookerjee v. Burn & Co. (1).

As regards the main contention of the appellant the matter stands thus. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendant worked as their Tahsildar up to Poush 1326 B. S. and had rendered accounts up to 1323, B. S. that although he submitted certain papers relating to the period from 1324 to the date of his dismissal, these papers were not explained by him and that certain other papers which he should have prepared were not submitted by him, and they claimed the papers mentioned in Schedule kha to the plaint as being due from the defendant. The plaintiffs also alleged that two boats which were in the defendant's charge had not been returned by him, for which they claimed the value along with other sums for which the defendant might be found liable on examination of the accounts. The defence was that the accounts had already been rendered up to the year 1325 B. S. That the defendant had been dismissed before the close of the year 1326 B. S. and so he could not be liable for the nikashi papers for that year, but that he had nevertheless submitted all the papers for the said year that he was in the ordinary course required to prepare. The learned Subordinate Judge has distinctly found in his judgment that the defendant has submitted all the papers that it was his duty to prepare and submit, and that the plaintiffs, therefore, were not entitled to a decree for the papers mentioned in Schedule kha to the plaint. The learned Subordinate Judge has held, however, that mere submission of papers did not absolve the defendant from liability but that he is bound to explain them which he never did. He, therefore, made a decree which runs in these words "There be a preliminary decree for accounts for the period in suit and a Commissioner be appointed by the Trial Court for examination of the account papers submitted by the defendant but not explained by him. The defendant shall explain the papers to the Commissioner who will, after examining the same, ascertain what sums if any are payable by the defendant to the plaintiffs or vice versa. The lower Court will consider the plaintiffs' claim to the two boats referred to in the judgment. The appellant challenges the propriety of the decree on the ground that as the defendant has submitted all the papers there is no further liability of the defendant to account and it is disputed on his behalf that there is a liability on him to explain the accounts submitted by him. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Upendra Kishore v. Ram Tara Debya (2) and Debendra Narayan Singh v. Narendra Narayan Singh (3). These decisions were relied on by the learned Munsif in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. There is, however, abundant authority for the proposition that an agent will not discharge himself from the duty of accounting, by merely delivering to his employer a set of written accounts without attending to explain them, and producing vouchers by which the items of disbursements are supported [See Annoda Persad Roy v. Dwarkanath Gangopadhyaya (4), Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (5) and Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (6).] The two cases cited on behalf of the appellant do not lay down any contrary proposition. In the first of these cases the suit was for accounts against the defendant who had acted as the plaintiff's guardian during the plaintiff's minority and the plaintiff alleged that all the account papers were with the defendant. It was found as a fact that this allegation was wholly and deliberately false and that the account papers were with the plaintiff himself. It was held in that case that the plaintiff by falsely stating that the defendant had the accounts and by declining even in the final stage of the case to produce them had put himself out of Court and his suit should have been dismissed. In the other case the plaintiffs having all the account papers with them withheld them and it was held that every presumption should have been made against them as laid down in illustration (g) of s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, even to the extent of dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. In the present case the plaintiffs have produced some of the papers and expressed their willingness to produce some others and if they do not produce the rest which have been found to have been submitted by the defendant and offer no explanation for such non-production, the Court will be justified in making a presumption against them and the length to, which that presumption will go will depend upon the circumstances. The defendant, therefore, is not absolved from liability to account merely because he has submitted the papers. But the plaintiffs are not entitled to the decree which they have obtained merely because the defendant has not explained the papers. Upon the findings they have got all the accounts in their possession. They alleged in the plaint that the defendant had misappropriated large sums of money, and had made many false or incorrect entries in the accounts and had allowed a certain sum recoverable as a rent to be barred by limitation and they tentatively claimed Rs. 1,154-5-3 as being due from the defendant. They alleged further that the defendant had not submitted the papers mentioned in Schedule kha and had not explained the papers mentioned in Schedule kha. It was not stated, however, whether the plaintiffs had called upon the defendant to explain the accounts. The defendant, on the other hand, stated that nothing was due from him and that he had submitted all the papers and had also explained the accounts. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs did not produce all the papers which they had in their possession and failed to prove the items mentioned in the plaint as having been wrongly or falsely entered or misappropriated by the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge has found as I have already stated that no papers are due but that the accounts have not been explained and without finding whether any item requires explanation or has been wrongly or falsely entered has made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The decree passed under such circumstances can scarcely be justified.

On the finding that all the papers have been submitted, the plaintiffs were bound to call upon the defendant to explain the accounts which apparently they never did; and if the defendant had expressed his willingness to explain the accounts if called, upon to do so and averred that he had never been so called upon, we would have been bound to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit as being one without a cause of action. This, however, the defendant has not pleaded. Moreover the defendant appears to have sent the papers to the plaintiffs' Sadar Cutchery and then left, after which he was dismissed. It is, therefore, not very clear whether the plaintiffs were aware of the submission of the papers so as to necessitate their examining the accounts and calling upon the defendant to explain. The submission of the papers was neither regular nor formal, and the circumstances are not such as would justify us in holding that the plaintiffs should be non-suited for want of a cause of action.

At the same time we think that the decree has been too readily passed and the order for examination of the accounts has been made without proper findings or materials. If a decree were justified in the present case it will be open to any principal who has got all the accounts of his agent in his possession, to employ the machinery of the Courts for examining his accounts on the off-chance of making his agent liable for any sum which on such examination may be found due from him. Such indiscriminate issue of commissions by Courts for examining accounts has been condemned by this Court on more occasions than one, and is, indeed, contrary to the spirit of O. XX, r. 16 of the C. P. C. as authorizing a Commissioner to determine not merely the quantum, but the factum of liability of an agent, a matter which falls entirely within the province of the Court. The words of that rule as also of r. 11 of O. XXVI clearly indicate that before an order can be made for appointment of a Commissioner the examination or adjustment of accounts or the taking of accounts must be considered necessary. In the case of Chand Ram v. Brojo Gobind Doss (7) which was a suit for an account of money received and disbursed, the plaintiff filed his khata books and did not allege that they had been falsified and the Court deputed an amin under s. 181 of Act VIII of 1859 to investigate the accounts, it was held that the plaintiff should have made up the accounts himself without troubling the Court in the matter and should have fixed the amount due to him from the defendant instead of stating a sum on guess. It was observed that it was surprising that it never struck the Judge as an unusual proceeding on the part of the plaintiff that being provided with account books the entries in which were disputed by him he should have asked the Court to balance the account for him instead of making up the total himself. In the present case the plaintiffs gave certain items in their plaint but the finding of the learned Munsif to which I have already referred was that none of them had been proved to be false or wrong, and that finding has not been reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The position in the present case, therefore, is very much the same as in the case to which I have referred. In the present case the Commissioner has been appointed to take the accounts which is entirely different from a reference made of the cause in a suit for accounts to a Commissioner. Where in a suit for account it was ordered by consent of parties that the case should be referred to a Commissioner to take accounts, who in taking them was to decide upon all questions of fact, whether as to delivery of certain merchandise delivered or otherwise with full powers for the purpose of the investigation and that if questions of law should arise and could not be settled or disposed of before the Commissioner, they were to be submitted to the Court their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that such a reference was different from the ordinary reference to a Commissioner to examine accounts under the C. P. C., and expressed a doubt whether it was competent for the Court to re-open the question of account against a clear finding upon a question of fact relating to the account made by the Commissioner upon the evidence properly before him. Watson v. Aga Mehdee Sherazee (8). In the case of Toncourti Debi v. Satya Dyal Banerjee (9), where the accounts in a suit had been referred to a Commissioner appointed under s. 394 of the C. P. C., with powers under s. 398, Sir Comar Petheram, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court on the 2nd August 1889 observed as follows. :—

"It is perfectly clear that the object of this order was to refer to the Commissioner the examination of the accounts for the purpose of enabling the Court to see what the accounts were, and the duty of the Commissioner was to make out an account in the way an accountant should make out an account, showing to the Court exactly what was the account the books showed and nothing else. The business of the Commissioner was practically to place himself in the position of an assistant to the Court so as to give the Court all the information which the accounts gave so as to enable the Court to decide; and it is obvious that what was intended was that he should take the Bengali accounts which were filed in 1878 and should, by comparing them with the books, show whether they actually represented what the books showed. That was his duty and, if that had been done, then this Court would have been in a position when the matter came before it, to deal with the matter, because the Court would then have known what the books of the parties showed and would have been in a position to deal with them in a satisfactory way. It is true that under the sections which are mentioned here the Commissioner was entitled to take evidence for certain purposes and the purposes for which a Commissioner is entitled to take evidence are perfectly clear. Where the accounts are ambiguous or where they do not disclose the facts, it is the duty of the Commissioner to take evidence on that point so as to report to the Court what the meaning of a particular series of entries in those books is for the purpose of enabling the Court to give judgment upon them." It was held in that case that it was not clear that the parties had consented to refer the accounts to the Commissioner as an arbitrator and, therefore, the report of the Commissioner was to be treated as non-existent.

In the present case the scope of the Commissioner's enquiry does not appear to have been defined and the proceedings that were held before him after the decree was passed amply support that view.

The principles governing a suit of this nature are clearly laid down in a series of decisions amongst which reference may be made to the case of Syed Shah Abai Ahmad v. Bibee Nusibun (10). Annada Prosad Roy v. Dwaraka Nath Gangopadhyo (4) to which I have already referred Degamber Mozumdar v. Kaly Nath Roy (11), Huri Nath Rai v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi (12) and Thirukumaresan Chetti v. Subbaraya Chetti (13). Applying these principles to the present case which is somewhat out of the ordinary in that it has been found that no account papers are due to the plaintiffs, and where it is not alleged that the defendant has called upon to explain the accounts and has been neglected, failed or refused to do so, it follows that it lies upon the plaintiffs to point out entries in the accounts which they allege to be erroneous, or in respect of transactions not shown in the accounts to state what monies have been received and not credited and the Judge will have to deal with the questions thus raised between the parties treating each item separately. In such a case as observed in the case of Upendra Kishore v. Ram Tara Debya (2), it is the plaintiff's duty to produce the accounts in Court together with a succinct statement of what they contain and what the balance is whether in his favour or against him. This the plaintiffs have done to some extent in their plaint but they should be allowed a further opportunity of examining the accounts and putting before the Court the items they object to or challenge and then the Court will decide as to each particular item or series of items giving the defendant an opportunity of explaining, supporting or accounting for the said items. If on dealing with the questions so raised it is found that the defendant is liable then a preliminary decree should be passed directing the Commissioner to be appointed for the purpose to examine and adjust the accounts on the basis of the findings of the Court on the questions decided as aforesaid and special directions should be given to the Commissioner as to the scope and limits of the investigation to be held by him so as to determine the extent of the defendant's liability.

A preliminary decree such as has been passed in the present case without any directions as to the scope of the examination such as the circumstances of the case require, is bound to operate to the prejudice and harassment of the defendant to which he should not be subjected in view of the finding that the account papers are not due from him and the fact that he has not been called upon to explain them. It is also open to this further objection that it delegates to the Commissioner the functions which legitimately appertain to the Court. It is only to prevent waste of public time that resort is to be had to the appointment of a Commissioner but when it is found necessary to have recourse to the provisions of O. XX, r. 16 the Judge should follow the directions contained in O. XX, r. 17 and furnish the Commissioner with such part of the proceedings and such detailed instructions as appear necessary.

We think, therefore, that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge should be set aside and the appeal dealt with by him in the light of the directions given above.

Costs will abide the result.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 27 OF 1924.

October 16, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

CHANDAN SINGH—APPLICANT—

versus

LAXMAN AND ANOTHER—NON-APPLICANTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXIII, r. 1—Permission to sue in forma pauperis—Application rejected—Erroneous view of law—Revision, whether lies—"Sufficient means", scope of—Occupancy holding, whether 'property'.

If a Court refuses to allow a person to sue as a pauper on an erroneous view of law, the order is liable to be set aside in revision under s. 115 of the O. P. C., as by reason of such a view its decision is vitiated on the ground of illegality which led it to refuse to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law. [p. 949, col. 2.]

Ganesh Prasad v. Rewa Bai, 41 Ind. Cas. 883; 13 N. L. R. 116 and Achalsingh v. D. B. Seth Jiwandas, 75 Ind. Cas. 993; 19 N. L. R. 165; (1924) A. I. R. (N.) 44, followed.

In order that permission to sue in forma pauperis should be granted, the law requires that the intending suitor should establish the negation of the actuality of possession of means by him and not of the chance of a contingency, much less of an expectancy, on his part, of getting in future some means sufficient to enable him to pay the prescribed fee for his plaint. [p. 950, col. 2.]

An occupancy holding of a person seeking permission to sue in forma pauperis cannot, therefore, be taken as sufficient means within the meaning of O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., as the right of occupancy is in the nature of a purely personal right and cannot be transferred or even surrendered for value without restrictions. [p. 950, col. 1.]

The price or compensation which an occupancy tenant, who has made an agreement with the landlord for surrendering his holding, but has not actually executed the surrender deed, expects to get for surrendering or dawning his lesser interest into the greater interest of the landlord, cannot be considered to be "means possessed" by him for the purposes of O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C. It is more 'in the nature of an expectant claim' under an 'inchoate' right than 'property' or 'means' of which a person may be said to be possessed. [p. 950, col. 2.]

Revision against an order of the First Sub-Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, in M. C. No. 45 of 1923, dated the 30th November 1923.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—I am of opinion that this revision must succeed. The Munsif's view that the applicant who is an occupancy tenant, and expects to make Rs. 1,000 if the landlord were to accept a surrender of his occupancy land, cannot be considered to be a pauper is, on the face of it, erroneous and against law and liable to be set aside in revision under s. 115, C. P. C., because, by reason of such a view his decision is vitiated on the ground of illegality, which led him to refuse to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law: compare Ganesh Prasad v. Rewa Bai (1) and Achalsingh v. Seth Jiwandas (2).

That the devolution of an untransferable right of occupancy does not create a liability to pay the debts of the deceased holder of such a right, or that the crops grown by the heir are not assets of the deceased which can be followed for satisfaction of the debts due by the deceased, is a view which has long prevailed in this Court: see Nathmal v. Mattoo (3).

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 883; 13 N. L. R. 116.

For the purposes of the Provincial Insolvency Act also the law does not recognize occupancy tenant-right as 'property'. That the new Tenancy Act of 1920 contains an express prohibition against the appointment of a Receiver of the occupancy land or even of the crops thereof and does not permit attachment and sale of an occupancy holding, is too well-known to the litigant public. For purposes of s. 60 of the C. P. C., the interest which a judgment-debtor possesses in his occupancy land is not considered attachable and saleable on the ground that he has no disposing power over it. It is an undeniable fact that under law, a tenancy is personal and heritable within certain limits and is subject to many restrictions as to its alienation.

The right of occupancy can thus be in the nature of a purely personal right and cannot, therefore, be freely transferred without restriction. Nor is it saleable by auction at a compulsory sale under the orders of the Court. The nearest approach to such a right is the right of a Hindu widow to reside in her husband's family house. Such a right cannot be attached in execution as it is not saleable property: Salakshi v. Lakshmayee (4). Similarly inasmuch as a mere agreement to sell does not create any interest in immovable property, the price that may be payable does not become a 'debt' until the conveyance is executed and consequently it is not liable to be attached before the execution of the conveyance, in execution of a decree against the intending purchaser: Ahmad-ud-din Khan v. Majlis Rai (5). Once the sale is complete the amount representing the price may be attached in the hands of the purchaser, and it does not make any difference that the whole is payable in one sum or by instalments or in the shape of periodical payments: compare Har Shanker Prasad Singh v. Baijnath Das (6). Consequently merely because an occupancy tenant's interest which is otherwise not saleable or at any rate is subject to a restriction as to alienation, may, by agreement with the landlord, be convertible into cash, it does not follow that the amount likely to be fetched becomes 'property' or debt over which he might be said to have a disposing power, in the sense that the landlord can be served with a notice of attachment prohibiting him from paying it to the tenant, until the surrender deed is executed.

Just as the interest in the pre-empted property of a successful pre-emptor who has not yet paid the pre-emptive price fixed by the decree is a merely contingent interest which cannot be attached, similarly, the price or compensation which an occupancy tenant, who has made an agreement with the landlord for surrendering his holding but has not actually executed the surrender deed, expects to get, for surrendering or drowning his lesser interest into the greater interest of the landlord cannot be considered to be "means possessed" by him for the purposes of O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C. It is more 'in the nature of an expectant claim' under an 'inchoate' right than 'property' or 'means' of which a person may be said to be possessed: compare Syud Tuffuzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (7).

Where a fee is not prescribed, the pauper must be entitled to property worth one hundred rupees other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit, but where a fee is prescribed all that the law enjoins a Court to see is whether the intending suitor is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed, for otherwise he cannot be allowed to sue as a pauper. What the law, therefore, wants the intending suitor to establish is the negation of the actuality of possession of means by him if he is seeking permission to sue in forma pauperis, and not of the chance of eventuality, or of a mere possibility or contingency, much less of an expectancy on his part, of getting in future some means sufficient to enable him to pay the prescribed fee for his plaint.

If a person is possessed of property but his ownership, i. e., the bundle of rights he has in that property, is such as has no present market value, under the law in force for the time being, or gives him no absolute control or power of disposal over it, or his liberty in the matter of enjoyment or exercise of an absolute, free and untrammelled right of transferring or conveying a valid title thereto, in favour of any person in the world he liked,—a right incidental to all ownership—is, by any Statute, taken away, or fettered, or made to depend upon the option, or consent or concurrence of third persons who are not bound or under any legal obligation to convey, or to accept a conveyance from him, at his request, no intending purchaser will go in for the acquisition of such a right, and part with his own money in obtaining a transfer of a precarious ownership like this. According to Blackstone 'the sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe', is 'property'.

Austin enumerates the following amongst the five applications of the term 'property':—

"A right indefinite in user, —unrestricted in point of disposition—and unlimited in point of duration".

I may, therefore, say that an ownership of property devoid of the right of free transfer, is for all intents and purposes, only a nominal ownership, because it is not capable of immediate conversion into what may be termed the where-withal or sinews of war to enable the pauper to fight out the battle with his opponent in a Civil Court.

To insist upon an applicant who possesses an unsaleable tenant right to establish as a condition precedent to his getting the permission to sue in forma pauperis that there is nobody, amongst his possible heirs, who is willing to take a transfer, or not even the landlord to take a surrender of his tenant right, and pay him its money equivalent in the King's coin, or make a present to him, or to accommodate him with a loan, of the amount required for payment of Court-fee is to practically deny justice to a poor litigant at the very threshold of the temple of justice he seeks to enter under the special provision in the C. P. C. which the Sovereign power has thought fit to make, for the benefit of persons too poor to pay the Court-fee, in order that they may be enabled to bring and prosecute their claims without payment of Court-fee: compare Jotindro Nath Chowdhry v. Dwarka Nath Dey (8). It would be defeating the very object of the Legislature in enacting O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., which vests jurisdiction in a Court to accommodate a poor suitor by granting him temporary exemption from payment of the duty which it is the privilege of the Crown to levy in advance on every litigation which a subject might choose to commence in Courts established under its authority for administering justice according to law. The application has, in my opinion, been improperly rejected by the Munsif.

The omission to mention the value of the occupancy tenant right in the Schedule cannot also under these circumstances be treated as a defect which renders the petition liable to rejection under r. 5 (a) of O. XXXIII, C. P. C., as held by the Munsif.

For all these reasons I allow the application and remand the case for disposal according to law with advertence to the above remarks. The non-applicants shall pay the costs of these proceedings in revision to the applicant and bear his own. Costs in lower Court will abide the event. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 220 OF 1924.

September 4, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Simpson, A. J. C.

Saiyid SAJJAD HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF—
versus

MUL CHAND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Defamation—Report of crime to Police—Honest belief in truth of report—Suit for damages—Qualified privilege—"Honest belief" whether same thing as "reasonable and probable cause".

A report of a crime to the Police carries with it a qualified privilege with regard to defamation. That qualified privilege amounts to this, that it is sufficient that if the defendant had an honest belief that what he said was true. An honest belief does not, however, come to the same thing as reasonable and probable cause.

Majju v. Lachman Prasad, 84 Ind. Cas. 702; 46 A. 671; 22 A. L. J. 597; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 535; L. R. 5 A. 478 Civ., referred to.

Therefore, where there is theft in the house of the defendant, and he makes a report that the plaintiff was concerned in it, in the honest belief that the plaintiff was so concerned, the plaintiff's suit for recovery of damages for defamation is not maintainable.

Second appeal from a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 23rd February 1924, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Kheri, dated the 22nd December 1922.

(8) 20 C. 111 at p. 115; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 75.

Mr. Ram Prasad Varma, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Misra for Mr. G. N. Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the plaintiff. The suit was one for the recovery of Rs. 1,500 as damages for defamation. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the claim for Rs. 50 with full costs of the suit against the defendant. The defendant appealed and the learned District Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts. The plaintiff comes here on second appeal.

On the facts found by the lower Court it is impossible to disturb the decree. The facts found are that there was theft in the house of the defendant, and that he made a report that the plaintiff was concerned in it in the honest belief that the plaintiff was so concerned. A report of a crime to the Police carries with it a qualified privilege with regard to defamation. That qualified privilege amounts to this, that it is sufficient that if the defendant had an honest belief that what he said was true, as was held in a recent case by a Full Bench of the High Court Majju v. Lachman Prasad (1). No doubt the judgment goes on to say that an honest belief and reasonable and probable cause come to the same thing. With very great respect I cannot accept this proposition. "This writ down so in heaven but not earth". Here human nature is a compound thing, by no means entirely made up of reason. Many honest beliefs exist without either reasonable or probable cause.

There is no ground for interfering with the decree. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 95, 97, 103—Decree-holder purchaser—Application under r. 95—Obstruction—Order referring applicant to suit—Claimant obstructor party to suit—Order, whether appealable—Separate suit, maintainability of.

In execution of a decree on a mortgage, the plaintiff purchased the property himself, but was obstructed by a prior purchaser (a party to the suit) in execution of a money-decree obtained against the mortgagor. Two years thereafter, he again applied for delivery under O. XXI, r. 95, C. P. C., but the Court "referred to him to suit" under the mistaken impression that the petition was under r. 97. The decree-holder without appealing filed a suit:

Held, (1) that the matter arose under s. 47, C. P. C., and, therefore, the plaintiff ought to have appealed and a separate suit did not lie; [p. 954, col. 1.]

(2) that the suit having been misconceived ab initio, the plaintiff was not entitled to ask in second appeal that the suit should be converted into an execution proceeding. [p. 955, col. 1.]

Where claim proceedings under O. XXI, C. P. C., fall also under s. 47, r. 103 of O. XXI does not prevent an appeal against an order therein as it falls under s. 47 of the Code. But the two remedies are not concurrent, so as to entitle a party to proceed at his option either by a suit or by way of appeal; the procedure under s. 47 and that under O. XXI, r. 103 are not cumulative. [p. 954, col. 1.]

Under s. 47 (2), C. P. C., the Court is at liberty to treat a proceeding under the section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding but subject only to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction. [p. 955, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Salem, dated the 18th April 1921, in Appeal Suit No. 52 of 1916, preferred against that of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, dated the 11th October 1915, in O. S. No. 12 of 1915, (O. S. No. 2 of 1913, on the file of the District Court, Salem).

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit to establish the plaintiffs' right to the suit property and to recover the same from defendants Nos. 1 to 5, if necessary after division, and for mesne profits. The Temporary Subordinate Judge of Salem decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs holding that they were entitled to a two-third share in the lease-hold right in the plaint village with mesne profits. On appeal to the District Judge of Salem, he found that the suit was not maintainable in law and dismissed it. The property originally belonged to the 6th defendant and his sons. It was mortgaged under two mortgage deeds, Exs. A and B, to the plaintiffs' father. We are only concerned with the first of these mortgages dated 11th July 1898. The plaintiffs sued on the mortgages, got a decree on 28th August 1907, executed it and purchased the property in Court sale on 28th January 1909. They tried to take possession on 21st May 1910, Ex. C-4 and the 1st defendant and others obstructed. These latter had bought the property on 9th December 1908 in execution of a money decree obtained by them on 10th April 1901 in O. S. No. 698 of 1898 on the file of the Tirupattur Munsif's Court. When the 1st defendant in 1908 proceeded to execute his decree, the plaintiffs' father, on 26th October 1908, put in a claim petition to the Executing Court that the Court sale should be subject to his mortgages. The claim was dismissed on 6th November 1908 and the 1st defendant bought the property in Court sale on 9th December 1908.

The first point taken before me on appeal from the District Judge is with reference to the order made on Ex. C-5. Exhibit C-5 is a petition dated 25th September 1912 by the plaintiffs under r. 95, O. XXI, C. P. C., and they pray that the 1st plaintiff having now become a major the said property may be delivered to the 1st plaintiff on behalf of all the plaintiffs. The order of the learned District Judge on this petition dated 24th October 1912 was: "Refer him to suit". This is obviously a reference to O. XXI, r. 103 where a party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101 may bring a suit. This portion of the O. XXI, C. P. C., begins with r. 97 and is headed "Resistance to delivery of possession to decree-holder or purchaser", whereas r. 95 is in a different part of the order headed "sale of immoveable property". It is not disputed that if the application was in fact under r. 95, the order of the learned Judge must be taken to be an order under that rule, that s. 47 C. P. C., is applicable and that the plaintiff's remedy was not by a suit under r. 103, O. XXI, but by appeal from the order under s. 47, which appeal is specifically given by the Code under s. 2 (2) and s. 96. This point was not taken in the first Court but the learned District Judge allowed it to be taken before him, and as it has been argued in extenso before me I must deal with it. The learned District Judge thought that though Ex. C-5 made no reference to any obstruction and owing to lapse of time the affidavit in support of the petition was not available before him, some reference to an obstruction must have been made therein, otherwise the Court would have ordered delivery which would have been the appropriate order under r. 95 and not have referred the plaintiffs to a suit. The learned Judge, therefore, held that Ex. C-5 was an order passed in execution on a matter of removal of obstruction to delivery of possession and, therefore, that the order in Ex. C-5 was one made against the plaintiffs, in that the Court refused to carry out their prayer for delivery and referred them to a suit. With regard to that, I entertain grave doubts whether the learned Judge was right. Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer for the respondents contends that, assuming the order in Ex. C-5 was one under r. 103, the terms of the rule have not been complied with and the plaintiffs are, therefore, not persons against whom an order has been made and, therefore, no remedy by a suit under r. 103, was open to them. All one can say is that there was no evidence that in October 1912 there was a continued obstruction by the defendants such as has been reported to the Court in June 1910, Ex. C-4. It looks as if the Court was mistaken and thought that the petition Ex. C-5 was really under r. 97 and hence referred the plaintiffs to a suit. However that may be, it will not affect my decision on the main point which I now proceed to consider. It was urged for the plaintiffs-appellants before me that the remedy under r. 103 does not take away the right of appeal under s. 47. Three cases are referred to in Sivasamba Iyer v. Kuppan Samban (1), where it was held that s. 47 is comprehensive and the fact that an alternative procedure by suit instead of appeal is provided in certain circumstances cannot affect its character. In Meyyappa Chetty v. Chidambaram Chetty (2), a decision of the same two learned Judges, they held that O. XXI, r. 103, should not be read as providing expressly against any right of appeal which would otherwise be available. Badmi Seshiah v. Katti Chinna Marippa (3) was also referred to in this connection where a Bench of this Court held that r. 103 is not restricted by the general provisions of s. 47. I might add that this latter is a short judgment and no reasons are given for the decision. In Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nandan (4) decided by the learned Judges who decided the cases just cited from the Madras Law Journal, they held that where claim proceedings under O. XXI, fall also under s. 47, O. XXI, r. 103 does not prevent an appeal against an order therein as it falls under s. 47 of the Code. That is to say, that with regard to this case and those cited from the Madras Law Journal it was held that a suit under r. 103 does not bar an appeal under s. 47. The learned Judges did not consider the case here, namely, whether a case really arising under s. 47 would bar a suit under r. 103. I agree with the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondents that the cases cited (with the possible exception of 52 Indian Cases) do not establish the proposition that the two remedies are concurrent, so that assuming that this is a suit under r. 103 and that the order in Ex. C-5 was really one under s. 47, it was not open to the plaintiffs to proceed at their option either by a suit or by way of appeal. It is also to be observed that s. 47 expressly bars a suit in contra-distinction to r. 103 which says that the order on obstruction proceedings shall be conclusive subject to the result of the suit if any. It has, as far as I know, never been suggested in any case that the procedure under s. 47 and under r. 103 is cumulative. If this were the law, it is not difficult to imagine that anomalies would arise. I must hold, therefore, that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the matter arose under s. 47 and that, therefore, the plaintiffs ought to have appealed. For this appeal they are now, of course, hopelessly out of time. The appellants, therefore, urge the matter which will be dealt with hereafter under the third point. Further the rules provide that an investigation should be made under r. 97 (2) and this is a sine qua non of an order under rr. 98 and 99. These rules bear some analogy to rr. 58 and 63 which are headed "Investigation of claims and objections". But it will be observed that under r. 63 no investigation is necessary and a suit can be brought by the party against whom an order is made. That an investigation is necessary under r. 97 (2) is clear from the rulings in Sarat Chandra Bisu v. Tarini Prasad Pal Chowdhry (5), Majjiga Venkatasubba Reddi v. Chundi Linga Reddi (6), by a Bench of this Court and Gouri Churn Patni v. Sita Patni (7). This only shows again that the plaintiffs ought to have appealed from the order passed on Ex. C-5 if it was mistakenly made under r. 95 as mentioned above or in any case as having been passed without complying with the condition precedent laid down in r. 97 (2). However, there is nothing whatever on the record here to show that any investigation was in fact made. I must, therefore, decide against the appellants with regard to the first point.

The second point is that an act of the Court should not be allowed to injure the appellant. If the Court made a mistake in referring the appellant to a suit, he should not suffer and there was no obligation on him to file an appeal against that order. The reply is this that no estoppel is pleaded and there is nothing on the record to show that the respondent was responsible for the order passed.

The third point is that if as I have held an appeal ought to have been preferred against the order on Ex. C-5, I should convert this into an appeal under s. 47, C. P. C. It is pointed out that as the point was taken by the District Judge, appeal against the order passed by him holding that the matter falls under the purview of s. 47 lies to this Court. The order passed on Ex. C-5 was by a former District Judge and was, therefore, res judicata in the lower Appellate Court. The authority quoted for so treating the appeal is the judgment in C. M. A. No. 127 of 1920 where the learned Judges held that in the facts of that case they should exercise the power. It may be pointed out that the order was one passed in 1912 and I am being asked over 12 years after that time to allow the erroneous procedure taken on that order to be eliminated and practically that the parties should be absolved from the course they took. On the other side, it is represented that the fault, if any, was with the Court and that the plaintiffs may have been misled by the order passed on Ex. C-5. It will be observed that there is no contention in the written statement that the plaintiff's suit was misconceived and even if there were, it is now too late for an appeal under s. 47. Further Muttia v. Appasami (8) shows that the petition Ex. 5 is perfectly legal under s. 47 although the petitioner therein had been previously obstructed. It was held there was nothing to prevent the decree-holder or purchaser who had been obstructed or resisted in his attempt to get possession of the property from making a fresh application for delivery [see also Abdul Karim Sahib v. Timmaraya Chetty (9), a judgment of this Court] The learned District Judge considered this question very carefully in para. 17 of his judgment. He held that the decision in Ex. C-5 was a decision on jurisdiction and that not having been appealed against and there being no prayer in the plaint in the suit to set it aside it was final as regards himself and barred the present suit being converted into an execution application and that in either view, the suit viewed as an application for possession is out of time. Under s. 47 (2) the Court is at liberty to treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding but subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction. It seems to me that here the plea of limitation must prevail. It is said that there are good grounds for excusing the delay and for allowing the matter to be converted into a proceeding. I am, however, unable to agree. I think that the suit being misconceived ab initio, the plaintiffs are not entitled to ask me in second appeal for such a concession as this. I, therefore, think that the appeal fails on all these grounds and must be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 433 OF 1924.

February 24, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Ewart Greaves, Kt.,

APPELLANT

PURENDRA NATH NAG CHOUDHURY

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—“Representative”, meaning of—Mortgagee, whether representative of judgment-debtor—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 148A, 160 (g)—Rent suit by co-sharer landlord, frame of—Patni mortgage executed for benefit of zemindar, whether protected interest.

A person affected by a decree is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of the term as used in s. 47 of the C. P. C. Therefore, a mortgagee of a patni taluk is a representative of the patnidar against whom a decree for rent of the patni has been obtained and is competent to challenge the execution of the decree. [p. 956, col. 2.]

It is of the essence of a suit under s. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act that either the whole rent must be due or else the plaintiff must be unable to ascertain whether or not the whole of the rent is due. For a suit to fall under the provisions of that section it must be a suit to recover the whole of the rent due. [p. 957, col. 1.]

Where a mortgage of a patni taluk is created for the benefit of the zemindar, the mortgage is an interest which comes within the provisions of s. 160 (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and is thus protected from annulment on a sale of the patni for arrears of rent. [p. 958, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Third Subordinate Judge of Alipur dated the 6th of December 1924. For an understanding of the matters that arise in the appeal and the Rule it is necessary to state a few facts. One Raj Mohan Nag Choudhury was the owner of certain property. He died leaving a son Chandra Nath Nag Choudhury who had married a lady named Nisadini. Chandra Nath had six sons one of whom named Bhupendra Nath Nag Choudhury was dead at the time of the events hereinafter referred to and his interest has passed to his son Chandi Charan Nag Choudhury. After the death of Raj Mohan who had left all his properties by Will to his grandsons, the sons of Chandra Nath, a suit was commenced for partition of the estate of Raj Mohan and for administration thereof and a Receiver was appointed. In order to clear off the debts of Raj Mohan's estate it was necessary to raise money in some way or other and the Receiver applied for and obtained an order for the sale of a portion of Raj Mohan's estate for the liquidation of his debts. Against that order an appeal was presented to this Court and was numbered 385 of 1913 and this Court decided that it was inadvisable to sell the two mehals in accordance with the order of the Court below and that it would be better that a patni lease should be created of these two mehals and of another mehal and that out of the selami to be paid by the patnidars the debts of Raj Mohan's estate should be paid off. The patni was put up to auction to the highest bidder and eventually Surendra Nath Nag, one of the grandsons of Raj Mohan Nag, and Nisadini Dasi the widow of Chandra Nath were the highest bidders for the patni. The patni was to be granted at an annual rent of Rs. 7,000 and at a selami, I should mention that several strangers competed for the patni amongst others one Harendra Nath Ballav, Surendra Nath Nag Choudhury and Nisadini Dasi being the highest bidders and a patni was granted to them at a patni rent of Rs. 7,000 and a selami of Rs. 1,82,000. Surendra and Nisadini had no money to pay the selami and accordingly they mortgaged the patni to the applicant before us Hari Mohan Dalal in order to pay the selami. The mortgage included not merely the patni interest but also the zemindari interest of Surendra, Nisadini and Upendra. Subsequently, Nisadini and Surendra failed to pay the patni rent and a suit was brought for the rent and a decree was obtained. In execution of the decree the decree-holders sought to bring the patni to sale and it is against the order for sale of the patni that this appeal has been preferred by Hari Mohan Dalal the mortgagee of the patni interest and of a portion of the zemindari interest. He applied under the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C., to the lower Court asking for an order that the execution was legally untenable and that the property should be sold subject to the liabilities for his mortgage which amounted to a sum of over 3 lacs of rupees and in respect of which he has obtained a mortgage-decree. The Court below dismissed the mortgagee's application on various grounds which are stated in the various orders which appear in the paper book and accordingly this appeal has been preferred.

At the outset a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lay. The objection was based on the ground that the present appellant before us, the mortgagee was not a party to the rent suit which had been brought by the zemindars for the patni rent and that he was not a representative within the meaning of that word and that accordingly he was not entitled to appeal to this Court. There is also a rule which was obtained by the appellant before us having regard to the difficulty that was felt on this point. We think, however, that this objection must fail because we think that within the meaning of the decisions of this Court the appellant is a representative and, therefore, comes within the scope of the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C. In the case of Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (1), the matter was discussed by a Full Bench of this Court and according to the judgment of that Court a representative is a person who is bound by the decree and the learned Judges further said that a person affected by the decree was really a representative within the meaning of the term as used in s. 47 and there is another case which has some bearing on the point, namely, the case of Srimati Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore Manikya (2). It was held in that case that the person to whom a transferable occupancy holding was mortgaged before its sale in execution of a rent decree was a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 244 of the C. P. C. We think, therefore, that the preliminary objection must fail and that an appeal is permissible to this Court.

Now various questions have been raised before us in this appeal. It is not necessary, we think, to deal with all of them because we think that two points that have been urged before us really dispose of the matter. Firstly, it has been urged before us that this is not a rent-decree but is merely a money-decree. As against this we were referred to the provisions of s. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and it was argued on behalf of the opposite parties that having regard to the words of that section and the decisions of this Court the decree passed was a rent-decree and it could be executed as such. Section 148A provides that where a co-sharer landlord who has instituted a suit to recover the rent due to all the co-sharer-landlords in respect of an entire tenure or holding and has made all the remaining co-sharers parties, defendants, to the suit is unable to ascertain what rent is due for the whole tenure or holding or whether the rent due to the other co-sharer-landlords has been paid or not owing to the refusal or neglect of the tenant or of the co-sharer-landlords, defendants to the suit, to furnish him with correct information such plaintiff co-sharerlandlord is entitled to proceed with the suit for his share only of the rent. The Vakil for the opposite parties referred to us the plaint in the suit and to the allegations there made as showing that the suit fell within the exact terms of s. 148A and we were referred to various decisions of this Court in support of this proposition notably to Nunda Lal Choudhury v. Kala Chand Choudhury (3), Brohmandan Nath Deb Sirkar v. Hem Chandra Mitter (4), Baikuntha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (5), Profulla Chandra Ghose v. Baburam Mandal (6), and Jagabandhu Nandi v. Abdul Hamid Mea (7). In all these cases, in some of which the suits were held to fall within the provisions of s. 148A and in others not, what were the necessary allegations in a suit of this nature were discussed and considered and it seems to us that for a suit to fall under the provisions of s. 148A it must be a suit which is to recover the whole of the rent due. It is true that some of the rent may turn out not to be actually due as it may have been paid to some of the co-sharers. But it certainly seems to be of the essence of a suit under s. 148A that either the whole rent is due or else the plaintiffs are unable to ascertain whether or not the whole of the rent is due. Now it seems to us that the present case does not fall under any such principle. From the facts which I have already stated it appears that some of the zemindars were themselves patnidars and, consequently, it was clear that no rent in respect of the patni was due to those zemindars who occupied the dual positions of zemindars and patnidars as well. Consequently the suit was not and could not be to the knowledge of the plaintiff in the suit—a suit for the whole rent in respect of a tenure or holding—and for these reasons we think that the suit does not fall under the circumstances of this case, which are, of course, special, under the provisions of s. 148A, that is to say, it follows that the decree which has been passed is not a rent decree within the meaning of s. 148A but merely a money-decree which can only be executed as such.

The second point which arises is whether the interest of the mortgagee here is a protected interest within the provisions of s. 160 (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act or not. The opposite party says 'No'. The appellant before us says that it is a protected interest under the provisions of s. 160 (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The sub-section provides that any right or interest which the landlord, at whose instance the tenure or holding is sold, or his predecessor-in-title has expressly and in writing given the tenant for the time being permission to create shall be deemed to be protected interest within the meaning of Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now I have already stated the circumstances under which the mortgage was created. It was created if I may repeat what I have stated to preserve the property which formed Raj Mohan's estate and to clear that property from debts and to prevent a sale of any portion of that estate. The judgment of this Court in Appeal No. 385 of 1913 to which I have referred states that the patni-lease was granted by the order of the Court and that it would be binding upon all the parties to the litigation and it directed that the patnidars who had borrowed the money for the purpose of paying the selami from the mortgagee should execute a mortgage in his favour as arranged between the parties. On behalf of the opposite party it is urged that so far as the mortgage is concerned the plaintiffs in the rent suit are not in any way parties thereto or bound thereby and we were referred to the terms of the patni and to the mortgage itself. We were further referred to the fact that the patni rent was a sum of Rs. 7,000 and that over and above the patni rent the collections from the mehals amounted to an additional Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 11,000 and we were further referred to the fact, which I have already stated, that strangers came forward and bid for the patni and that it was by mere accident that in the end Nisadini and Surendra happened to be the highest bidders and that for the purpose of this suit they should be treated as strangers in respect of the transaction. We feel some difficulty in agreeing with this contention. It seems to us that the mortgage was created for the benefit of the whole body of zemindars and certainly the plaintiffs in the rent suit, although they were not patnidars and were not parties to the mortgage in any way, have been benefited by the creation of the mortgage and by the clearing of the estate from the debts out of the money advanced by the mortgagee. It seems to us, therefore, that the interest, that is to say, the mortgage in this instance, which has been created is an interest which comes within the provisions of s. 160 (g). It was created by the order of the Court and with consent of all the parties to the suit and it seems inequitable to say that it is not an interest which should receive the protection given to such an interest under the provisions of s. 160 (g). We were referred to various cases dealing with protected interests and to the words which are said to be sufficient in a patni to bring an interest within the provisions of s. 160 (g). We do not think, however, that it is necessary to refer to the cases in detail because for the reasons which I have already indicated we think that the interest is a protected interest within the provisions of s. 160 (g) and we are fortified in this by the actual words of the patni which empowers (cl. 2) the patni-dar to exercise all acts of proprietorship in accordance with his own will, to transfer the patni and to do all other acts of proprietorship.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal succeeds and we hold that the decree obtained by some of the zemindars was merely a money-decree and not a rent-decree within the provisions of s. 148A and that the interest of the mortgagee is a protected interest within the provisions of s. 160 (g) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this appeal which he will add to his mortgage. We assess the hearing fee at 5 gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law whilst an orasa son cannot claim a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of the property jointly acquired by his parents merely by reason of his mother's death, the re-marriage of his father gives him a right to claim the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share, which he would not have if his father did not re-marry. JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Amherst, reversing the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Moulmein. The plaintiffs-appellants are the widow and minor children of one Maung Po Min, who was the first-born child and eldest son of the defendant-respondent U Pe Lay and his wife Ma Thin. According to the plaint, the said Ma Thin died about ten years before the institution of this suit, leaving her surviving husband the defendant-respondent U Pe Lay and five children, namely, the said Maung Po Min as the eldest child and described in the plaint as the "orasa son" and four daughters—Ma E May, Ma On Myaing, Ma E Gywe, and Ma On Sein (who are not made parties to this suit). The plaint also stated that about eight years before the institution of the suit, the defendant U Pe Lay married a second wife Ma Sein; and that the orasa son was alive at that time and survived this second marriage of U Pe Lay by about one year when the said Maung Po Min died leaving the plaintiffs as his heirs. The plaint further alleged that the old couple U Pe Lay and his first wife Ma Thin acquired the joint property specified in the plaint consisting of certain lands valued at Rs. 6,000. The claim of the plaintiffs was that on the death of his mother Ma Thin, Maung Po Min was the orasa son and that on the father U Pe Lay taking a second wife eight years before the suit, the said Maung Po Min as the orasa acquired a vested right to one-quarter share of the said jointly acquired property of his parents; and that on the death of the said orasa about seven years before the institution of the suit, the said vested right of the orasa devolved on the plaintiffs as his widow and children. It was not alleged that the orasa son had in fact made a claim or an election to claim the said one-quarter share; but the case of the plaintiffs was based on the allegation that such share had become vested in the orasa son on the re-marriage of his father, and that, on the death of the orasa son, such right became vested in the plaintiffs as his widow and children. The plaintiffs had been permitted to sue in forma pauperis and the prayer of the plaint was for a declaration that plaintiffs are entitled to one-fourth share in the properties described in para. 2 thereof and for partition and possession of the land.

The defendant U Pe Lay contested plaintiffs' claim on three grounds:—(1) that the suit is premature; (2) that the first plaintiff, the widow of Maung Po Min, has married again; and (3) that if plaintiffs are entitled at all to any share, it is only to an one-eighth share of the joint estate. He also alleged that Ma Sein, his second wife, was no longer his wife, but, as that issue was decided against him, it need not be considered further in this appeal.

The learned Trial Judge framed four issues—

(1) whether the plaint is bad in law for mis joinder of parties:

(2) whether the suit is premature or not;

(3) whether Ma Sein is no longer defendant's wife. If so, how, if at all, are plaintiffs' rights effected?

(4) what share, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to under the Burmese Buddhist Law?

On the first issue, the learned Trial Judge stated that it was contended by the defendant that his other four children were necessary parties and that the first plaintiff Ma E Mya should not join as plaintiff, because she had re-married after the death of Maung Po Min. The learned Judge then stated that the plaintiffs had specifically stated that they were suing only as heirs and legal representatives of Maung Po Min for his orasa share in the estate, on account of the defendant's re-marriage; and that they are not suing for their rights of inheritance to the estate; and on this ground he found on the issue in the negative. (I point out below that this is not in fact a claim to the orasa share, but a claim of a different kind arising on the re-marriage of the surviving parent.) I have set out the above passages because I understand that it is admitted by the plaintiffs that if the case is decided against the plaintiffs on the main question as to their right of suit for full one-quarter share, then the suit must be dismissed and it will be unnecessary to consider what would be the right of the plaintiffs as children of an orasa child claiming merely the ordinary preferential right of an equal share with each of their aunts. I understand that position to be admitted and I may add that neither side has addressed me on any of the aspects of the alternative case that would arise on such question or on the point as to whether the four aunts would be necessary parties.

On the other issues the learned Trial Judge decided in favour of the plaintiffs and holding that the re-marriage of the first defendant gave Maung Po Min the right to claim one-quarter share and that such right devolved on his heirs, he granted the plaintiffs a decree as prayed with costs.

On first appeal, the learned District Judge discussed the law very fully and holding that, though Maung Po Min had the right to claim one-quarter share on the re-marriage of the defendant, he died without making such claim and that the right did not devolve on his heirs. He allowed the appeal and reversing the decree of the Trial Court, he dismissed the suit with costs.

The only point, therefore, for determination on this second appeal is whether that decision of the learned District Judge is correct; or, to put the question differently the points for determination are firstly, whether any right to claim a quarter or other fixed share in the joint estate of the parents was acquired by Maung Po Min by reason of such re-marriage of the surviving father and whether such right devolved on the plaintiffs as heirs of the eldest son who had survived his mother and had also survived the re-marriage of his father, but had omitted to claim such quarter share before his death.

I must first point out that on the more recent decisions it is necessary to consider separately questions as to the meaning of the term orasa child and as to the share claimable by the orasa child. According to the judgments of the majority of the Judges in the Full Bench decision of Maung Sin v. Mrs. Kirkwood (1), it would seem that Maung Po Min was technically an orasa child, because being the eldest-born child of the marriage, he had attained his majority and otherwise become competent to acquire, and, therefore, did acquire, that status of orasa child during the lifetime of both parents; but he never in fact acquired what I may describe as the further right of the orasa child to claim the one-quarter share of the joint estate under that decision, because that right would only have been acquired by him on his father predeceasing his mother, and as his mother died first, no male member of that family could acquire such right to a quarter share. It is most important to keep the above points clearly in mind, because the claim which has been made in this case is really based on the use of the word "vested" with reference to the claim of an orasa son to his one-fourth share as against his surviving mother on the death of the father who had predeceased the mother. Though the word "vested" was not used by the Privy Council, the share of the orasa child was described as a definite one-fourth part of the estate, in terms which implied that it was a vested share, in a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (2). In consequence of that decision the vesting of the right in the orasa son was recognized in the subsequent decision of a Bench of the late Chief Court in the case of Maung Pan On v. Maung Tun Tha (3) and certain aspects of the right connected with and depending on this vesting of the right were considered in the decision of a Bench of this Court of which I was a member in the case of Arunachellam Chetty v. Maung San Ngwe (4). The decision that the right of the orasa child to the quarter share is a vested right suggests the question whether the right to the quarter share does or does not devolve on the children of the orasa child even in the event of the death of the orasa child before the orasa child has made the claim to the quarter share. In this connection I must draw attention to the doubt raised on this point by Maung Kin, J., in the answer to the seventh question at page 248 in 11 L. B. R. and at page 718 of 2 Rangoon of the report of the decision in Maung Sin v. Mrs. Kirkwood (1), where he remarks: "Supposing the eldest born child dies after it became entitled to claim a quarter share under the circumstances of the case, the question may arise whether his children will be entitled to claim the quarter share from their surviving grand-parent. This question does not arise here and need not be answered." It appears that this question will be res integra when it arises, but it is one which is directly suggested by the authorities cited above. In the case now before me it might appear that we are not directly concerned with the question arising on these authorities as to whether such right of the orasa son to claim his quarter share against his mother could on his death devolve on his children; but the question arises indirectly, if it can be held on a parity of reasoning that the different class of claim which I will discuss below is a claim to a vested right.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 49; 11 L. B. R. 220 on appeal 84 Ind. Cas. 567; 2 R. 693; 3 Bur. L. J. 304; 48 M. L. J. 1; 51 I. A. 334; 29 O. W. N. 653; (1924) A. I. R. (P. O.) 238 P. O.).

As pointed out above the claim which it is alleged that Maung Po Min had to one-quarter share on the re-marriage of his father was not a claim as orasa son arising on the death of a parent; but it was the entirely different claim of the eldest son to a quarter share on the re-marriage of the surviving parent.

The right to claim such quarter share on the re-marriage of the surviving parent was decided in the case of Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (5), and was recognized by a Full Bench of the late Chief Court in the case of Shwe Po v. Maung Bein (6). In the latter case, Hartnoll, J., observed that because the eldest son had allowed the twelve years' period to pass, he could not claim the one-fourth share and so it became irrecoverable and lapsed in his father's estate; and that he could claim nothing further until his father died and then he would not claim as an heir entitled to inherit any portion of the estate consequent on his mother's death, but as an heir to his father's estate. In the case of Maung No v. Maung Po Thein (7), May Oung, J., stated that he was in entire agreement with that statement of the law and that it followed in his view that the right of the eldest son to claim a quarter share from his father on the latter's re-marriage after his mother's death is not a vested one; and then he went on to apply the same view to the claim, if any, of the kanittha children. These remarks, however, were obiter, and the actual decision in that case was based mainly on the law of res judicata and on the decision that the kanittha children had no right to make the claim after the death of the surviving parent.

The decision in Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (5) was partially discussed by Heald, J., at page 276 of the report of Maung Sin's case (1) in 11 L. B. R. and at page 753 in 2 Rangoon; but the same question was again more fully considered by Heald, J., in the later case of Maung Shwe Ywet v. Maung Tun Shein (8), where he discussed all the dhammathats and other authorities at considerable length; and he came to the definite conclusion that the law is now settled that whilst an orasa son cannot claim a one-fourth share of the property jointly acquired by his parents merely by reason of his mother's death, the re-marriage of his father gives him a right to claim the one-fourth share, which he would not have if his father did not re-marry. This decision appears to me, when taken with the previous Full Bench decision and the decision in Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (5) to make it binding on me to hold that Maung Po Min had acquired the definite right to claim the one-fourth share on the re-marriage of his father.

The remaining question requiring consideration is whether such right to claim the one-fourth share has devolved on the plaintiffs, having regard to the fact that Maung Po Min had not in fact made the claim before his death. I have referred above to the view expressed by May Oung, J., in the case of Maung No v. Maung Po Thein (7), that, on the remarks of Hartnoll, J., in the Full Bench decision in Shwe Po v. Maung Bein (6), the right would not be a vested right. I find that Heald, J., had also referred to this Full Bench decision in his judgment in Maung Sin's case (1) at page 283 of 11 L. B. R. and at page 763 of 2 Rangoon where he says that the Full Bench case of Shwe Po v. Maung Bein (6) is interesting for the purposes of the present reference only, because its suggestion that the orasa has an option and can either claim the one-fourth share or wait till the death of both parents and come in with the other children, seems to have been since overruled by the Privy Council in the case of Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (2). This opinion was likewise obiter, but as I construe this remark, it means that the Privy Council, having held in Tun Tha's case (2) that the right of the orasa to the one-fourth share is a vested right, have in effect overruled the previous decisions to the effect that the right was a mere option or right to elect as distinct from a vested right.

The consideration of this point brings me back to the question whether on a parity of reasoning, the remarks and reasoning of their Lordships of the Privy Council can apply to the share arising on the re-marriage of the surviving parent; I think the remarks and reasoning can so apply. At page 56 of the report of Tun Tha's case (2) in 9 L. B. R. it will be noticed that the Bench of the Chief Court refer to one question for determination on the appeal as being whether an eldest son must act with reasonable promptitude in exercising his "option" of taking one-fourth of his parents' joint property on the death of the father, etc., whilst the contention that was rejected by the Privy Council was put in the different form as an election or a right to elect and on page 59 of the same report the Lord Chancellor states that, "Their Lordships do not think that it is desirable to express an opinion upon the true construction of r. 14. It is a matter that may arise for determination hereafter, and its determination is not relevant to the present question, because, even assuming in favour of the respondents, that the rights of the eldest son would change in the event of his not having segregated his one-fourth share before his mother's death, it by no means follows that the right which he got under r. 5 was merely the right to elect within a certain limited period of time whether he would take the property or not. Their Lordships can find no ground whatever for the suggestion that he got anything under r. 5 excepting a definite one-fourth part of the estate, a right which he was at liberty to assert within any period that was not outside the period fixed by Art. 123 of the Indian Limitation Act as the period within which a claim must be made for a share of property on the death of the intestate." In other words, the use of the word "option" in this connection is misleading and does not mean a mere right to elect. Every person, who owns property or a share in property which has been in the possession of another person, has an option to avoid asserting his claim, but that fact does not prevent the interest from being a vested one.

If we apply these remarks to the case of the right to a share of one-fourth arising in favour of the eldest son on the death of the surviving parent, we also find either the word option or passages describing the right as if the claim to it were optional and I think that the option in that case likewise was not a mere right to elect, but was a very similar option to the option the orasa child to take a definite one fourth part of the estate. The reference to Art. 123 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, does not affect the question, because, the period under that Article begins to run from the time when the share was payable or deliverable. The share would obviously not be a vested share prior to the re-marriage of the surviving parent, but a reference to the enactments as to contingent bequests should clear up any doubts arising under this head.

The fact that the right lapses after the twelve years, likewise does not make any difference, because the lapsing would be the same whether it was a lapsing of the right of an orasa child to take his orasa share as a definite one-fourth share in the joint estate, or whether it was a like failure to take the definite one-fourth share to which he had become entitled on the re-marriage of the father. Section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, would equally apply and effect the extinguishment of the right in each case. The confusion which has arisen is the same in both classes of cases; and now that the Privy Council has finally decided the point in the one class of cases, it is, I think, the duty of the Courts to apply the like rule of construction in the other class of cases, which is exactly similar so far as the question of an option or question of election comes in. For these reasons I agree with the obiter opinion of Heald, J., that the previous view that the right was mainly an option or a mere option was impliedly overruled by the decision of the Privy Council; and I must, therefore, hold that the right is a vested interest and right. That being so, I can see no reason why this vested interest and right should not devolve on the heirs and legal representatives of the holder of the vested interest or definite right to the one-fourth share.

In this connection I have also considered the question of the preferential right accorded by the dhammathats to the children of the orasa child. As pointed out in different passages in Maung Sin's case (1), this preferential right to an equal share with the younger uncles and aunts will be effective in cases where the orasa child though acquiring his status of orasa, subsequently predeceases both his parents. In such an event he obviously cannot acquire the one-fourth share either as orasa or in the other class of cases on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. That is one class of cases in which the preferential right clearly can come in. In the case of Maung Po Min, who, though an orasa child, had not acquired the right to the orasa's share, the same position would have arisen, if his father U Pe Lay had not re-married prior to the death of Maung Po Min. That is another class of cases in which the preferential right of the children of the orasa can come in. I am not aware of any reason why these two classes of cases should not be the only classes in which that preferential right arises. If Maung Po Min had in fact claimed and received his one-fourth share before his death, it is clear that his heirs and legal representatives would have inherited that one-fourth share on his death. Likewise, once it is clear that his right to that one-fourth share was a vested right to a definite one-fourth share, I can see no reason why it should not similarly devolve on his heirs and legal representatives.

For these reasons I allow the appeal and I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court; and I restore the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court granting the plaintiffs' claim as prayed with costs in all three Courts. I also direct that the amounts of Court fees which would have been paid by plaintiffs in the Trial Court and also on the second appeal in this Court, if they had not been permitted to file the suit and this appeal respectively as paupers, shall be calculated and recovered from the defendants and that such amounts shall be a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 107 OF 1924.

October 24, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

ONKAR—APPLICANT

versus

DHAN SINGH AND OTHERS—NON-APPLICANTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 89—Execution sale, setting aside of—Interest in property—Title negatived previously—Locus standi of applicant—Refusal to entertain application—Revision.

Order XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C. of 1908, has wider scope than s. 310A of the old Code for which it has been substituted, and the right to make a deposit to set aside an auction sale is not now restricted to the judgment-debtor alone. [p. 965, col. 1.]

The words "owning such property" in O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C., cannot be divorced from the rest of the clause so as to read them independently of the expression "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" as if they, as also the other words "holding an interest therein," stand by themselves and are not controlled by the aforesaid expression. [p. 965, col. 2.]

The applicant under O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C., must be a person who can even at the date of his application be proved to be a person either owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title, and further the title must be a pre-existing title, that is, a title acquired before the auction sale. [p. 965, col. 1.]

If in an objection to attachment in execution of a decree preferred by a person, as also in the declaratory suit following the order therein, the title of that person to the property is negatived, he has no right to make an application to set aside the auction sale by making a deposit under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C. [p. 967, col. 1.]

An auction-purchaser is entitled to take advantage of an adjudication in the objection case, as also in the regular declaratory suit. [p. 966, col. 2.]

Where a Court refuses to entertain an application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., on the ground that the petitioner has no locus standi, it is a case where the Court fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law within the meaning of s. 115 of the Code and the High Court can interfere in revision in such a case. [p. 967, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Nimar, in Miscellaneous Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1923, dated the 7th February 1924.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant.

Sir B. K. Bose, R. B., N. G. Bose, Messrs. P. N. Rudra and Fida Hussain, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—In Civil Suit No 84 of 1906. one Dhansingh obtained a mortgage-decree for sale of the mortgaged house, on 16th December 1916. That decree was made final on 20th October 1917 as against the defendant Martand who was a mortgagor in the case. The decree-holder on 8th August 1918 applied for a personal decree for the balance under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the C. P. C., and accordingly on 28th September 1918 a money-decree was passed against Martand for Rs. 475-2 0 inclusive of costs. In execution of this decree a $3\frac{1}{2}$ pies share of Mouza Ichhapur was attached as belonging to the judgment-debtor Martand. One Onkar claimed to have purchased the said share from the judgment debtor as per sale-deed, dated 30th October 1918, which was registered on 5th December 1918, the presentation being also on that day. The objection was disallowed by the Executing Court on 28th June 1919 on the ground that the sale was not genuine and for consideration and that possession never passed to the objector. The unsuccessful claimant thereupon instituted Suit No. 89 of 1919 under O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C., against the attaching creditor and also joined the judgment-debtor as a co defendant, for setting aside the summary order in the objection case. The suit was filed on 2nd September 1919.

As the property was in the meantime advertised for sale and going to be sold in execution of the said decree on 14th October 1919, Onkar obtained an injunction for staying the sale. The case was then fought on the merits between the claimant and the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor Martand supported Onkar's title based on the sale. The decision in the regular suit confirmed the decision in the objection case and accordingly the suit was dismissed on 31st March 1920 by the Munsif, Burhanpur. The appeal preferred by Onkar also failed on the merits on 8th September 1920. I have, therefore, before me a clear finding by the District Judge, Nimar, that the sale in Onkar's favour "was not bona fide and for valuable consideration, but that it was executed with a view to defeat" the decree-holder's claim. To this decision also the judgment-debtor Martand was a party. The cloud that was cast upon the title of the judgment-debtor Martand by the sale-deed, dated 30th October 1918, thus disappeared on 8th September 1920. The result was that the property could be sold as the property owned and possessed by the judgment-debtor free of all claim by the objector on the basis of his title as an alleged purchaser.

The usual C Form was prepared and sent to the Collector on 17th December 1921 for execution and sale of the property. On 4th July 1922 Onkar applied for permission to deposit the amount of the decree for payment of the decree-holder, as the Collector had fixed a date for sale. The permission was granted without issuing notice to the decree-holder or judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor thereafter moved the Court to discharge that order and to return the deposit, and the decree-holder also joined with him in asserting that Onkar had no right to deposit the money. The order was discharged and the judgment-debtor's application was allowed. A fresh C Form was prepared and sent to the Collector (the former C Form having been filed and sent to the Record Room by him). Onkar was thus ordered to take back his deposit on 2nd December 1922. It does not appear from the record as to what action was taken on that C Form.

On 27th January 1923 the decree-holder again moved the Executing Court to execute its decree in Suit No. 84 of 1916. On the Court being satisfied that the property was under attachment an order for sale was passed and the sale was held in due course on 2nd November 1923 the aforesaid malguzari share alone having fetched Rs. 1,920 as the price thereof. One Pirchand was the auction-purchaser. Onkar's sale was for Rs. 500 for the malguzari share and the house.

With a view to prevent the sale from being confirmed in favour of the auction-purchaser, Onkar made an application on 15th November 1923 for depositing the amount of the decree and the 5 per cent. commission payable to the auction-purchaser, under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C. To this application the decree-holder, judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser are parties. The Court ordered the deposit to be accepted and fixed the application for hearing for 8th December 1923 for which date notices were issued to the aforesaid parties. It does not appear from the proceedings that any formal pleadings were recorded in answer to the application, but the decree-holder, judgment-debtor as well as the purchaser all opposed it on the ground that the application could be made only by a person interested in the property and that the applicant Onkar had no interest in the property as decided between him, the decree holder and the judgment-debtor. The Court thereupon found that the applicant cannot be said to own the property sold in auction and accordingly disallowed the application and ordered the deposit to be returned to him and confirmed the sale in favour of the purchaser, and struck off the execution proceedings as fully satisfied. Against this order Onkar went up in appeal to the District Judge, Nimar, who held that the decision in the suit under O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C. was res judicata not only between Onkar and Dnansingh the decree-holder, but also between him and Martand the judgment-debtor. He also held that "the genuineness of the transaction was definitely put in issue and it was found that the transaction was a bogus one and made with a fraudulent purpose; that is to say, it was decided that it could convey no title." With regard to the maintainability of the application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., his view is expressed in these words:—"It has been held by a competent Court that the appellant Onkar had not acquired the title which he now alleges. Consequently he is not the person entitled to apply to have the sale set aside. * * * Onkar brought a suit to declare his title to the property and it was decided that he had no title to the property and having no title he cannot make an application under O. XXI, r. 89." In this view the District Judge confirmed the order of the first Court refusing to entertain the application.

It is against this order dated 7th February 1924 that Onkar has preferred the present civil revision petition under s. 115 of the C. P. C., and challenges the correctness of the decision on every point decided against him. His learned Counsel contends that although he is not a person 'owning' the property, he is still a person "holding an interest therein" by virtue of the title acquired before the execution sale, within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 89, sub-r. (1), C. P. C., and that in rejecting his application the Courts below have refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them by law, and that consequently interference in revision with the decision is absolutely necessary. To this the non-applicants' reply is that this Court should not interfere in revision in a matter which is concluded by a previous decision between the parties so far as the applicant's title is concerned, and as the decision sought to be revised does not disclose a failure to exercise jurisdiction. Two points, therefore, arise for consideration:

- (1) As to whether O. XXI, r. 89, sub-r. (1), C. P. C., has been rightly construed; and
- (2) whether any question of jurisdiction is involved?

I will discuss these points in the following paragraphs and show that the construction put by the District Judge is correct, and that although I have jurisdiction to interfere under s. 115, C. P. C., no case for interference has been made out by the applicant.

I will first take up point No. 1. The main object of enacting s. 310-A of the old C. P. C. was to enable the judgment-debtor to prevent his property from being sold below the market-value. Difficulties were, however, experienced in actual practice, and it was thought expedient to hold that the protection must be extended to persons holding even a lesser interest than that of an owner like the judgment-debtor, as for example, a co-heir, a simple mortgagee, a member of the Mitakshara joint family or a lessee or a person in reversion and so on. Some Courts upheld their right while others did not. Different views thus prevailed. In Paresh Nath Singha v. Nabogopal Chattopadya (1) the words "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" in s. 310-A of the old Code were considered sufficiently elastic to admit a wider construction being put on them so as to include "every person, who has an interest in the property in question whether qualified, partial or absolute". The necessity for giving the power of making a deposit to a wider circle and to put a stop to the conflict of decisions was recognized by the Legislature and the law appeared in the form of r. 89 of the new Code in place of s. 310-A of the repealed C. P. C. This would show that the right to make the deposit is not restricted under the new Code to the judgment-debtor alone.

The sole question, therefore, is whether the words "any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" cover the case of the present applicant, the transaction in whose favour has been found to be bogus, without consideration and intended to pass no title but to be fraudulent in its nature, as stated above. Dr. Gour, for the applicant says that the only effect of the decision both in the objection case and in the regular suit (which is only a continuation of the objection proceedings, or as it were, an appeal in the form of a suit) was to negative his right to obtain an absolute release of the property from attachment without payment, as an owner thereof, but that does not affect any lesser 'interest' he may hold in it, at least, as a trustee, or a bogus purchaser for only an inadequate consideration, or a mere charge-holder, and that as such he can assert that he is 'a person, holding an interest' in the property, which entitles him to obtain the release on payment or deposit of the decretal amount and the auction-purchaser's commission, and thus prevent the sale of the property being confirmed. In other words, he argues that he has a right to prevent the property from being sold as the property of the judgment-debtor and from going out of his own or judgment debtor's hands to a stranger purchaser. The auction has fetched nearly four times the price which the applicant Onkar is alleged to have paid as consideration for the sale to the judgment-debtor. The latter, therefore, naturally supports the auction and gives a go-by to the private sale in favour of the applicant. To uphold the applicant's contention would be to put premium on fraud besides encouraging officious interference with the affairs of a judgment-debtor who does not care to have it, but on the contrary strenuously opposes it, and that too at the instance of a person proved to be a mere volunteer.

Moreover, there is a fallacy in the above argument. It lies in the fact that the words "owning such property" are sought to be divorced from the rest of the clause, and to read them independently of the expression "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" as if they are also the other words "holding an interest therein" stand by themselves and are not controlled by the aforesaid expression "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" used in r. 89 of the said Order. It has been pointed out in Pandurang Laxman v. Govinda Dada (2) that there is no reason to limit the words "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" to the words "holding an interest therein" so as to read the first clause "owning such property" as if it stood by itself. The Patna High Court has also in Dhanwanti Kuerv. Sheo Shankar Lall (3) taken the same view. The Madras High Court also has similarly accepted as correct the interpretation put by the Bombay High Court on the said words and overruled the contrary view which was held in the rulings in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (4) and Subba Rayudu v. Lakshmi Narasamma (5) as will be seen from the Full Bench decision of Sundaram v. Mamsa Mavuthar (6). On the same principle, I say, there is no reason to read the words "having an interest therein" as if they are unconnected with or uncontrolled by the words "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale". So then, it is clear that the applicant under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., must be a person who can even at the date of his application, be proved to be a person, either owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title; and further that, that title must have been a pre-existing title, that is to say, a title acquired before the auction-sale. It must not be a title once vesting, or sought to be established and already negatived, or declared in a Court as non-existent. If the very title be wanting or not subsisting, neither the alleged defunct ownership nor the alleged 'holding' of the 'interest' sometime in the past, is of any avail. The use of the words 'owning' or 'holding' in the above expressions indicates a present subsisting ownership or interest in the applicant, at the date of his application. In the case before me the applicant's so-called interest, whether it be that of a trustee or of a bogus purchaser or of a mere charge-holder, is derived from, or at any rate is sought to be based upon, the alleged purchase dated 30th October 1918, and not independently of it. But the decision in the claim or objection proceedings as also that in the suit brought under O. XXI, r. 63, of the C. P. C., as also the order dated 2nd December 1922 passed on the judgment-debtor's application, have one and all knocked that title on its head, and the so-called right of Onkar to make the application in his capacity of a person either owning the property or holding an interest therein must be deemed to have been completely negatived long before the date of his application. The very basis of the right to apply being thus absent, the application of Onkar, under r. 89 aforesaid, was rightly rejected as not maintainable under law. The District Judge's finding quoted above clearly shows that Onkar had not the title in virtue of which he could assert either ownership or interest in the property sold by the auction. That an auction-purchaser is entitled to take advantage of an adjudication in the objection case and also in the regular suit is clearly established: see Velu Padayachi v. Arumugam Pillai (7) and Singariah Chetty v. Chinnabbi (8).

(1) 20 C. 1 at p. 13; 5 C. W. N. 821 (F. B.).

Reliance was placed on Dulichand v. Ramkishan Singh (9), Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Rajah Singh (10) and Maharana Shri Jasvat Singji Fatesingji v. Secretary of State for India (11) as supporting the applicant's right to deposit the decretal amount with or without protest as it were, in order to avert the confirmation of a sale already held. In the case of Dulichand v. Ramkishan Singh (9), the deposit was made after the sale was ordered but before it took place and in order to prevent that sale, and not after the decision of the regular suit. The person depositing the amount in that case, as also in Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India (12) had a subsisting interest of his own to safeguard by the said deposit. No regular suit was in fact filed in the earlier case of Dulichand v. Ramkishan Singh (9) under s. 282 of the old Code. Similarly in Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Rajah Singh (10), the deposit was made after the claim was disallowed but before the sale was actually held in order to prevent the property from being sold. There also the person making the deposit had a subsisting interest admittedly. In the case of Maharana Shri Jasvatsingji Fatesingji v. Secretary of State for India (11), no similar question was involved except that like all other cases the deposit was made under protest. In my opinion those cases bear no analogy to the case of an officious intruder like the applicant.

On the whole then I agree with the District Judge in holding that the applicant Onkar was not entitled to apply under O. XXI, r. 89 (1) of the C. P. C., and that his application was rightly rejected.

Since I hold that O. XXI, r. 89 (1) aforesaid has been rightly construed, there is no need for me to decide the question whether this Court can interfere with orders rejecting such applications on the revisional side. I may, however, state that there is ample authority in support of the view that the High Court can interfere in revision in such cases. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (13) and the rulings of some other High Courts clearly recognize that a refusal by an Executing Court to deal with such a petition amounts to a non-exercise of its jurisdiction. The following decision exactly covers the point before me: Sundaram Mamsa v. Mavuthar (6), where it is laid down that "where a Court refuses to entertain an application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., on the ground that the petitioner has no locus standi, it is a case where the Court fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law within the meaning of s. 115 of the C. P. C. and the High Court will entertain a revision in such a case." Here on the facts the applicant is found to have no locus standi. There is no failure, therefore, to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Courts by law. The jurisdiction has been rightly exercised. The revision petition, therefore, fails on its merits.

For all these reasons I reject the petition with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

RESPONDENTS.

Letters Patent (Rangoon), cl. 13—"Judgment," what is—Order refusing to issue commission for examination of witness, whether judgment—Appeal, whether lies.

An order which does not affect the merits of the dispute between the parties by determining some right or liability which is in controversy between them in the suit is not a "judgment" within the meaning of the word as used in cl. 13 of the Letters Patent of the Rangoon High Court.

An order refusing to issue a commission for the examination of a witness is a purely interlocutory order and is not a "judgment" and is not, therefore, appealable under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent of the Rangoon High Court.

Appeal against an order of this Court on the Original Side, in Civil Regular No. 283 of 1924.

Mr. Rahman, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 283 of 1924 on the Original Side of this Court, appellant, who was defendant in the suit, applied for a commission to examine a certain witness in India.

Affidavits were filed by both sides, and the learned Judge, after hearing Counsel, dismissed the application.

Appellant has filed an appeal against that order, but his appeal has not yet been admitted.

His learned Advocate contends that the order is a "judgment" within the meaning of that word in cl. 13 of the Letters Patent.

The meaning of the word "judgment" in that clause was recently considered by a Bench of this Court in the case of Mooljee Dharsee & Co. v. M. E. Moolia (1), and it was held that an order which does not affect the merits of the dispute between the parties by determining some right or liability which is in controversy between them in the suit is not a "judgment." As was remarked in the case of Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2), "An order refusing to issue a commission, however, serious the ultimate results to the party, is a purely interlocutory order and not a judgment terminating a suit or other proceedings or affecting the merits."

We are, therefore, of opinion that the order in this case was not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent, and that no appeal lies against it.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 4 —Judgment of Small Cause Court—Mere statement of all issues being found for plaintiff—Judgment, whether in accordance with law.

It is enough if a judgment of a Small Cause Court sets out only the points for determination and the decision with regard to each separately.

A judgment, however, which clubs together all the points arising in the case and merely contains a statement that all the issues are found in favour of the plaintiff is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. XX, r. 4, C. P. C.

Komappa Kurup v. Velayichettichiar, 70 Ind. Cas. 791; 42 M. L. J. 583; 15 L. W. 642; 31 M. L. T. 124; (1922) A. I. R. (M.) 360, referred to.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Calicut, in S. C. S. No. 408 of 1922.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. S. Viswanatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the lower Court in this small cause case is an extremely unsatisfactory one. The learned District Munsif says that he finds all the issues for the plaintiffs. My attention has been drawn to the terms of O. XX, r. 4 and the decision of this Court reported as Komappa Kurup v. Velayichettichiar (1). In that case Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., laid down that it was enough for a Small Cause Judge to follow the provisions of

O. XX, r. 4, cl. (1) and the learned Judges further proceeded to observe that they are unable to follow the line taken by Seshagiri Iyer, J., in Kandasami Chetty v. Ramalinga Chetty (2). I should have been disinclined to interfere in this case if at any rate the District Munsif had, while setting out the points for determination according to him, at least stated his decision with regard to each separately. But when I find that he has clubbed them all together and made a statement merely to the effect that he finds all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs, I cannot regard it as a compliance even with the provisions of O. XX, r. 4. Taking one of the points for determination, namely, "did the defendant commit breach of contract as alleged by the plaintiffs" and taking the words of the District Munsif, the finding should be deemed to be that the defendants did commit breach of contract. It is not at all clear how the District Munsif found that the breach came to be committed by the defendants. This was not a case in which any time was fixed for the performance of the contract and the defendant, in his written statement set out that he was not only ready and willing to deliver to the plaintiffs the balance of the cocoanuts but that the plaintiffs refused to accept delivery of the same. No doubt if the defendant was bound to perform the contract within a reasonable time and failed to do so, he would have been guilty of breach of contract. But that would undoubtedly be a point for determination and I see no indication whatever in the judgment that the attention of the learned District Munsif was at all drawn to this feature of the case or that he came to any conclusion or decision with regard thereto. On the whole, I am satisfied that the judgment before me does not comply with the provisions of law and is also otherwise very unsatisfactory. I, therefore, set it aside and direct that the case be remanded to the lower Court for being disposed of according to law. If the parties desire, they would be at liberty to adduce such evidence or fresh evidence as may be deemed fit. Costs in this Court will be reserved and be dealt with and disposed of by the lower Court as part of its order for costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 15, 17, 21—Adjudication on petition of insolvent—Withdrawal of petition, whether can be allowed—Procedure.

A debtor who has been adjudicated insolvent on his own petition cannot, even with the leave of the Court, withdraw his petition. Section 15 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act only applies to petitions that are pending before any order has been made, and once an order of adjudication has been made, the debtor becomes an insolvent and remains so until the order of adjudication is annulled or he obtains the discharge. [p. 969, col. 2.]

Mr. Keith, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Lentaigne, J.—This is an appeal by an insolvent against an order passed by May Oung, J., in the Original Insolvency Jurisdiction of this High Court dismissing an application made by the insolvent for leave to withdraw his petition in insolvency.

An order of adjudication had previously been passed on the 28th April 1924 on the insolvent's own petition under the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. On the 9th June 1924 the insolvent had also previously applied for the annulment of the adjudication; and on the same day some creditors also applied for the annulment of the adjudication; but on the 10th June 1924 such applications were dismissed on the ground that the case was not one within the provisions of s. 21 of the Act.

On the 5th August 1924 the insolvent filed an application for leave to withdraw the application for the benefit of the Act, and certain creditors appeared by learned Counsel at the hearing of that petition on the 6th August and again pressed for the annulment of the adjudication, and it was pointed out that the insolvent had filed his petition in insolvency for the benefit of the Act after he had been arrested in execution of a decree of the Court, and that it would be in the interests of the creditors that he should be allowed to withdraw or that the adjudication be annulled. This application for annulment was also rejected on the same grounds and the insolvent filed his schedule on the following day.

On the 8th August 1924 the insolvent renewed his application for leave to withdraw his petition for the benefit of the Act and this application purported to be made under s. 15, sub-s. (2) of the Act. After notice of this petition had been served on all creditors, certain creditors again appeared by Counsel on the 9th September 1924 and supported the application, and the attention of the Court was drawn to certain decisions under the Insolvency Statutes formerly in force.

It was held that these decisions did not bear directly on the question under consideration and that s. 15 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, does not apply to a case where an order of adjudication has been made, because such a withdrawal with the permission of the Court could not remove the effects of the adjudication arising under the provisions of s. 17 of the Act, which would continue to operate so as to vest all the property of the insolvent in the Official Assignee and to debar creditors from proceeding against the insolvent's property or instituting suits against the insolvent except with the leave of the Court. For these and other reasons the application was dismissed.

The insolvent has now appealed against that decision, and the point for determination is whether a debtor's petition for the benefit of the Act can be withdrawn even with the leave of the Court after the order for adjudication has been passed. I find that Macleod, J., of the High Court at Bombay held In re, Subrati Jan Mohammed (1) that a debtor who has been adjudicated insolvent on his own petition cannot, even with the leave of the Court, withdraw his petition; that s. 15 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, only applies to petitions that are pending before any order has been made, as also does s. 13 (8) dealing with petitions by creditors; and that once an order of adjudication has been made, the debtor becomes an insolvent and remains so until the order of adjudication is annulled or he obtains his discharge; and that the Court can only annul the order of adjudication under s. 21 of the Act if the Court is of opinion that the debtor ought not to have been adjudicated an insolvent or it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full, and in the latter case the "debts" including at least all debts actually and properly proved in bankruptcy, must have been fully paid in cash. It was also pointed out that this section is the same as s. 35 (1) of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883.

I agree with that statement of the law so far as the point now before me is concerned. Sub-section (2) of s. 15 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, enacts that "a debtor's petition shall not, after presentation, be withdrawn without the leave of the Court." The words "after presentation" may appear unnecessary, because no question of withdrawal could arise before a petition was presented, but the wording is analogous to the use of the words "at any time after the institution of a suit" in O. XXIII, r. 1, of the C. P. C., and I do not think that in either case the withdrawal could be effected after the adjudication as an order of adjudication of insolvency in the one case or in the shape of a decree in the other case of a suit, so long as such adjudication continued in force. The fact that a withdrawal can be effected in an appeal from a decree does not affect this question, because the setting aside of the decree is necessarily presupposed if there is a withdrawal with the permission of the Appellate Court. Similarly I think that after an adjudication order had been passed, an annulment of the adjudication order would be necessary and is the only way in which a Court could effect this purpose.

I also think that a consideration of the provisions of s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, necessarily leads to the same conclusion. A mere withdrawal with the leave of the Court would not annul the application of the provisions of s. 17 of the Act, unless the adjudication were also annulled; and consequently the permission to withdraw would be futile, and the insolvent would still continue to be an insolvent, his property would still continue to vest in the Official Assignee and no suit could be filed against him without the leave of the Court. Section 23 of the Act contains express provisions as to what shall happen on annulment; but there are no similar provisions as regards what would happen on a withdrawal. I think that the reason for the absence of similar provisions in the case of a withdrawal is because they are not required in the case of a withdrawal before an adjudication order has been passed, and that after the passing of the adjudication order, the right to apply for withdrawal is gone and the proper remedy is an application for annulment in a suitable case.

I find also that in England under the later Bankruptcy Act it has been held that after an adjudication, except in the case of a scheme under s. 21 of that Act, there is no power to annul other than the express power conferred by the s. 29. The decision of Cave, J., in the case of In re Hester (2) is instructive and other authorities are cited in this connection at page 131 of the 12th Edition of William's Bankruptcy Practice.

For the above reasons I think that the Court had no jurisdiction to allow the insolvent to withdraw his petition after the passing of the adjudication order. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Heald, J.—I concur.

Under the present C. P. C. a plaintiff may not only join different causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants when such defendants are jointly interested in all the causes of actions, as provided in O. II, r. 3, C. P. C., but he may also join different causes of action against different defendants, provided he is able to bring his case within the purview of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C., under which it is necessary not merely to show that a common question of law or fact would arise but that the right to relief in each case arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions. [p. 972, col. 2.]

Ordinarily in a suit for settlement of accounts of a dissolved partnership and of any sub-partnership in which there are additional partners, the act or series of acts which give rise to relief for settlement of accounts of the main partnership are not the same as those which give rise to the relief for settlement of accounts of the sub-partnership. Though some of the evidence in support of the plaintiffs' contention may be common to both the causes of action, it does not thereby follow that there is a common question of fact involved in the two causes of action. JUDGMENT.—The only issue with which I am at present concerned is whether this suit is bad for multifariousness. The plaintiffs have prayed for settlement of partnership accounts of two different concerns, the business carried on in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar and its branch business carried on in the name of Abasapur (3) Co. The plaintiffs' case is that they and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 carried on business at Karachi in the name of Lilaram Lakhmichand. This was the parent firm. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 were its capitalist partners and plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6 and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were its working partners. Defendant No. 3 is one Bulchand. He is the brother of Chetumal and Murlidhar who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On March 16, 1915 the parent firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand took up defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as gumash'ta partners to carry on a separate business in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar. This business was to be chiefly done at Abasapur and was under the effective control of Chetumal and Murlidhar. The activities of the Firm of Chetumal Murlidhar were various and it is said that the Firm of Chetumal Murlidhar again in their turn entered into different sub-partnerships. Defendants No. 6 are a firm carrying on business at Multan in the name of Gerimal Lakhumall. Defendants No. 7 are likewise another firm carrying on business at Multan in the name of Gulabrai Tarachand. It is said that one of the activities of the Firm of Chetumal Murlidhar was that they carried on business in partnership with defendants Nos. 6 and 7 at Abasapur and other places in the name of Abasapur 3 Co., and with the dissolution of the partnership carried on in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar in May 1919 the partnership carried on in the name of Abasapur 3 Co., also came to an end. The plaintiffs, therefore, now seek on behalf of this parent Firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand for settlement of accounts of the two concerns. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 have been impleaded as defendants as they are said to have been unwilling to join as plaintiffs.

Chetumal and Murlidhar who are the chief contesting defendants admit being sub-partners of the Firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand during the year 1915, and perhaps a part of 1916, and to have done partnership business in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar. But they say that the partnership accounts for that period have been settled. They have denied the right of the plaintiffs to ask for settlement of accounts either of the business carried on in subsequent years in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar or of the business carried on in the name of Abasapur 3 Co., which they say was the business done by them on their own personal account in partnership with defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and in which the Firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand had no concern.

It is not seriously disputed that the suit is based on two different causes of action. But it is contended that the accounts of the Firm of Chetumal Murlidhar cannot be conveniently settled without a settlement of the accounts of the Firm of Abasapur 3 Co., and that there is a common question of fact to be tried whether the Firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand were partners in both the concern and that, therefore, this suit as framed is competent under O. I, r. 3, C. P. C.

In Parchomal Vasandmal v. Pamandas Alamchand (1), a Bench of this Court in its High Court jurisdiction held that a suit for dissolution and winding up of a firm and its branch firm which consisted of certain additional partners who had no interest in the main firm was bad for multifariousness. The plea that the accounts of the main firm could not be conveniently settled without settlement of the accounts of the branch firm did not find favour with the Court. This ruling is on all fours with the present case.

Mr. Kimatrai has attempted to distinguish this ruling on a two-fold ground, firstly, that the suit out of which this second appeal arose was instituted under the old Code and secondly, that this ruling loses sight of the provisions of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. This appeal was decided after the present Code came into operation and the observations of Crouch, A. J. C., who delivered the judgment of this Court would show that in delivering his judgment he had in view the provisions of the present Code. At page 113* he states as follows:

"But the one partnership was quite distinct from the other. Several causes of action can only be joined when they are against the same defendant or the same defendants (s. 45 of the old C.P.C. and O. II, r. 3 new Code). There is no justification for joining several causes of action against different defendants".

The provisions of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. were either not then pressed at the Bar or were considered by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner as being limited by O. II, r. 3, C. P. C.

Though with all due respect for the learned Judge I am not prepared to accept the broad proposition that several causes of action can only be joined in the same suit when all the defendants are jointly interested in them, I agree with the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge that such a suit is not competent. Even if it were otherwise, sitting on the Original Side of this Court, I would be bound to follow this decision.

I would now give my reasons for arriving at the same conclusions. The effect of O. I, rr. 1 and 3 has been fully discussed by Woodroffe and Mukerji, JJ., in Ramendra Nath Roy v. Brojendra Nath Das (2) and it has been very rightly held dissenting from the view of Davar, J., in Umabai v. Bhavu Balwant (3) and Jankibai v. Shrinivas Ganesh Valsankar (4), that O. I, rr. 1 and 3 apply to questions of joinder both of parties and causes of action. With this view I agree. Under the present Code a plaintiff may not only join different causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants when such defendants are jointly interested in all the causes of action as provided in O. II, r. 3, C. P. C., but he may also join different causes of action against different defendants if he is able to bring his case within the purview of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. As said by Mukerji, J., in the above case the determining factors applicable in such a case are "first, could the right of relief against the defendants be said to be in respect of or arising out of (expressions obviously of wider import than relating to) the same act or transaction and secondly would any common question of law or "fact arise if separate suits were brought." Where a series of acts or transactions are relied on as giving a right to relief it would equally appear that the same series of acts or transaction should give rise to the reliefs claimed against the different defendants. The word "same" which precedes the words "act or transaction" equally applies to and governs the words "series of acts or transactions". Ordinarily in a suit for settlement of accounts of a dissolved partnership and of any sub-partnership in which there are additional partners the act or series of acts which give rise to relief for settlement of accounts of the main partnership are not the same as those which give rise to the relief for settlement of accounts of the sub-partnership. In the present case it is the plaintiffs' case that the partnership in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar was formed at a different time and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 were not parties to it. The sub-partnership of Abaspur 3 Co. was admittedly formed at a different time between the partners of the Firm of Chetumal Murlidhar collectively as forming one quasi entity and the firms of defendants Nos. 6 and 7 as forming other quasi entities. The activities of the two firms were separate and distinct. It would, therefore, follow that the first ingredient required by O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. is not fulfilled. Therefore it is hardly necessary to consider the second ingredient. Under this rule it is not enough for the plaintiffs to show merely that a common question of law or fact would arise. For those words do not apply unless the right to relief in each case arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions. The two conditions are not alternative. See the remarks of Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Stroud v. Lawson (5), on the construction of similar words used in O. XVI, r. 1, Rules of the Supreme Court which refers to the joinder of different plaintiffs and causes of action and corresponds to O. I, r. 1, C. P. C.

It is also difficult to see how a common question of fact arises in respect of the two causes of action in the present suit. The fact that the Firm of Lilaram Lakhmichand on the one hand and Chetumal and Murlidhar on the other carried on business in the name of Chetumal Murlidhar does not by itself lead to the inference that Chetumal and Murlidhar in their individual capacity could not or did not enter into a partnership with defendants Nos. 6 and 7 in the name of Abasapur 3 Co. With regard to each cause of action the plaintiffs will have to definitely prove who become partners in each firm. Though some of the evidence in support of the plaintiffs' contention may be common to both the causes of action, it does not thereby follow that there is a common question of fact involved in the two causes of action. Order I, r. 3, C. P. C. is the converse of O. I, r. 1, C. P. C. and if it be assumed that this suit had been instituted by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Nos. 6 and 7 against the Firm of Lilaram Lakmichand, i. e., the present plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 for settlement of accounts of the two partnerships of Chetumal Murlidhar Abasapur 3 Co., it cannot for a moment be asserted that such a suit would be competent under O. I, r. 1, C. P. C. The provisions of O. XVI, r. 4 Rules of the Supreme Court are wider than those of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. and enable a plaintiff to join any number of causes of action against different defendants leaving it to the discretion of the Court to limit the plaintiff to any one or more of the causes of action. Payne v. British Time Recorder Co. (6). But the powers under O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. are not so wide and are co-extensive with those under O. I, r. 1, C. P. C. or O. XVI, r. 1, Rules of the Supreme Court.

I hold that the suit is bad for multifariousness. The plaintiffs must, therefore, elect to proceed on one of the two causes of action.

Ganga Varapu Krishna Venamma v. Maraparaju Venkata Mukunda Row, 4 Ind. Cas. 303; 7 M. L. T. 33; 33 M. 216, relied on.

A landlord made in favour of a ryot an absolute and hereditary grant of a village on sarvamanyam tenure. After the landlord's death, his son challenged the alienation, and the matter was compromised by the ryot agreeing to pay a favourable rent on the holdings. The son thereafter repudiated the compromise and sued to set aside his father's alienation on the ground of its having been executed under undue influence. The suit was dismissed. In a subsequent suit to recover rent on foot of the compromise:

Held, that the compromise settlement was not an executory contract and the plaintiff was entitled to sue to enforce its terms and was not disqualified from so doing by having sued for a greater relief than he was entitled to in the prior suit. [p. 975, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under s. 73 of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1884 the landholder is entitled to recover from an intermediate landholder the whole of the tax paid in respect of the land held by him less half the tax assessable on the amount of the poruppu. The limitation period for a suit to recover it is six years under Art. 120 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 976, col. 1.]

Rajeswara Muthuramalinga Sethupathi v. Mahalinga Raju, 52 Ind. Cas. 468; 9 L. W. 287; (1919) M. W. N. 365, followed.

Appeal against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in O. S. Nos. 33 of 1917 and 53 of 1921, respectively.

Mr. R. Kesava Iyengar, for the Appellants.
Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer and S. Soundara Raja Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of suits, brought by the Rajah of Ramnad to recover quit rent (or poruppu) as well as road-cess and rail-cess and mahamai from the defendants, who are in occupation of the village of Nedunthulasi in Rajasingamangalam Taluk of the Ramnad District.

Original Suit No. 33 of 1917 out of which A. S. No. 314 of 1922 arises, is a suit to recover what is due from the defendants for Faslis 1321 to 1325. This suit stood over for decision pending the issue of a suit (O. S. No. 157 of 1913) brought by the plaintiff for recovering possession of the village of Nedunthulasi, which he alleged had been obtained from his father as an absolute gift, free from all payments or liabilities through undue influence. The claim of the Rajah to recover the village from the possession of the defendants, was finally rejected by the judgment of the High Court in Raja Rajeshwara Sethupathi Avergal v. Kuppusami Iyer (1). The decision, to which one of us was a party, was dated 3rd May 1921. After this there was an attempt to obtain leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but leave was refused both here and in England. By our decision, we held that the Rajah could not recover the village from the defendants because he was bound by a compromise entered into during his minority by the trustee of his estate Venkatarangayyar and certain Nattkottai Chettis to whom the estate was leased. On September 17, 1894, the Rajah's father gave a 40 years' lease to the first defendant of the village of Nadunthulasi on poruppu (or favourable rent) of Rs. 804 in consideration of his having rendered services as a trusted gumashta of the estate. On 2nd June 1895, the plaintiff's father made an absolute and hereditary grant of the same village on sarvamanyam tenure, i. e., free from all liability for rent or tax. On 24th April 1902 the Dewan trustee of the estate and the Chetty lessees entered into an agreement with the first defendant by which the first defendant obtained a permanent lease of the village on payment of poruppu at the rate of Rs. 402 a year instead of Rs. 804 fixed under the lease of 1894. The Dewan trustee gave up his intentions of instituting proceedings to set aside the gift of the property made under the sarva- manyam grant of 1895. Under this arrangement the defendants are bound to pay poruppu of Rs. 402-1-10 and mahamai and road-cess every fasli.

The main defence, to these suits is that the plaintiff, having brought O. S. No. 157 of 1913 to recover possession of the village, has shown his intention of not being bound by the compromise of 1902 and that, therefore, the defendants are entitled to treat the agreement as being rescinded and to refuse to pay poruppu.

Reliance is placed on cl. 13 of the agreement which runs thus:—"As an arrangement has been effected in this manner and this agreement entered into, the said Kuppuswami Iyer and his representative-in-interest, the said Dewan trustees Rao Bahadur Venkatarangayyar Avergal, and his representatives in-interest and the said lessees and their representatives in-interest and the Rajah who gets the said samas-thanam shall conduct themselves in accordance with the provisions contained herein."

In Srish Chandra Roy v. Banomali Roy (2), there was a compromise of a suit under which one party acknowledged the title of the other as an adopted son and the other party promised to execute a lease of certain mouzas, and afterwards the former party brought a suit to set aside the adoption and caused the other side to incur costs in litigation, and after having failed in this suit he sued for the specific performance of the agreement. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court (Hill J., with whom was Brett, J.) held that the Court of first instance rightly exercised its discretion in refusing to grant specific performance in favour of one party whose previous conduct had amounted to an abandonment of the agreement sought to be enforced. On appeal to His Majesty, the Judicial Committee confirmed the decision of the Calcutta High Court.

I think that there is a real difference between the facts of that case and the present one. The Calcutta High Court was dealing with a suit for specific performance, pure and simple. The present suit, which is before us in appeal, is a suit for recovery of rent by a landlord and the learned Judge in the Court below is mistaken when he speaks of it as a suit to direct the defendant to pay a certain amount. The suit would not be maintainable except on the footing that the parties are still in the relationship of landlord and tenant. If the defendants had relinquished possession of the village or if the Rajah had ceased to be the owner of the estate, there could be no suit for recovery of rent. At the time, when the trustee of the estate and the first defendant settled their disputes by the agreement of 24th April 1902, the trustee was threatening to bring a suit to set aside the absolute gift of June 2, 1895. It was an amicable settlement of a disputed claim. If the gift deed by the former Rajah had been declared in a suit brought for that purpose to be voidable owing to undue influence, the defendant would still have had a right to occupy the village on payment of poruppu of Rs. 804 under the 40 years' lease of 1894.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 352; 41 M. L. J. 474; (1921) M. W. N. 722.

(2) 31 C. 584; 8 C. W. N. 594; 6 Bom. L. R. 501; 14 M. L. J. 185; 2 A. L. J. 31; 31 I. A. 103; 8 Sar. P. O. J. 677 (P. C.).

The parties compromised on the understanding that the first defendant should pay Rs. 402-1-10, as poruppu, i. e., about half the amount which he was paying previously. The agreement was not of the nature of an executory contract like that in Srish Chandra Roy v. Banomali Roy (2). Clause VIII of the agreement, referring to Act VIII of 1865, which was then the rent law in force, provides that no pattas or muchilikas need be executed. The document was stamped as a permanent lease for a rent of Rs. 402 and a release of the rights under the gift deed of 1895. There was no defeasance clause providing for divestment of the rights in the event of either party breaking any of the terms of the agreement. The consideration was executed consideration, the trustee having abstained from bringing a suit for recovery of possession and the first defendant having agreed to pay poruppu of Rs. 402. In Srish Chandra Roy v. Banomali Roy (2), there was a promise to execute a lease of the suit mauzas and in that respect, the agreement was executory; but the settlement in the present case left nothing to be done by the parties in future except to pay and receive poruppu at the rate agreed.

When the plaintiff brought O. S. No. 157 of 1913 to recover possession of the village the defendants, in their written statement para. 37, immediately asserted that they were no longer bound to pay poruppu under the terms of the agreement of 24th April 1902, as the plaintiff had broken the agreement by bringing that suit. In that suit, however, neither party was willing to abide by the compromise. The defendants relied upon the absolute gift made by the Rajah's father and the plaintiff relied on that gift being voidable on account of undue influence. In the decision of the suit, it was made clear that the contentions of neither party were correct and that both sides were bound by the settlement. As the settlement was not an executory contract, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to sue to enforce its terms and that he is not disqualified by having sued for a greater relief in O. S. No. 157 of 1913 as his previous claim that he was entitled to poruppu at the rate of Rs. 804 does not prevent him from now claiming that he can recover at least Rs. 402 per annum. The suit is thus distinguishable from that in Srish Chandra Roy v. Banomali Roy (2) which was a case of an executory contract, and a suit for specific performance. In Ganga Varapu Krishna Venamma v. Naraparaju Venkata Mukunda Row (3), where there was a compromise which finally settled the rights of the parties and nothing more had to be done to give effect to it, it was held by this Court, that the conduct of the executant in acting in a manner inconsistent with the compromise did not justify the other party in repudiating it, and Srish Chandra Roy v. Banomali Roy (2) was distinguished.

In this view the lower Court was right in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed and in giving him a decree for recovery of poruppu for the faslis in suit.

Two minor points remain to be decided. The lower Court's decrees allow interest at 12 per cent. from the date of suit till the date of the decree, and 6 per cent. thereafter till payment. During the pendency of O. S. No. 157 of 1913 and until the appeal was decided on 13th May 1921, the defendant did not tender payment and the plaintiff did not demand it probably with the idea, that if he accepted rent, he would not be able to successfully impugn the defendant's title. On one occasion Rs. 10 was paid, not by the defendants but by a friend named Venkatachari (vide Ex. X.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 303; 7 M. L. T. 33; 33 M. 216.

and the evidence of the second defendant D. W. No. I). This payment will not affect the rights of the parties since it was not a transaction between themselves. The fact remains, that during the pendency of the former litigation, the plaintiff was unwilling to receive and the defendants were unwilling to pay (vide para. 5 of the plaint in O. S. No. 33 of 1917).

Under these circumstances interest should not be charged until the former suit was finally decided by our decision in appeal on 13th March 1921.

The lower Court's decree will be amended by allowing interest only from May 14th, 1921. As regards road-cess, the appellant claims that he is only liable to pay half the road-cess, but it is clear from s. 73 of the Local Boards Act that, as he is an intermediate land-holder, the land-holder is entitled to recover from him the whole of the tax paid in respect of the land held by him less half the tax assessable on the amount of the poruppu. For this the limitation period is six years under Art. 120, vide Rajeswara Muthuramalinga Sethupathi v. Mahalinga Raju (4). The appellant's contention fails.

Subject to the modifications above stated the appeals are dismissed with proportionate costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1354 OF 1924.

July 17, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal.

Pandit CHANNU DUTTA VYAS

—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

His Holiness Shree SWAMI
GYANNANDJI MAHARAJ—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 2 (b)—Customary right, proof of—Appeal, second—Finding of fact involving conclusions of law, whether can be questioned—Appellate Court, duty of.

A Court should not decide that a local custom exists unless the Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application, and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or by force and that it has been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by a greement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned. [p. 977, col. 1.]

Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—A customary right may arise by agreement or prescription and may be deduced from long and open user. Its existence may be inferred from long enjoyment not exercised by permission, stealth or force. [p. 979, col. 2; p. 980, col. 1.]

There is no statutory period of enjoyment provided during which, in order to establish a local custom, it must be proved that the right claimed to have been enjoyed, has, by local custom, been so enjoyed. [p. 979, col. 2.]

The finality given by law to a finding of fact arrived at by a Court of first appeal renders it necessary that the finding should be arrived at after due circumspection and be expressed in clear and definite terms. [p. 980, col. 1.]

A party to an appeal is entitled to claim a clear, definite and specific finding on every issue of fact raised in the case, and if the finding is vague, indefinite or ambiguous, it is but right to insist on such a finding being given or to send an issue back in order that the question of fact might be determined on findings adduced in a manner not open to misconception or doubt. [ibid.]

While findings of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal, the soundness of conclusions drawn from any facts may involve matters of law and may be questioned in such appeal. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 9th of October 1924.

Mr. N. P. Ashthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lindsay, J.—In my opinion this appeal fails in view of the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below.

The question for decision was whether the Hindu population of Benares, represented by the defendant-appellant had acquired a customary right to use the property of the plaintiff for the celebration of the Ram Lila festival. It was alleged that the Hindus had a right to enter on these premises for a period of three days during the Ram Lila and to occupy them for the purpose of giving a dramatic representation of certain incidents in the life of Rama.

The plaintiff in the suit purchased this property in the year 1922 from Gopal Das, Raghunandan Prasad and others in whose family it had been since the year 1854. This property consists of a garden enclosed by walls and inside the enclosure is a large garden-house consisting of a hall and some smaller rooms.

The plaintiff alleged that there was no right on the part of the Hindu public to enter and occupy any portion of these premises for the purposes mentioned above, and he, therefore, asked for a declaration to this effect and also claimed an injunction restraining the defendant and those whom he represented from trespassing on his property.

The Court of first instance dismissed the claim; the lower Appellate Court has reversed the first Court's decree and has given judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant now appeals.

The law on this subject is laid down in Kuar Sen v. Mamman (1). This case is cited in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. I refer to a passage in the judgment which is to be found at page 92* and which reads as follows:—

"In our opinion a Court should not decide that a local custom...exists, unless the Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application, and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or by force, and that it has been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally, by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned".

The learned Judge applied the law thus stated to the facts as found by him, and he was of opinion that the defendant had failed to establish the existence of the customary right in the manner required. The Judge had clearly read and weighed all the evidence which had been adduced in the Trial Court. He began by finding that there was no proof of any dedication of the property to the uses claimed by the defendant although that was a plea which had been raised for the defence. He went on to observe as follows:—

"With the oral evidence I do not propose to deal at any length. That of it which is not partial, if indeed on either side there can be said to be any such, is so vague as to have little value in establishing or disproving a right to do certain definite and clearly specified acts in a certain place at a certain time. In my opinion the witnesses for the respondent did not give evidence such as would establish a customary right in derogation of the title of another".

Later on in the judgment the learned Judge observes as follows:—

(1) 17 A. 87; A. W. N. (1895) 10; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 381.

"To my mind the evidence on the record does nothing more than prove that, as a result of the actors being allowed to sleep in the garden precincts, various episodes have from time to time been performed within the garden".

That in my judgment is a clear finding that the entry upon, and use of, the premises such as it was, was by leave granted and not as of right. The finding in my view is quite unambiguous and perfectly clearly expressed.

Another passage of the judgment may be quoted here. The Judge says:

"I do not think it can be said that if for reasons of convenience various episodes have from time to time been performed elsewhere, a certain and definite custom having the force of law has arisen".

Here again, in my opinion, there is a finding that there was no proof that the alleged customary right was certain and definite.

It has been argued before us that the findings of fact arrived at by the Judge are not clear and definite. It is said that the Judge having discarded the oral evidence could not properly find that the user of the premises had been permissive, but it is not correct to say that the Judge discarded the oral evidence. He certainly was not prepared to accept it wholesale and stated at the outset his intention of interpreting it in the light of the circumstantial evidence. Later on he refers to the evidence as partial and also as vague, but there is nothing to show that he rejected it altogether as being unworthy of credit.

There can be no doubt that there was before the Judge evidence that the user of the premises had been by leave of the proprietors. There was a statement of B. Raghunandan Prasad, one of the founders, and I take it that, to this extent at any rate, Raghunandan Prasad's evidence was accepted by the learned Judge. It is said that the Judge does not set out in his judgment that he believes the statement of Raghunandan Prasad, but he was not bound to do so. He had the whole evidence before him, and there being evidence to support the finding of permissive user it must be concluded that the evidence was believed to the extent of showing that the user had not been as of right but had only been made after leave was granted. These findings are fatal to the case which was put forward in the Courts below by the defendant-appellant. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—I regret I am unable to agree with the order proposed. On the 26th of June 1922, the plaintiff purchased a garden, including a house and other buildings standing thereon, situated in Benares City, from Gopal Das and others. The defendants are the managers of a Ram Lila, known as the Chitrakut Ram Lila, which is celebrated at Benares every year. The Ram Lila is performed in parts at different places, representing different episodes of the Ramayan. As the Lila progresses, the scenes of the places of performance are also shifted. The allegation of the defendants was that that portion of the Ram Lila which represents the episodes connected with the Panch Vati used to be celebrated in the garden on a piece of high ground situated near the Pishach Mochan tank: and certain other episodes connected with the subsequent events used to be celebrated in the garden now purchased by the plaintiff, which is situated close to that place. The plaintiff sought to interfere with the performance of the Ram Lila in the said garden; and a proceeding was accordingly instituted by the defendant, Chunnu Dat Vyas, under s. 147 of the Cr. P. C., demanding that security should be taken from the plaintiff to prevent a breach of the peace. A prolonged enquiry followed, resulting in the plaintiff being bound over and restrained from preventing the managers of the Chitrakut Ram Lila from using the garden for the purposes of the Ram Lila for three days, namely on the 4th, 5th and 6th of Kuar Sudi each year, until the matter was decided by a competent Court.

The present suit has been brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that the defendants or any member of the Hindu community interested in the Chitrakut Ram Lila of Benares had no right to accommodate Sri Ram Chandrajī or to perform Ram Lila on the 4th, 5th and 6th of Kuar Sudi of each year inside the garden without his permission. He also asked for a permanent injunction to restrain the defendants and the members of the Hindu community from entering the said garden for the said purpose without his permission.

The main question for consideration was whether the defendants had been celebrating any portion of the Ram Lila inside the garden or the house situated in it on Kuar Sudi 4th, 5th and 6th of each year, and if so, whether they had been doing so as of right or with the permission of the owners of the said garden for the time being, and since when.

In the written statement the defendants asserted that it was part of the religious duty of those managing the Ram Lila performance that there should not be the slightest alteration in the time, place, paraphernalia, and method of the performance, and that the garden aforesaid was waqf for the limited purpose of celebrating the Ram Lila at that place on the days in question.

The Court of first instance went into the evidence in considerable detail and came to the conclusion that the garden aforesaid was used on Kuar Sudi 4th, 5th and 6th for the stay of Ram Chandrajī in the garden-house at night and for the performance of certain portions of the Ram Lila there on those days. It treated the garden as having been dedicated for the limited purposes aforesaid. The lower Appellate Court, however, found that no such dedication was established, and the correctness of that finding is not here seriously disputed. Regarding the right to celebrate the Ram Lila inside the garden it observed that while the oral evidence produced on either side was so vague as to have little value in establishing or disproving a right to do certain definitely clear and specified acts at a certain place at a certain time, or to establish a customary right in derogation of the title of another, all that could be said to have been proved by the evidence was that "as the result of the actors being allowed to sleep in the garden precincts, various episodes had from time to time been performed in the garden". It did not proceed to specify the particular episodes which were performed inside the garden and from what time; and it went on to observe that if for reasons of convenience various episodes have from time to time been performed inside the garden, it could not be said that a certain and definite custom, having the force of law, had arisen or that it could be regarded as certain or reasonable.

The property in dispute has been held by the immediate predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff since 1854. On the date of first hearing it was stated on behalf of the plaintiff that a man named Girija Kant Jha, who had verified the written statement, was acquainted with the facts. He was examined. He admitted that for the last forty or fifty years Ram Chandrajī and his party used to be accommodated in the garden-house with the permission of the owners; but he denied that any episodes connected with the Ram Lila were actually performed inside the garden. The Courts below find that not only Ram Chandrajī and his party have been staying on Kuar Sudi 4th, 5th and 6th during the performance of the Ram Lila celebration in the garden from the last forty or fifty years, but certain episodes of the Ramayana which took place outside the Panch Vati were also celebrated there. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in these circumstances to establish that they did so by their leave. The only witness examined on the point was Raghunandan Prasad, one of the plaintiffs, whose statement was that he used to invite Ram Chandrajī into this garden year after year and supply bhoj (food) and perform arti on his own account during the said period. The learned District Judge does not discuss his evidence or that of the other witnesses examined in the case. On the other hand, he observes that although the witnesses on both sides were in the main men who from worldly position or religious profession should be above telling lies, he was by no means satisfied that the evidence of the witnesses either for the plaintiff or for the defendants could be unhesitatingly accepted as correct. It does not, therefore, appear whether the conclusion at which he arrived, namely, that the evidence on the record did nothing more than prove that, as a result of the actors being allowed to sleep in the garden precincts, various episodes used from time to time to be performed within the garden, was based on inferences drawn by him from the circumstances established by the evidence or from any other facts. He did not say that he believed the evidence of Raghunandan Prasad and that the user claimed by the plaintiff originated in permission granted to the managers of the Ram Lila. He probably thought that the actors must have been allowed to sleep in the garden "as a matter of convenience" and that that was enough to destroy or stop the growth of any right. A customary right is recognised by law (vide s. 2 (b) of the Easements Act, 1882) and as pointed out in Kuar Sen v. Mamman (1).

"Where a local custom excluding or limiting the general rules of law is set up, a Court should not decide that it exists—unless such Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application, and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted, or by stealth, or by force, and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally, by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned".

There was no statutory period of enjoyment provided, during which, in order to establish a local custom, it must be proved that the right, claimed to have been enjoyed, has, by local custom, been so enjoyed. In Shadi Lal v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (2), it was held that the existence of a customary right could be inferred from long enjoyment not exercised by permission, stealth or force. The question as to whether the defendants have been using the garden for the celebration of certain episodes of the Ramayan and for the stay of Ram Chandrajī during the days in question inside the garden openly and as of right, or by leave or license, therefore, required determination on the evidence adduced; but the finding of the learned District Judge on the point is vague and ambiguous. He finds that certain episodes have from time to time been performed within the garden; but he observes that they are so performed as the result of the actors being allowed to sleep in the garden precincts. If his intention was to hold that the actors were allowed to enter the garden under some express permission granted to them by the owners of the garden from time to time, he ought to have explicitly said so, for in no portion of his judgment he refers to the evidence on which the theory of permission can be said to be based. In fact, he does not discuss the evidence of Raghunandan Prasad at all. If he meant to say that the user grew because it was acquiesced in or not objected to by the owners of the garden, the theory of invitation or express permission falls to the ground. If he made the above observation as an inference or conclusion drawn by him from the state of the locality or other facts established by the evidence, such as the existence of a doorway or a walled enclosure round the garden, that inference or conclusion ought to have been so expressed, for as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Gopal v.

(2) 9 Ind. Cas. 196; 33 A. 257; 8 A. L. J. 10.

Shamskhaton (3), while findings of fact cannot be questioned, the soundness of conclusions drawn from any facts may involve matters of law and may be questioned by a Court of second appeal. A party to an appeal is entitled to claim a clear, definite and specific finding on every issue of fact raised in the case, and if the finding is vague, indefinite or ambiguous, it is but right to insist on such a finding being given or to send an issue back in order that the question of fact might be determined on the evidence adduced in a manner not open to misconception or doubt. The finality given by law to a finding of fact, arrived at by a Court of first appeal, renders it necessary that the finding should be arrived at after due circumspection and be expressed in clear and definite terms. The conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court in this case is expressed in such vague terms that it is difficult to say whether it meant to conclude that the user was permissive or that it had been acquiesced in in the past for reasons of convenience or otherwise. A customary right may arise by agreement or prescription and may be deduced from long and open user. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the proper course would be to send down an issue to the lower Appellate Court to determine whether the episodes in question were performed inside the garden with the permission of the plaintiff or the then owners of the garden-house in question or openly and as of right in accordance with a custom existing in the locality and from what period.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

RESPONDENT.

Malabar tarward—Karnavan, powers of, to demise land on kanom and grant melcharth—Family with small property—Property held by junior members for maintenance—Demise, whether prudent.

The demising of lands on kanom in a Malabar tarward is in the ordinary course of management by the karnavans of well-to-do families, and the karnavan of a tarwad or tavazhi has ordinarily full power to demise lands belonging to the tarwad or tavazhi on kanom, and, after the expiry of the period of kanom, to give melcharth. [p. 981, col. 1.]

But where the family property is small and consists of very few items, which are actually in the possession of the junior members of the family under arrangement with the karnavan for maintenance and out of the income of which they maintain themselves and the karnavan has no other property with which to maintain them, it is not a prudent act on the part of the karnavan to grant the properties on kanom to a stranger and thereby dispossess them of the lands. Such a demise is not binding on the members affected. [p. 981, col. 2.]

Sankaranunni v. Appavu Pillay, 16 Ind. Cas. 571; 12 M. L. T. 556, relied on.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, at Palghat, in A. S. No. 58 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in O. S. No. 482 of 1919.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. S. Ramachandra Iyer and K. Krishan Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a melcharthdar. The melcharthdar sues for the possession of property in the hands of some members of the family, belonging to the tavazhi of the 4th defendant, who gave the melcharth in plaintiff's favour. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, on the ground that the giving of the melcharth, in favour of the plaintiff was not a bona fide act and was not in the interest of the family. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge took the same view and held that the karnavan maliciously granted the melcharth in order to prevent the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from enjoying the property. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

It is urged by Mr. Narayanaswami Iyer on behalf of the appellant, that the karnavan has got the power to demise property on kanom and after the expiry of the kanom to give melcharth and that his powers are unlimited, as regards the granting of melcharth provided the term of the kanom has expired. In this case, the kanom demise was in 1895, in favour of the 1st defendant and the period of twelve years expired in 1907. The melcharth was given in 1918. No doubt in ordinary cases the karnavan of a tarwad or the karnavan of a tavazhi has got full power to demise lands, belonging to the tarwad or tavazhi on kanom and, after the expiry of the period of kanom to give melcharth. As observed by the learned Judges in a case reported as Sankaranunni v. Apparu Pillay (1), the demising of lands on kanom is in the ordinary course of management by the karnavans of well-to-do families. In the case of families which have very large landed properties, it is not possible for the family itself to cultivate all the lands: one of the ways of enjoying the properties is by demising the lands on kanom and renewing the kanom from time to time. But the question is "where the landed property is small and the members of the family are prepared to cultivate it, is the demising of such property on kanom and act of management, which a prudent manager of a family would do." In this case it appears from the evidence that the properties of the family are very limited. Exhibit I is the arrangement, under which the properties of the family were divided between two tavazhis. The A Schedule properties were allotted to the family of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and some other members. Now what the 2nd defendant did was to get a transfer of the kanom right of the 1st defendant and thereby she and her children maintained themselves out of the income of the property. She is only in the position of a kanomdar, inasmuch as she has purchased the right of the 1st defendant, in whose favour the kanom demise was made in 1895. The 4th defendant does not live with the members of the tavazhi but lives, as observed by the Subordinate Judge, at some distance from the place where defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are living; and he does not seem to take any interest in the management of the family. The question, in such circumstances, is whether the giving of melcharth in favour of the plaintiff is an act, which the Court should uphold, as being an act of a prudent manager or a karnavan. Both the Courts have come to the conclusion that the 4th defendant was not actuated by any good feeling towards defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and as the Subordinate Judge observes, it is a malicious act, on his part, to have given the melcharth, as it has deprived the 2nd and 3rd defendants of their means of subsistence. Mr. Narayanaswami Iyer's argument is that the 4th defendant has only given a melcharth and that it is open to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to ask the 4th defendant for maintenance. This argument will be considered good, if it is shown that the 4th defendant is in possession of some property, out of the income of which, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and the other members of the tavazhi could be maintained. From the evidence, it is clear that he is not in possession of any property, from the income of which he could support the 2nd defendant and other members of the tavazhi. In such circumstances, is it proper for the karnavan to deprive the members of the family of the property from the income of which they were able to support themselves? The contention of Mr. Narayanaswami Iyer is that if the melcharth is held to be invalid, the 2nd defendant would become the perpetual kanomdar and the rights of the tavazhi might be endangered. I cannot see how this argument can have any weight, as a kanom is redeemable as soon as the period expires. In this case, the period of the kanom has already expired and it is open to the karnavan to redeem the kanom, at any time he likes. If he is not in a position to redeem the kanom, it is difficult to see how he could maintain these people, after depriving them of this property.

Various cases were relied upon, by Mr. Narayanaswami Iyer, as supporting his contention. No doubt, in the case of any ordinary family, which has considerable properties, if the karnavan demises some property on kanom his act cannot be questioned by the junior members of the family; but where the family property consists of very few items, which items are actually in the possession of the members of the family and out of the income of which they are able to maintain themselves, it is not a prudent act, on the part of the karnavan to dispossess them of the lands by giving the kanom to a stranger. In this case, there is the additional fact that under Ex. I, there was an arrangement by which the 2nd defendant's tavazhi was put in possession of the plaintiff and other properties and was asked to discharge the encumbrances on them. The 2nd defendant could not redeem the kanom, for the simple reason that the 4th defendant would not join in doing so. The 4th defendant could not possibly find the money for redeeming the kanom. The best thing to be done, in the circumstances, was to get a transfer of the right of the kanomdar and thereby get possession of the property.

If the 4th defendant was acting as karnavan and was maintaining the members of the family, one would naturally expect the documents of title, in respect of the plaint property, to be with him. Granting that he is the karnavan, there is no evidence that he was in a position to maintain the 2nd defendant and the other members of the tavazhi and that he gave the melcharth in the ordinary course of management. When it is found that the 4th defendant was not living with the family, but was living away from the family and that he was not in possession of property, with which he could maintain the members of the family, it was not a prudent act on his part, to deprive the members of the tavazhi, of the possession of property out of the income of which they were able to maintain themselves.

Another point was sought to be raised by Mr. Narayanaswami Iyer that the plaintiff is a bona fide melkanhmdar and it is also urged by him that the onus is on defendants Nos. 2 and 3, to prove that he is not a bona fide melkanomdar. This question was not specifically raised, in the lower Courts. Granting that he is entitled to raise this question, I think there are circumstances in the evidence to show that he is not a bona fide melkanomdar. Exhibit B ought to have put him on notice of the arrangement, under which this plaint property was allotted to the tavazhi. If he abstained from enquiry, he should be held to have knowledge of all the circumstances, under which this property came to be enjoyed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. I do not think it is necessary to consider this question at any length, as it was not raised in the lower Courts and as the other side has not had an opportunity of meeting it.

In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

HIRA LAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

BENARSI DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Promissory note payable on demand—Agreement to show that executant was not personally liable, whether can be proved.

Where a contract is founded on consideration and the party who has received the consideration writes down and signs the terms on which he has received it, it is not open to him to raise the plea that he did not agree to those terms. [p. 983, col. 1.]

The executant of a promissory-note cannot, under the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act, be permitted to prove a separate agreement according to which the sum specified in the note is not, as expressed therein, payable on demand but represents merely a portion of the capital of a partnership into which the parties had entered for the purposes of a certain business. [p. 983, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 28th October 1921.

Messrs. Jagan Nath Agarwala and Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and Nawal Kishore, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This first appeal arises out of an action based on two identical promissory notes—one dated the 19th November and the other the 6th December 1919—for Rs. 20,000 each, payable on demand with interest at annas 12 per cent. The defendant, who is the appellant in this Court, admitted that he executed both the promissory notes and received Rs. 20,000 on each, but pleaded that the plaintiff did not advance these monies to him as loans, but invested the same in a cotton concern in which he (plaintiff) became his partner on the very day on which he made the first advance of Rs. 20,000 and that this being the nature and purpose of the advances the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the same as debts, but should sue for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. This defence was on the face of it directly opposed to the plain terms of the promissory notes and was based on an alleged oral contemporaneous contract whose terms, according to the defendant's story, were reduced to writing by him, but the writing was not signed by the plaintiff. This defence, it was objected by the plaintiff, could not be allowed to be raised, and the lower Court, therefore framed the following issues:—

1. Was the sum of Rs. 40,000 received by the defendant towards partnership accounts?

2. Can the above defence be raised in the face of the express terms of the promissory notes relied upon by the plaintiff?

Unfortunately the Trial Court proceeded to take evidence on issue No. 1 before deciding issue No. 2, but after recording some evidence it refused to receive any more, holding that it was inadmissible, and decreed the plaintiff's suit on the defendant's admission that he had passed both the promissory notes and had received Rs. 40,000.

It is argued before us on behalf of the defendant-appellant, that he is entitled to prove the real nature of the money transactions and to produce evidence to show that he did not borrow the monies, but received the same for the business in which he and the plaintiff were partners; in other words, the defendant wants to prove that he is not bound by the terms of the promissory notes. This he cannot be allowed to do. Where a contract is founded on consideration, and the party who received the consideration wrote down and signed the terms on which he received it, it is not open to him to raise the plea that he did not agree to those terms. According to the clear and unambiguous terms of the promissory notes the defendant undertook to pay on demand the monies received. He cannot be allowed to put forward the plea that he did not incur any personal liability, and that he is not liable to pay the amounts on demand. There is no allegation of fraud, mistake, or compulsion, etc., and the defendant had no explanation to offer as to why he passed the promissory notes and thereby undertook to pay the monies on demand, while, as a matter of fact, he had incurred no personal liability. There was no written agreement relating to the alleged partnership, and the note in the defendant's own handwriting about the terms of that partnership is after all a memo. of the terms agreed to orally. That contemporaneous oral agreement could not nullify the promissory notes.

In Sri Ram v. Sobha Ram-Gopal Rai (1), it was held that the executant of a promissory note could not be permitted to prove a separate agreement according to which the sum specified in the note was not, as expressed therein, payable on demand, but after the adjustment of some accounts between the parties.

In Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Krishna (2), it was held that in a suit on a promissory note payable on demand no evidence can be allowed to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement whereby the plaintiff is said to have agreed that he would not present the note until he had discharged certain encumbrances on a property he had sold to a third party, and that such an agreement could not be brought within the terms of proviso 3 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act, 1872.

Where in a suit on a contract signed by the defendant personally, the defendant attempted to lead evidence to show that he was contracting as agent and that the name of his principal was disclosed at the time of the contract, it was held that such evidence was not admissible for the purpose of exonerating a contracting party from liability, for that would be substituting a different agreement from that evidenced by the writing, Ebrahimhoy Pabaney Mills Co. Ltd. v. Hassan Mamooji (3).

The defendant's Counsel built an argument on the erroneous supposition that the promissory notes were signed by the plaintiff also, but, as a matter of fact, they are not signed by him.

In view of what has been stated above we are of opinion that the defendant could not be allowed to prove the oral agreement set up by him and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

The question is not really so much one of the legal relationship between a man and a woman as of equity that a woman who has been kept for a number of years and given a position almost equal to that of a wife should not be left to starve after the death of the man who kept her. Thus it is a matter not of a contract during the lifetime of the parties but of obligations arising out of the personal law of Hindus as defined by their religious texts. [p. 985, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in O. S. No. 30 of 1918.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and S. Soundara Raja Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, B. Sitarama Rao and S. R. Muttusami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The plaintiff was the permanent mistress of Muttu Doraiswami Thevar, who was in receipt of Rs. 700 per mensem as a rent charge on the estate of the Rajah of Ramnad. This sum of Rs. 700 has been erroneously described in various places as an annuity perhaps for the reason that the liability to pay it accrues annually, but it is not strictly an annuity as it is not for the duration of any one life, but is a charge on the revenues of the estate of the Rajah of Ramnad in perpetuity. The right to the rent charge was established as against the Rajah of Ramnad in a suit brought by Ramamani Ammal, the mother of Muthu Doraisami Thevar, which went up to the Privy Council (vide Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (1)). The right has been mortgaged to a Chetty who is not a party to the present suit. The plaintiff claimed in this suit maintenance against the 1st defendant, who was the assignee from a reversioner of Muthu Doraisami Thevar's estate and the 1st defendant having died during suit, the claim was continued against his son the 3rd defendant. After Muthu Doraiswami Thevar's death, the plaintiff was responsible for other litigation before the present suit.

There was a suit under the Specific Relief Act for possession of the bungalow in which she lives, and another suit for a declaration that she was a landlord in respect of certain villages which were in the possession of the deceased Muthu Doraiswami Thevar. In the first suit she succeeded but she lost the second suit based on the footing that she was the wife and heir of Muthu Doraiswami Thevar.

Two questions have been argued in this appeal. Firstly, whether a concubine is entitled to maintenance against the estate of the man who kept her and secondly, whether the rate of maintenance of Rs. 100 per mensem (with 12 years' past maintenance) is a fair rate and one to which the plaintiff is entitled.

On the point of law as to the right of a permanent concubine for maintenance from the family property of her deceased paramour the leading decision in this Court is Panchapakesa Odayan v. Kanaka Ammal (2). But there are a number of decisions in the Bombay High Court, viz., Khemkor v. Umiashankar (3), Vrandavandas v. Yamunabai (4), Yashvantrav v. Kashibai (5) and Bai Monghibai v. Bai Nagubai (6).

After hearing arguments on both sides, I see no reason why we should not follow the decision in Panchapakesa Odayan v. Kanaka Ammal (2). The basis of the right of a concubine to be maintained is the text of Mitakshara, Ch. II, s. 1, Placita 27 and 28. In these Placita Vigneswara refers to the text of Katyayana and Narada, and he states the word "stri" includes a concubine. It is true that the purpose with which the definition was made in this passage was in order to show that a wife was entitled to succeed to her husband's property but it is nevertheless established that the word "women" includes concubines in the ancient texts. The Courts have placed from time to time several limitations, conditions on the right of concubines, to be maintained. In Bai Monghibai v. Bai Nagubai (6), it was made clear that the rule was not applicable to every kept woman but only to those who are continuously and exclusively kept in a man's family and are, in other words, what is known as "Avaruddha stri" in Sanskrit. Another condition that has been put on the right of a concubine to be maintained is that she should be the mother of illegitimate children: see Khemkor v. Umiashankar (3) and Strange's Hindu Law, Ch. VIII, p. 174. Another is that she should be chaste and keep undefiled the bed of her lord and master: see Yashvantrav v. Kashi-bai (5) and Anandilal Bhagchand Marwadi v. Chandrabai Tatya Patil (7). In these two latter respects, it cannot be suggested that the plaintiff has lost her right to maintenance. She gave birth to a daughter when she was being kept by the deceased Muthu Duraiswami Thevar, and it is not now suggested that she has had anything to do with other men. It has been argued by Mr. Venkatachariar that the rule in favour of the maintenance of concubines only applies to cases where there are no other heirs and the property would otherwise escheat to the Sovereign, as those are the circumstances spoken of in the text of Katyayana. The argument that the rule is only applicable to cases of escheat was advanced before Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar, and in Panchapakesa Odayan v. Kanaka Ammal (2), they rejected any attempt to put such a restrictive interpretation on the texts. It has also been brought to our notice that in the Saraswathi Vilasa there is no restriction of the rule to cases of escheat only. In Ramanarasu v. Buchamma (8), it was held that a discarded concubine was not entitled to claim maintenance. This only amounts to saying that a man is not bound by law to keep a concubine, when he does not want her and so long as he is alive, he can put an end to the relationship between himself and a kept woman. If he dies without putting an end to the relationship, the presumption is that he intended the concubinage to be permanent, and as the learned Judges observed there is a moral obligation on the part of the man's heirs to see that his concubine should not be left destitute after his death, and it has been imposed as a conditional liability upon those who succeed to his property. The question is not really so much one of the legal relationship between a man and a woman as of equity that a woman who has been kept for a number of years and given a position almost equal to that of a wife should not be left to starve after the death of the man who kept her. Thus it is a matter not of a contract during the lifetime of the parties but of obligations arising out of the personal law of Hindus as defined by their religious texts. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the lower Court's judgment allowing maintenance to the plaintiff can be maintained.

As for the rate of maintenance, the lower Court fixed it at Rs. 100 a month, although the claim was for Rs. 150. The plaintiff was also given a right to reside in the bungalow where Muthu Duraiswami Thevar was living. It appears that there are two bungalows and that she has been given a right of residence in the larger bungalow. It is suggested that the maintenance of Rs. 100 might be reduced on the ground that the plaintiff was letting out a portion of this bungalow which was more than sufficient for her use, and deriving a rent therefrom of Rs. 15 a month. That was only for a time when the bungalow was in good repair. As she is living as a single woman and has got her daughter married, the accommodation of the smaller bungalow would probably be sufficient for her, but as a matter of sentiment, she has been allowed to occupy the larger bungalow. I am of opinion, that if she would give up her present residence to the appellant and occupy the smaller bungalow in which he now lives, there would be no reason to decrease her allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem, but if she persists in living in the larger bungalow and occupying the whole of it, the allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem when she has a free right of residence besides, is rather excessive and the rate of maintenance should be reduced to Rs. 85 per mensem, provided that the 3rd defendant keeps the bungalow in proper repair, and it is stated to be in bad repair now. The plaintiff is willing to repair the big bungalow at her own cost if she is allowed to remain in it and to continue to receive Rs. 100 per mensem. The 3rd defendant will be given three months' time from now to put it in complete repair and if he does so the rate of maintenance will be reduced to Rs. 85 per mensem.

Muthu Duraiswami Thevar died in 1905. The lower Court has allowed 12 years' past maintenance at the same rate of Rs. 100 till 1912. From July 1907, the plaintiff was in possession of four villages mentioned in the plaint and she has not accounted for her profits by showing how much was spent on the Chattram. Periaswami Thevan whose son married the plaintiff's daughter and managed the four Chattram villages admits in Ex. Q that the Chattram was never in his management and he did not pay any quit rent to the Rajah. The plaintiff has not accounted for the income of those villages during those five years. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion, that she is not entitled to more than seven years' past maintenance and the decree will be modified accordingly, maintaining the rate of Rs 100. In the plaint the plaintiff asked that she should be given a charge for her maintenance either on the allowance payable by the Rajah of Ramnad to the 3rd defendant or on the four Chattram villages. The Subordinate Judge directed that the amounts awarded by him should be a charge on the plaint mentioned villages and on the annuity payable by the 2nd defendant. On issue No. 7 he found that the plaintiff was entitled to this charge as the defendants had not placed before the Court any materials for determining what income was required for the charity. There is no finding whether these villages were burdened with the trust or whether the whole income has been dedicated to charity. Prima facie the villages themselves cannot be made the subject of this charge, as they are trust properties or burdened with a trust. Unless and until it is found in a regular suit instituted by some one interested in the trust that the whole income is devoted to charity, the decree in the present suit must provide that the maintenance should be a charge on the surplus funds, if any, derived from these villages, and the lower Court's decree must be amended in so far as it created a charge on the villages themselves.

The lower Court has further granted a personal decree against the 3rd defendant to pay maintenance. It is not contended that he is personally liable. The decree must, therefore, be amended by directing him to pay out of the assets of Muthu Duraiswami Thevar in his hands and by charging the amounts payable as above stated, viz., Rs. 50 on the annual rent charge as agreed to in the compromise in Sigappa Achi's suit O. S. No. 5 of 1921, and the remainder on the surplus if any, of the income from the villages after performing the charities.

The lower Court's decree, subject to these modifications, is confirmed. The plaintiff will get proportionate costs throughout and she will be liable for the Court-fees due to Government.

Ramesam, J.—I agree. The expression "Avarudhha stri" was used by Vignaneswara not only in Mitakshara, Ch. II, s. 1, Placitum 23 and in Ch. I, s. 8, Placitum 22, but also explained in commentary on Verse 290 of Vyavahara Adhyaya of Yagnavalkya. So long as a woman satisfies this interpretation of the term "Avaruddha stri" vide Bai Monghibai v. Bai Nagubai (6) and satisfies the condition that she remains chaste, Anandilal Bhagchand Marwadi v. Chandrabai Tatya Patil (7), I do not see any reason why she should be deprived of her maintenance.

I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The present suit was brought by several persons for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of, the disputed land which is said to be on the boundary between the plaintiff's and the defendant's mouzas. The real issue in the case that was tried was whether the disputed land forms part of the plaintiff's Mouza Kadamtola or of the defendant's Mouza Sitaijhar. The Trial Court decreed the suit in part holding that a portion of the land in suit belonged to the plaintiff's mouza. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge found that the entire land in suit belonged to the plaintiff's mouza and decreed the suit. Against this decree the present appeal has been preferred by defendant No. 1 making all the plaintiffs and some of the defendants-respondents to the appeal. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court the plaintiff, respondent No. 3 Gopal Das Roy Chowdhury died and an application was made by the appellant after the period of limitation fixed for that purpose to have the abatement of the appeal as against that respondent set aside and for substitution of his heirs in his place. A Rule was issued by this Court; but it was finally discharged on the 18th February last. The result of the decision in the Rule is that the appeal as against the plaintiff-respondent No. 3 has abated.

At the hearing of this appeal a preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that the appeal is incompetent and cannot proceed in the absence of one of the plaintiffs-respondents against whom it must be taken to have been dismissed. I am of opinion that this objection must prevail. The suit was brought jointly by a number of persons for recovery of possession of a certain property. The suit was decreed and the plaintiffs without specification of their interest in the property were declared to be entitled to possession on a certain right claimed by them. Any person who is dissatisfied with the decree must have a declaration in the presence of the entire body of the plaintiffs that they are not entitled to the right claimed by them which is based upon a common ground of title alleged by them. In a case like the present the real test to be applied is what is suggested in the case of Dharamjit Narayan Singh v. Chandreshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (1), namely, whether the suit as framed could proceed in the absence of one of the plaintiffs. There is yet another test—whether, if the plaintiffs were appellants, the appeal could proceed in the absence of one of the plaintiffs either as appellant or respondent. If the defendant succeeds in this appeal and it is declared that the property in suit belongs to his mouza then there will be two decrees—one against all the respondents on the record in whose presence it is decreed that the property belongs to the defendant's mouza and another decree of the lower Court in favour of plaintiff No. 3 who is no party to this appeal to the effect that the property in suit belongs to the plaintiffs' mouza of which he was a part proprietor. In view of this anomalous result it has been held that an appeal arising out of a suit for possession of land to which one of the plaintiffs-respondents is not a party cannot proceed in his absence. The point was fully considered in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee

v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2), where all the cases on the point have been referred to and commented upon. Most of these cases were placed before us by the appellant and the question re-argued. I have given my best considerations to this point and decided to follow the decision in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2). Reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant on the decisions in the case of Chandarsang v. Khimabhai (3) and Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (4) which follows the Bombay case. These cases have been considered in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2) and have been justly distinguished and are not of much authority because no reasons were assigned in support of the view there taken. In the Bombay case the real point was as to the competency of the appeal in the absence of one of the appellants. In considering the case of one of the respondents who had also died and whose heirs were not brought on the record the learned Judges observed that the Court could proceed under s. 544 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O. XLI, r. 20 of the present Code) against the rest of the respondents. In the case of Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (4), the Bombay case was referred to and accepted without any argument. I do not find myself prepared to follow these cases. It is argued further on behalf of the appellant that we should proceed in this case under O. XLI, r. 4, C. P. C., though one of the plaintiffs-respondents is not a party to this appeal. I do not think that we should follow the course suggested. That rule is limited to the case of appellants. An analogous provision is to be found in the proviso to O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C. where a number of persons are adversely affected by a common decree any one of them may move the Court to have the decree varied and the Court may vary it not in respect of such person but also in favour of other parties against whom it was passed. But it does not entitle a person against whom the decree is passed to have it varied in the absence of a person in whose favour it was made.

It is next prayed that we may proceed under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 20, C. P.

(2) 54 Ind. Cas. 822; 24 O. W. N. 44; 30 C. L. J. 217.

(3) 22 B. 718; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1061.

C. and bring in the heirs of the deceased plaintiff-respondent No. 3 on the record and hear the appeal in their presence. An application for that purpose has been formally made. I do not think that we should accede to this request. Order XLI, r. 20 is ordinarily intended to apply to cases where the Court finds that it cannot proceed with the suit without the presence of a party who was not made a party to the appeal. It is not intended to override the provisions of O. XXII, C. P. C. The right obtained by a respondent when the appeal abates as against him is a valuable right and should not be lightly treated. Reference in this contention has been made to the case of Pulin Behari Roy v. Mahendra Chandra Ghosal (5), where the procedure suggested by the appellant was adopted. Without examining the ratio of that case we are not prepared to follow the procedure adopted therein.

We are again asked to exercise our powers under O. XLI, r. 33. That provision of the law is also not applicable to this case. It is intended to cover cases where the Court may vary the decree in such a way or pass such an order as to make the party in whose favour the order of the lower Court was passed liable under the order passed by the Appellate Court. Whatever view may be taken with regard to the inherent power of this Court as contained in O. XLI, C. P. C., or outside the Code, the present case is not one in which such power should be exercised.

In the result, this appeal must be held to be incompetent and dismissed with costs.

The application filed by the appellant is rejected.

Duval, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father—

Suit by son to set aside alienation—Legal necessity—Consideration, insignificant portion of, not proved to be for legal necessity, effect of.

Where in a suit by a Hindu son to set aside a sale of family property by the father on the ground of want of consideration and legal necessity, the portion of the consideration for the sale for which legal necessity is not established is, as compared with the total consideration, insignificant, the sale ought not to be set aside. [p. 990, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 2nd May 1922.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Mears, C. J., and Mukerji, J.—

This is the appeal of Lal Bahadur Lal who on the 25th of April 1918 bought a 2-arnas share in village Phulpur from Adit Bahadur, the father of the plaintiff. The plaintiff commenced a suit for the setting aside of the sale on the ground that there was no legal necessity for it and that in truth there was no consideration. The learned Subordinate Judge analysed the six items which made up the consideration of Rs. 5,995 and we have followed the same course dealing with each and every item because either the appellants or the respondent challenged one or other of them. We need not go into the details of these because they present no special features.

Item (a). The learned Subordinate Judge found that item (a) Rs. 356 was for legal necessity. Mr. Sheo Prasad Sinha has not been able to challenge this item.

As regards item (b) Rs. 849 that was disallowed, but having regard to the recent decision of the Privy Council in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (1) which has been decided subsequent to the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that item of Rs. 849 must now be included.

Item (c). The learned Subordinate Judge allowed Rs. 119 of the item of Rs. 256, but again it is agreed that the whole Rs. 256 is recoverable.

Item (d). No question arises on this item of Rs. 250.

As regards item (e) Rs. 1,725 we are of opinion that the transaction of mortgage between the father and Ganesh Kunwari was a genuine transaction and that this Rs. 1,725 was a debt due by the father and properly dischargable by an advance by the defendant.

Item (f). The learned Subordinate Judge allowed Rs. 1,619-8-0 of the item of Rs. 2,559. It is this item which has been the subject of the greater part of the argument. Rs. 1,500 was said to have been the amount borrowed from Lal Bahadur Lal to pay for the redeeming of ornaments belonging to the daughter of Adit Bahadur which the latter had pledged. Completely satisfactory evidence was given showing the redemption of Rs. 1,307 worth, but there is no evidence as regards the Rs. 193. That amount, therefore, must be struck off. As regards Rs. 500 payment of rent, only Rs. 492-1-0 has been proved and, therefore, again Rs. 7-15-0 was disallowed. An item of Rs. 200 relates to a stamp. The appellants had in fact advanced Rs. 200 to Adit Bahadur for the purchase of a stamp in respect of a transaction which Adit Bahadur intended to enter into with a third party. For some reason, not material to this case, the transaction went off, but nevertheless that money had been borrowed and constituted a debt from the father Lal Bahadur Lal. As regards the sum of Rs. 100 we disallow it on the ground that there is no evidence as to the circumstances under which this was advanced. It is admitted that the final amount of Rs. 300 was one properly incurred.

The addition of all these items allowed comes to Rs. 5,735-1-0 and, therefore, Rs. 259-15-0 is declared to be the amount for which there was no legal necessity.

When these figures were arrived at there naturally arose the question as to the form of the decree and our attention has been called to what undoubtedly is a conflict of opinion. We think it desirable that this case should be considered and that a Full Bench should be asked to say whether on the figures as found by us the sale should be set aside on payment by Kamleshar Nath of Rs. 5,735-1-0 or whether the sale should be confirmed to Lal Bahadur Lal in his paying to Kamleshar Nath Rs. 259-15-0 or whether a third course should be taken of giving no relief to Kamleshar Nath at all.

The difference between the views taken by Benches of this Court will appear from a perusal of the following cases:—

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

On the question which has been referred to us by a Bench we are of opinion that in this particular case the sale should not be set aside but should be confirmed in favour of the purchaser. The consideration which is mentioned in the sale-deed is Rs. 5,995 and it is found that for only a sum of Rs. 259-15-0 out of this sum no legal necessity has been established. In our opinion this item is an insignificant sum which should be left out of consideration in deciding the question whether the sale should or should not stand. The sale was a sale of a 2 annas share out of a 5 annas 4 pies share and we have no reason to suppose that the precise sum for which legal necessity existed could have been realised by a sale of any less share than that of 2 annas.

We need not discuss the case law on the subject. The latest case to which we have been referred will be found in Daulat v. Sankatha Prasad (9). That refers back to recent decisions which are to be found in Jai Narasn Pande v. Bhagwan Pande (4) and Sanmukh Pande v. Jagaranath Pande (6). The whole case-law on the subject has been referred to in one or other of these rulings. The only authority on which Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha for the respondent relies is the case of Dwarka Ram v. Jhulai Pande (5). We do not wish to criticise the merits of that decision for we are satisfied that on the merits the decision was a perfectly correct one, if we may say so, but we are of opinion that there are certain expressions in the judgment which cannot be accepted literally and which are expressed too widely. We refer to the passage at page 432* of the report which runs as follows :—

"If any part of the consideration was invalid and not binding on the plaintiff, the plaintiff would be entitled to have the sale set aside. But if a portion of the consideration was good and binding on the plaintiff, he would be entitled to reimburse it to the defendant. The form of the decree in a case of this kind should, therefore, be a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff, subject to his paying to the purchaser so much consideration as was required for the necessities of the family. This is the form of the decree in a suit of this kind which has always been maintained."

We do not think it is correct to say that if any part of the consideration, however insignificant, was invalid and not binding on the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to have the sale set aside. On the contrary there is plenty of authority for the proposition that where the portion of the consideration for which no legal necessity can be proved is insignificant the sale will stand. That was laid down in the case of Girdhari Lal v. Kantu Lal (8) and the relevant passage of that judgment will be found quoted in the Bench decision reported as Jai Narain Pande v. Bhagwan Pande (4). Nor again do we think it is correct to say that the form of the decree in a suit of this kind which has always been maintained is the form by which the plaintiff is given a decree for possession subject to his paying to the purchaser so much of the consideration as was required for the necessities of the family. On the contrary there are cases in which the suit of the plaintiff has failed altogether, i. e. cases where the portions of the consideration money for which no legal necessity could be found were so inconsiderable as to be liable to be ignored.

Then only other matter upon which we are called upon to express an opinion is whether in the circumstances of this case the purchaser is liable to pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 259-15-0 for which no legal necessity has been held to be established. In our opinion the vendee in this case ought not to be made liable to pay this sum. It seems to have been held that this amount was actually paid to the father of the plaintiff, and that being so, we can see no good reason why the vendee should be required to pay the money over again.

Let this answer be returned to the Referring Bench.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

Mears, C. J. and Mukerji, J.—The facts of this case will appear from our order, dated 24th of June 1925, referring a point of law to a Full Bench. The point referred to is also stated in that order.

The Full Bench have now decided the point and have held that the sale impeached by the son, who was the plaintiff-repondent in this Court, should be upheld in its entirety without any condition attached to the decree.

We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff-repondent's suit with costs throughout. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL NO. 360
OF 1924.

April 30, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Charles Gordon

In re PETA NAGAYYA—DEFENDANT—
APPELLANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, rr. 10, 11, 12—Witness, failure of, to obey summons to attend Court—Court's power to impose fine—Attachment or proclamation, whether condition precedent—Words "such person" in r. 12, meaning of.

Neither the issue of a proclamation nor an order for attachment of property is a condition precedent to the imposition of a fine for non-attendance of a person who has been summoned to attend a Civil Court as a witness. [p. 991, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—The words "such person" in r. 12 of O. XVI of the C. P. O. do not mean a person against whom a proclamation has been issued or whose property has been attached; but mean a person to whom a summons has been issued and who fails to attend under r. 10 (1). [p. 991, col. 2; p. 992, col. 1.]

Ram Gopal v. Secretary of State for India, 55 Ind. Cas. 425; 31 C. L. J. 363 and Ashutosh Mullick v. Secretary of State for India, 57 Ind. Cas. 302, dissented from.

Per Ramesam, J.—Order XVI, r. 12, C. P. C., deals with all cases of disobedience not covered by r. 11, whether there has been attachment or not and is not confined to cases in which there has been an attachment. [p. 992, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, dated the 13th February 1924, made in O. S. No. 47 of 1923.

Mr. A. Venkatachalam, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The appellant was summoned on the 26th January 1924 to appear as a witness on the 8th February. He did not appear and a warrant was issued and he was fined Rs. 40 for disobedience of summons. His explanation was that, as he was going to Court, after arriving at the place where the Court was held, he was met by the plaintiff and defendants who told him that the case had been adjourned. We have no means of testing whether this statement is true. The parties were not examined to corroborate him, but the Judge did not accept the explanation. He only gave him five days' time to pay the fine.

It is argued that the Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction inasmuch as there was no issue of a proclamation or attachment of property before the fine was imposed. This argument is based on the decisions in Ashutosh Mullick v. Secretary of State for India (1) and Ram Gopal v. Secretary of State for India (2). I regret that I must express dissent from the opinion of the two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court who decided these cases. I am unable to construe the provisions of rr. 10 to 12 of O. XVI of the C. P. C., as meaning that the issue of a proclamation or an order for attachment of property are conditions precedent to the imposition of a fine for non-attendance of a person who has been summoned to attend a Civil Court. Beachcroft, J., treats r. 12 as an alternative to r. 11 and he understands the words "such person" in r. 12 as meaning a person against whom a proclamation has been issued or whose property has been attached. In my opinion "such person" means a person to whom a summons has been issued and who fails to attend under r. 10 (1). Rule 12 itself provides both for cases where an attachment has been made and for cases where an attachment has not been already made but is made in enforcement of the order of fine. It seems to me that to say that a Judge cannot fine a witness for disobedience of summons unless the preliminaries are first gone through of attaching his property or issuing a proclamation against him is to put a great and unnecessary limitation on the powers of Courts to deal with refractory witnesses. The Subordinate Judge's order was thus passed in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

(1) 57 Ind. Cas. 302.

There is nothing to show that the witness had ever previously disobeyed a summons of Court. He did not prove that he was told by the parties that the case had been adjourned, and, even assuming that story were true, it would not legally be a sufficient excuse for non-attendance. The fine of Rs. 40 is rather excessive, and is in contrast with the fact that all the other witnesses who were fined in the case were excused when they appeared before the Court and represented their reasons for non-appearance. I reduce the fine imposed by the lower Court from Rs. 40 to Rs. 5 (Rs. five). The excess will be refunded. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. No costs.

Ramesam, J.—I entirely agree.

The case of Ashutosh Mullick v. Secretary of State for India (1) merely follows the earlier case of Ram Gopal v. Secretary of State for India (2) and contains no additional reasoning. It seems to me that the argument addressed to Beachcroft, J., in Ram Gopal v. Secretary of State for India (2) and which was rejected by him, namely, that O. XVI, r. 12 should be construed independently of r. 11 and should be taken to refer to r. 10 is sound and might have been accepted by him. I am of opinion that O. XVI, r. 12 deals with all cases of disobedience not covered by r. 11 whether there has been attachment or not. If it were not so, there would be cases of flagrant disobedience with which Courts would have no power of dealing but, apart from such considerations, O. XVI, r. 12 contains clear indications that it deals also with cases where there has been no attachment. It provides for a fresh attachment of property where the witness has failed to give a satisfactory explanation, if there has been no attachment of property, and, if there has been an attachment already, for sale. Both cases being expressly referred to in the sections it is difficult to construe O. XVI, r. 12 as being confined to cases in which there has been an attachment.

I agree with the order passed by my learned brother.

BAKHTAWAR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

SUNDER LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS
—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—Family arrangement—Petition of compromise addressed to Court—Antecedent title, recognition of—Registration, whether necessary.

Where a bona fide dispute between the parties is eventually composed, each party recognizing an antecedent title in the other and the parties address a petition to the Court stating the terms of the agreement arrived at between them, there is no necessity to have the petition registered. Such a petition does not purport to create, assign, limit, extinguish or declare any rights in immovable property within the meaning of s. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act. It is merely a recital of facts by which the Court is informed that the parties have come to an arrangement. [p. 994, col. 2.]

Per Sulaiman, J.—Division of property by way of family settlement does not amount to a transfer by one party to the other, nor does any party to such settlement derive title through the other. The settlement merely recognizes the right of the other party and accepts it in part. Not being a transfer, gift or exchange from one party to the other the transaction does not fall under any of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act which require registration. [p. 993, col. 2.]

Even in the absence of a registered document it is open to either party to a family settlement to prove that there has been a family settlement which was acted upon. [ibid.]

Where, however, a compromise is reduced to writing, then if the document is sought to be used as a document of title purporting to create or declare rights in immovable property worth more than Rs. 100 the deed would require registration. If the document does not purport to be a document of title creating or declaring such right but contains a mere recital of a previous settlement arrived at between the parties, the document may be used in evidence in proof of that previous settlement, even though not registered. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 28th September 1923.

REFERRING ORDER.

Sulaiman, J.—I think this is a fit case to be referred to a Bench of two Judges. The learned Judge begins his judgment by saying that this is rather a difficult case and he had had to look up numerous rulings which were cited before him.

The main question in the case was whether the compromise arrived at in 1909 between Musammam Kamli the mother of the plaintiffs and Bakhtawar, the defendant, was in the nature of a family settlement or not. The learned Judge has to my mind unnecessarily gone into the question whether the defendant has or has not proved in this case the validity of his adoption. There was no issue framed in the first Court and the defendant was not called upon to lead evidence on that point. The question of adoption was irrelevant, the main question being whether in 1909 there was a bona fide dispute about the alleged adoption and whether Musammam Kamli believed that she had a rival claimant to meet and thought it desirable to settle the dispute with him rather than to carry on a long continued litigation. Having found that the oral evidence adduced by the defendant to prove his adoption was not satisfactory and having come to the conclusion that the application mentioning the compromise filed in the Revenue Court was inadmissible for want of registration he has been forced to record a finding that it was not reasonable for Musammam Kamli to have given away the rights of her children to an outsider. He has not considered whether even if for want of registration the application were inadmissible, the recital in it is or is not admissible for purposes of proving her admission of the adoption. At one place he has also remarked "I have already held that there is not sufficient oral evidence to prove that the compromise was a bona fide transaction" but in the previous portion of his judgment he nowhere recorded any such express finding. If the Bench is of opinion that the case is concluded by findings of fact then the question of law would not arise, otherwise the question which has to be considered is whether the application made to the Revenue Court which refers to a compromise between the parties is inadmissible in evidence because it is an unregistered document.

There can be no doubt that there are conflicting rulings on this point some of which are not easily reconcilable. If the matter were wholly res integra I would have no hesitation in holding (1) that division of property by way of family settlement does not amount to a transfer by one party to the other, nor does any party to such settlement derive title through the other. The settlement merely recognises the right of the other party and accepts it in part. Not being a transfer, gift or exchange from one party to the other the transaction does not fall under any of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act which require registration; (2) that even in the absence of a registered document it is open to either party to the family settlement to prove that there had been a family settlement which was acted upon; (3) that if the compromise is reduced to writing then if that document is used as a document of title purporting to create or declare rights in immoveable property worth more than Rs. 100 the deed would require registration; but (4) that if the document does not purport to be a document of title creating or declaring such right but contains a mere recital of a previous settlement arrived at between the parties the document may be used in evidence in proof of that previous settlement, even though not registered.

I feel, however, that I would not be justified in acting on these propositions in face of considerable conflict of opinion which exists on the subject. That there is such a conflict admits of no doubt.

Leaving aside cases which were decided prior to March 11th, 1916, which are referred to in the Full Bench case of Jagrani v. Bisheshar Dube (1), the learned Judges who formed the Full Bench themselves were not unanimous on the rules of law which should be adopted. Richards, C. J., at page 373* remarked: "It is said that the transaction in the present case was a 'family arrangement' and it is urged that documents connected with 'family arrangements' need never be registered. I think that there is no justification for such a proposition. Documents which disclosed 'family arrangements' and which at the same time 'purport or operate' to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish, etc., must be registered, just as much as any other documents unconnected with 'family arrangements.'" He took the view that none of the cases in which their Lordships of the Privy Council had considered the 'family arrangement' could be used as authorities for the proposition that such documents were exempted from the provisions of the Registration Act. Tudball, J., at page 375* also remarked "If this document were one which purported or operated to extinguish the plaintiff's title, registration thereof would, in my opinion, be compulsory". And at page 376* he further remarked: "Where a family settlement, bona fide and free of fraud, is made and acted upon by all the parties, even though a full and proper document be not duly executed and registered, the Courts have refused to go behind it." Rafique, J., at page 378* held "If a compromise has been validly made and acted upon it must be given effect to". He was of opinion that if the compromise filed before a Revenue Court was merely an intimation of the fact of a compromise already made and nothing more than the question of the admissibility of the document, was irrelevant; but that the previous compromise itself "should have been in writing and registered" (pages 379*).

The matter has come up recently before a Bench consisting of Piggott and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ., in the case of Baldeo Singh v. Udal Singh (2) where also the learned Judges did not take exactly the same view. Kanhaiya Lal, J., was of opinion that petition which contained nothing more than a recital of the oral settlement effected out of Court and did not by itself purport to create, assign or declare any rights in immoveable property, did not require to be registered. Piggott, J., held that if the entire settlement were reduced to writing the provisions of the Registration Act and possibly also those of s. 91 of the Indian Evidence Act would come into force. He, however, held that in that particular case the settlement had not been reduced to writing in its entirety.

I accordingly refer this case to a Bench of two Judges.

Mr. Ambika Prasad (with him Dr. N. C. Vaish), for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Lindsay, J.—After hearing arguments in this case, I am of opinion that the appellant is entitled to succeed. The whole question turns on the document dated the 9th of January 1909 which was presented in the Revenue Court. It appears that this document was presented after the death of one

(2) 58 Ind. Cas. 732; 18 A. L. J. 877; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 202; 43 A. 1.

Musammatt Surjaiti who was the widow of Dungar. When Musammatt Surjaiti died Bakhtawar who is the grand nephew of Dungar seems to have applied to the Revenue Court claiming to be the heir and to be entitled to have mutation of all property which had belonged to Dungar, and it further appears that he was putting forward a title by saying that Musammatt Surjaiti had adopted him to her husband Dungar.

The claim in the Revenue Court was opposed by Dungar's daughter Musammatt Kamli and on the date above mentioned we find that a petition was presented to the Court which is described as darkhast razinama. This document recited that the two parties, namely, Bakhtawar and Musammatt Kamli had already composed their differences regarding the property and had come to an arrangement between themselves by which Musammatt Kamli's name was to be entered in respect of 7 bighas, 12 biswas odd whilst Bakhtawar's name was to be entered in respect of the rest of the property amounting to 7 bighas 2 biswas odd. The petition describes Bakhtawar as the adopted son of Musammatt Surjaiti.

It is not disputed that the entries have remained in this way ever since the mutation Court made an order upon this petition. I am of opinion that this petition is evidence of a previously arranged family settlement arrived at between Bakhtawar and Musammatt Kamli, and the true view of the transaction appears to me to be that there was no transfer by one party to the other, nor was there any creation of a fresh title. Bakhtawar was setting himself up as the adopted son whilst Musammatt Kamli was opposing him in her character as daughter and heir of the deceased Dungar. It is reasonable to assume that there was a bona fide dispute between the parties which was eventually composed, each party recognising an antecedent title in the other. In this view of the circumstances I am of opinion that there was no necessity to have this petition registered. It does not, in my opinion, purport to create, assign, limit, extinguish or declare within the meaning of these expressions as used in s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act. It is merely a recital of fact by which the Court is informed that the parties have come to an arrangement. The whole question raised here has been discussed by me in a ruling which will be found in Satrohan

Lal v. Nageshar Prasad (3). I have nothing to add to or subtract from what I said on that occasion. I need only say further that this ruling was cited in a Bench decision reported as Baldeo Singh v. Udal Singh (2). I would, therefore, allow this appeal and setting aside the decrees of both the Courts below dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree and adhere to the four propositions laid down by me in my Referring Order which I was inclined to accept if the matter were wholly res integra.

SUCHA SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Letters Patent (Rang.), cl. 13—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 5, order under, whether "judgment"—Appealable order, whether "judgment."

An order under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, C. P. O., requiring an appellant to give security, is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent (Rangoon), because it is merely an interlocutory order which does not affect the merits of the dispute between the parties by determining some right or liability which is in controversy between them in the suit.

Mooljee Dharsee & Co. v. M. E. Moolia, 88 Ind. Cas. 740; 4 Bur. L. J. 61; (1925) A. I. R. (R.) 225; 3 R. 255, followed.

Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Aftab Dowla, 26 M. 502 and Soonabai v. Tribhovandas, 32 B. 602; 10 Bom. L. R. 337, not followed.

Semle.—Where an appeal against an order actually is given by the C. P. C., it might well be argued that the order ought to be regarded as a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent.

Civil miscellaneous appeal against an order of the Original Side in C. R. No. 473 of 1924.

Mr. Auzam, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 473 of 1924 on the Original Side of the Court respondent sued Bahan Singh and certain relatives of Thakur Singh, among whom was appellant to recover Rs. 6,900 which he alleged to be due on a promissory note executed by Bahan Singh and Thakur Singh.

Respondent also applied for attachment before judgment in respect of a motor car No. 4315 belonging to appellant on the ground that the appellant had sold another motor car No. 3677, which belonged to the estate and kept the proceeds, and that appellant was trying to sell car No. 4315 and was intending to leave the jurisdiction of the Court. That application was dismissed.

Respondent then filed a fresh application claiming on the same ground that appellant should be ordered to deposit in Court Rs. 1,700 as being the amount which Thakur Singh had paid for his interest in car No. 4315 and to give security for costs.

Affidavits in respect of that application were filed by both parties, and after examining one of respondent's witnesses and hearing Counsel, the learned Judge passed an order directing appellant to furnish security in Rs. 1,784.

Appellant desires to appeal against that order, but his learned Advocate has been unable to satisfy us that an appeal lies.

He has referred us to the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1 (q) but it is clear that the order against which he wishes to appeal is not one of the orders mentioned in that rule.

The order of the learned Judge was presumably an order made under the provisions of O. XXXVIII, r. 5 and would not, in our opinion, be a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent, because it is a mere interlocutory order which does not affect the merits of the dispute between the parties by determining some right or liability which is in controversy between them in the suit.

It is true that it was held in the case of Seshairi Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Aftab Dowla (1) that an order directing a plaintiff to furnish security for costs, made under the provisions corresponding to O. XXV, r. 1 was a "judgment" within the meaning of a corresponding clause of Letters Patent and that the ruling was followed in Soonabai v. Tribhovandas (2) but it is clear from the judgment that both the Madras and the Bombay Courts regarded the matter as being open to doubt. The meaning of the word "judgment" in the Letters Patent has recently been considered by this Court in the case of Moolji Dharsee & Co. v. M. E. Moola (3) and on the reasoning adopted in that case we are of the opinion that the order in this case was not a "judgment."

(1) 26 M. 502.

The question would have been different if an order under O. XXXVIII, r. 6 had been made because an appeal from such an order actually is given by the Code and it might well be argued that orders against which an appeal is given by the Code ought to be regarded as "judgments" within the meaning of the Letters Patent.

In the present case the order would not be appealable as an order under the Code and we are of opinion that it is not appealable as a judgment under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Construction of document—Maintenance deed—Provision for payment of paddy or equivalent value—Option—Market rate, claim at, maintainability of.

It is not an invariable rule that where a person undertakes to pay maintenance in kind he should always pay it in kind. Where a document is clear, effect must be given to its terms.

Where a person by a deed of maintenance undertook to deliver to a maintenance holder paddy worth Rs. 30 for every year, 3 podies of paddy without moisture and chaff, and the deed further provided that "if at any time the giving of maintenance is delayed at the rate of 13 only for every pod money should be collected or sued for":

Held, that the document gave an option to the grantor to give maintenance in kind or in cash at the rate mentioned and that the maintenance holder was not entitled to insist on payment at the market rate on the date of the plaint.

Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra Mukherjee, 53 Ind. Cas. 382; 47 C. 133; 30 C. L. J. 41; 23 C. W. N. 1021, relied on.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Salem, in A. S. 92 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakal, in O. S. No. 341 of 1920.

Mr. K. Ramanath Shenai, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishnier, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to get maintenance secured under Ex. A, at the rate at which paddy was selling on the date of the plaint. Both the Courts have given a decree for the amount of paddy payable to her at the rate prevailing on the date of the plaint. Mr. Ramanath Shenai on behalf of the appellants urges that Ex. A, provides for payment of money in lieu of the payment of maintenance in kind, and his client is entitled to pay maintenance at the rate mentioned in Ex. A. On the other side it is contended that the document provides for payment of maintenance in kind and that the value of the paddy is given only for the purpose of ascertaining the value for registration purpose and therefore it is said that there is no option to the defendant to pay maintenance in money at the rate mentioned in the document. The recital in the document "is to deliver that paddy worth Rs. 39 for every year, 3 podies of Sambali paddy without moisture and chaff before 17th November every year according to the measure by which paddy is measured for sale. On failure to give every year, with interest at the rate of 4 Vallams for every year on the outstanding paddy from the date of default." Lower down there is this clause, "If at any time the giving of maintenance is delayed at the rate of 13 only for every podu money should be collected or sued for." But for the later clause I would be inclined to hold that the defendant is bound to deliver paddy according to the document and in default of delivery of paddy he should pay the value of the paddy at the market rate. The concluding portion of the document is emphatic in its terms and gives an option to the defendant to pay at the rate of 13 for every podu. If the value of the paddy is given either for the purpose of registration or for some other purpose, no doubt the defendant could not escape his liability to deliver paddy, and on default to pay the value of the paddy at the market rate. The respondent relies upon a number of cases in support of this contention that the defendant is bound to deliver paddy, and in default to pay the value of the paddy at the market rate or wherever the claim is made. Only recently I decided in S. A. No. 460 of 1922 following the decision of a Bench of this Court, that a lessee was bound to pay rent in kind and in default he should pay the value of the paddy at the rate ruling on the date of the plaint. But the terms of that document are not the same as the terms of the document in this case. Here the concluding portion of the document which I have already extracted is emphatic and it gives the defendant an option to pay maintenance in kind or in cash at the rate mentioned in the document. There are a number of decisions on this point and they are not all reconcilable.

The difficulty has arisen from the facts that Courts have tried to interpret one document in the light of the recitals of another. Where there is no general principle governing the interpretation of the documents each document should be interpreted as it reads. It is not proper to go outside the document to try to find out what the intention of the parties to the document was in fixing a certain amount as the value of the grain rent payable. In a recent case reported as Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra Mukherjee (1), the learned Chief Justice and two other learned Judges have held that it was not the invariable rule that the rent should be paid in kind; and that each document should be interpreted according to its tenor. In that case reference was made to a number of previous cases and also to an unreported decision of Maclean, C. J., and Banerji, J. The principle deducible from all these cases is that it is not an invariable rule that where a lessee or other person undertakes to pay rent or maintenance or any such thing in kind he should always pay it in kind. Where an option is given to the promisee to pay in kind or in money and if the amount payable in money is fixed in the document, Courts should not go behind the document and say that the intention of the parties was to pay only in kind. It is unnecessary to discuss the cases to which my attention was drawn by the learned Vakil for the respondent. I think the document is clear in its terms and I must give effect to its terms. In the view I have taken I think the judgment of the Court below cannot be supported.

It is also vehemently urged by the learned Vakil for the respondent that this is a maintenance arrangement and the plaintiff is entitled to have the maintenance paid in kind as it is required for her food. But that would not take away the clause at the end of the document. I, therefore, consider that the decree of the lower Court on this point is wrong. I allow the plaintiff the amount mentioned in Ex. A, as the value of the paddy which was payable on default of the payment of the 3 podies of paddy. The plaintiff will have a decree for Rs. 39 with interests at the rate mentioned in the document till the date of deposit. In the circumstances I do not think I should allow costs to the appellants. Both

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question which has now been settled by authorities. The appellant obtained a decree against the respondents and attached certain properties described in three schedules. The appeal is confined to the finding of the lower Court with respect to Schedule III. The judgment-debtors claimed that the properties described in that Schedule could not be sold as they had non-transferable occupancy interest in them. The learned District Judge of the Court of Appeal below has given effect to this contention. This view is untenable. In the Full Bench case of Chandra Binode Kundu v. Sheikh Alla Bux (1), it was held that the transfer for value of the whole or part of an occupancy holding apart from custom or local usage is operative as against the raiyat whether it is voluntary or involuntary. The question involved in the Full Bench case was confined to the right of the landlord to bring a non-transferable occupancy holding of a tenant to sale in execution of a money-decree obtained by him; but the principle upon which this decision is based is a general one which applies to the case of creditors other than landlords; and this view has been adopted in the case of Kenaram Pal v. Kinu Mandal (2). We see no reason to differ from the view taken in those cases and we must hold that the properties of Schedule III are liable to attachment in execution of the decree obtained by the appellant.

It is argued on behalf of the respondent that these properties were claimed by the respondents as their own and, therefore, there should be an enquiry into that question. We do not think that this question was raised in any of the Courts below. On reading the judgments of the Courts and the pleadings, we are of opinion that this was a question which was not within the contemplation of the parties in the Court below. The only points upon which they went to trial was whether the occupancy right in lands of Schedule III was liable to be sold in execution of the appellant's decree.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside and we hold that the properties mentioned in Schedule III of the application for execution are liable to be attached and sold in execution of the appellant's decree.

There was a cross-appeal in the Court below against the order of the Munsif that the decree-holder should produce at the time of the sale landlord's consent to the transfer of the lands mentioned in Schedule III. In the view that we take of the law, we think that this order should also be set aside. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court with regard to properties mentioned in the other Schedules will stand. We make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for recovery of lands let to the defendants who were his tenants. Under the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act of 1899 it is well-known that the landlord, is bound to compensate the tenant on ejectment for the improvements effected by the tenant. In this case the improvement that is in dispute in second appeal was an improvement alleged to consist of the conversion of one crop into two crop lands described in the suit as item (1). The case for the tenants was that this land having been at one time one crop land, had at the time of the ejectment become two crop land and having regard to the provisions of s. 4 of the Act, that was enough for them, because the effect of that section clearly is to throw upon the landlord, when once it is shown that one crop land has been converted into two crop land, the burden of proving that this was not due to anything done or spent by the tenant. In this case the story set up by the landlord in the Courts below was that this land had been two crop land throughout its history or, at any rate, throughout its history under the tenancy of the defendants or their predecessors-in-title. That is dealt with by both the Courts below, by the learned Subordinate Judge in para. 9 of his judgment and by the District Munsif in para. 15 of his judgment, and it is clear therefrom that these learned Judges rejected the story, and the only story at that time put up by the plaintiff to rebut the presumption created by s. 4 of the Act. Now it is sought to be said that, because the word "improvements" in the section is paraphrased by the words "works or the products of such works," therefore, we must demand proof that the improvement, the conversion of one crop land into two crop land, was definitely due to the exertions of the tenant or otherwise it cannot be described as "work." It appears to us that to accede to such an argument would in effect be to throw the burden of proof in the opposite direction, to where the Statutes has deliberately indicated that it should lie. In support of this contention, reference is made to the case of Kunnath Madampil Kunjunni v. Mannarghat Ramanunni (1). I do not think it is necessary for me to say very much about that case. I observe that so far as appears from the report no reference is made to the all important section of the Statute, s. 4, and I will content myself at this stage with saying that I am by no means clear that that case was rightly decided and that I reserve for myself the right to re-consider the correctness of that decision if on any future occasion, it should be directly challenged.

The result is that Second Appeal No. 176 is dismissed with costs. Second Appeal No. 549 follows Second Appeal No. 176 and it is also dismissed with costs. Time for redemption is extended by three months.

Hindu Law—Adoption by widow—Conditions imposed on adopted son, legality of—Agreement entered into by adopted son, whether binding—Stranger, whether can enforce agreement—Family arrangement, what amounts to—Trust—Charge—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 2—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100.

A Hindu widow is not entitled when making an adoption to her deceased husband to impose any conditions on the adopted son which would diminish the value of the ancestral estate in the hands of the adopted son for the benefit of the widow's relatives. [p. 1001, col. 2.]

Per Sulaiman, J.—In such a case, however, the adopted son, if of age, would not be prevented from undertaking a liability upon himself for consideration. He would be bound by his agreement not because the widow has power to impose such conditions on him before adopting him but because he has himself entered into an agreement in lieu of consideration. The binding force of the agreement would be derived not from the authority of the widow to impose such conditions but from the act of the adopted son himself. [p. 1003, col. 2.]

Although under the Contract Act it is not necessary that the consideration for an agreement should move from the promisee himself, it is nevertheless necessary under s. 2 of the Act that the proposal should be made to the promisee and the latter should signify his assent thereto. Therefore, a stranger cannot enforce a contract to which he was himself no party, unless the agreement amounts to a family arrangement or creates a trust or creates a charge. [p. 1005, col. 1.]

A family arrangement is an arrangement arrived at between the members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims where there is uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute being composed by a settlement based upon the acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a bona fide dispute which has to be settled by a private family settlement without having recourse to law. The mere fact that the agreement is entered into by persons who are relations of each other does not make such an agreement a family settlement so as to be binding on persons who are not even parties thereto. [p. 1005, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Hindu widow at the time of making an adoption to her deceased husband executed a deed reciting the fact that she was about to make the adoption and stating that the adopted son would pay a certain sum of money to a person named by her and that if the money was not paid the latter would be entitled to obtain payment through Court by causing the property of the widow to be sold at auction or by any other way he liked. The adopted son also executed an agreement binding himself to abide by all the conditions specified in the deed executed by the widow :

Held, (1) that there was no trust created in favour of the nominee of the widow inasmuch as no money belonging to the widow had been expressly entrusted to the adopted son for the purpose of payment to her nominee ; [p. 1005, col. 2.]

(2) that there was no charge created on any portion of the estate of the widow's deceased husband inasmuch as the widow had no power to create a charge which would enure for the benefit of the chargeholder beyond her lifetime and the adopted son had merely accepted the condition laid down in the deed but had not himself purported to create any charge on the estate ; [p. 1006, cols. 1 & 2.]

(3) that, therefore, it was not open to the nominee, who was himself a stranger to the arrangement, to sue the adopted son for the recovery of the sum mentioned in the deed. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Lindsay, (differing from that of Mr. Justice Mukerji), dated the 7th of January 1925, printed as 87 Ind. Cas. 724.
Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mears, C. J.—This was a suit by two brothers for a declaration that the defendant was liable to pay them Rs. 15,000 within 15 years from the 14th of December 1918 in accordance with the terms of two documents of the 12th of December 1918 and the 14th of December 1918 respectively. There was a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Lal Gopal Mukerji, with the result that this case has come before us for decision.

About the year 1912 one Dalip Singh died childless, leaving a widow Musammatt Manohri. He was a Vaish Jain Agarwal. The case as put by the plaintiffs is that Musammatt Manohri had been given an express authority to adopt, and shortly before or on the 27th of October 1918—that is some six years after her husband's death she agreed to adopt the plaintiff, a man of full age, provided he would consent to pay according to her directions sums inter alia amounting to Rs. 20,000 and an annuity of Rs. 360 a year to a certain person. The defendant was a penniless man, and these sums of money were to be paid out of the estate which would come to him on adoption; in particular the Rs. 15,000 which is the subject-matter of this suit, was a sum which the defendant had to agree to pay to Musammatt Manohri's brother as a condition of being adopted. On the 12th of December 1918 the lady executed a document, which has been termed a Will, and a deed of adoption, and on the 14th of December the defendant executed a document, which in effect promised to carry out the conditions that she had imposed. The action has been brought now, because it is said that the defendant is making away with what undoubtedly was the ancestral property of Dalip Singh and the plaint contains a prayer also for relief against the property on the ground of an alleged charge contained in the document of the 14th of December.

The defendant attacks the validity of the transaction on a number of grounds. His principal contention is that he is entitled to the benefit of the adoption freed from any conditions. He says that the conditions were not such as a Hindu widow could legally impose. It has been conceded by the defendant that a Hindu widow when making an adoption can impose stipulations which are reasonable and proper for her own protection, and that agreements of this character for maintenance, and at times management of the property have been upheld. But it is urged that there is no case in which a widow has been permitted to benefit her own relatives and friends and has bargained for money or property to be made over to them as a condition of the adoption. The plaintiff contended that as regards a Vaish Jain Agarwal, there is a custom by which the widow could impose any conditions she liked. But custom was not pleaded nor was any evidence given of it.

I think that the case must be governed by the general principles of law applicable to Hindu widows, and that this Court would be setting up a dangerous precedent if it accepted the view that Musammatt Manohri had power to make any bargain which was pleasing to her; advantageous to her relatives, and detrimental to the ancestral estate. The ancestral property left by Dalip Singh is probably in the neighbourhood of two lakhs in value. The defendant contends that the lady had unlimited and unfettered power and could have made such an agreement as would have given a few thousand or a few hundred rupees only to the man whom she was adopting to her husband, and that she could have required in return for the adoption the payment over by the son of practically the whole balance of the estate to her nominees.

I am of opinion that a Hindu widow, be she a Jain or of any other caste, possesses no such power, and that though she was negotiating with a man of full age, she was not entitled in law to propose any arrangement which could diminish the value of the ancestral estate in favour of her relatives.

Mr. Justice Lindsay has referred to the case of Venkappa v. Fakirgowda (1), and I am in agreement with his view that this was an unlawful bargain for the widow to make. I am also in complete agreement with him on the other matters of argument which arose during the hearing of the case. The objection as to the legality of the conditions sought to be imposed in the adoption is, in my opinion, fatal to the claim of the plaintiffs. I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree that the suit should be dismissed. The case put forward by the plaintiffs in the plaint was that Musammatt Manohri was the full owner in possession of considerable estate, that on the 12th of December 1918 she executed a deed of adoption stating that she was adopting the defendant as her son and bequeathed to him all her property with certain conditions, that on the 14th of December 1918, the defendant executed a deed of agreement by which he accepted and adopted all the conditions and provisions laid down in the deed of adoption, that among the conditions there was a provision that the defendant would pay Rs. 15,000 to the plaintiffs, that although since Musammatt Manohri's death the defendant is in possession of all the property and is bound by all the conditions he is denying his liability to pay the said amount. The plaintiffs asked for a declaration (1) that the defendant was liable to pay them the aforesaid sum and (2) that the payment of that amount was a charge on the entire estate of the deceased lady. In the plaint there was no suggestion that at any time prior to the 14th of December 1918 the defendant had agreed to abide by the conditions sought to be imposed by Musammatt Manohri. The defendant in his written statement denied that Musammatt Manohri was the absolute owner of the estate and inter alia pleaded that the adoption having taken place sometime before the 12th of December 1918, the agreement was not binding upon him; in fact he pleaded that it had been obtained under unlawful pressure. As the application of the 14th of June 1921 shows, the plaintiffs were fully aware of the fact that the defendant was denying that any condition was agreed upon prior to or at the time of the adoption. The parties, however, understood that the issues framed by the Court were comprehensive enough to include this dispute. The plaintiffs in the first instance led no oral evidence whatsoever to show that there was any agreement by the defendant at or before his adoption. The defendant, on the other hand, went into the witness-box and deposed that when he was adopted it was not settled between Musammatt Manohri and him that any money, etc., should be paid to the plaintiffs. His own brother Bano Mal also deposed that Musammatt Manohri had not laid down any condition up to the time of the adoption. Two more witnesses Jia Lal and Puna Mal were also produced by the defendant to prove that there had been no settlement at the time of the adoption. After the defendant's evidence was closed the plaintiffs' Vakil made a statement that he would produce no evidence to the effect that at the time of the adoption or prior to it, it had been settled that the plaintiffs would be paid Rs. 15,000 but would only rely on the recital in the deed; but that by way of rebutting evidence he would produce evidence to show that the deed of agreement was not executed under unlawful pressure. He accordingly led further evidence on this last mentioned point.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the deed of agreement had not been executed under unlawful pressure. He preferred the recitals in the agreement to the defendant's oral evidence and concluded that the terms must have been agreed upon before the adoption. He accordingly held that the agreement was for consideration and the defendant was liable to pay the amount but he considered that no charge was created on the property received by the defendant. The suit was accordingly decreed in part.

Both the parties appealed to this Court. The appeal first came up before Mukerji and Dalal, JJ., who sent down issues to ascertain whether the property left by Musammatt Manohri was her absolute property or not. The findings that have been returned make it quite clear that although Musammatt Manohri was a Jain widow she had only a Hindu widow's estate in the property because this was the ancestral property of her husband and not his self-acquired property. No objections were filed to this finding and this position is now accepted.

The appeal came up for final disposal before Lindsay and Mukerji, JJ., and the two learned Judges differed, hence this appeal under the Letters Patent.

On the question of fact as to whether the conditions had been offered and accepted at or before the time of the adoption Mukerji, J., in view of the recitals contained in the defendant's agreement and the probabilities of the case was satisfied that the condition must have been arrived at before the adoption. Lindsay, J., although thinking that the matter was not so clear to him, did not feel prepared to differ as regards this matter. In the Will executed by Musammatt Manohri there is no reference to any condition having been agreed to at the time of the adoption. In fact she purports to impose this condition as if she were an absolute owner of the property entitled to lay down this condition. In the agreement the relative words are "my adoption is (or more favourably to the plaintiffs, has been) held conditional to my accepting the stipulation aforesaid". There is no clear recital in the deed that the adoption was held conditional before the adoption took place. This ambiguous recital is the solitary piece of evidence in favour of the plaintiffs and is supposed to outweigh the oral evidence of the defendant. I must say that I share the reluctance of Lindsay, J., as the matter is not so clear to me also. I am, however, loath to take a different view of the interpretation at this stage and must assume that the condition was agreed upon by the defendant before his adoption took place.

Lindsay, J., was of opinion that the agreement to pay Rs. 15,000 to the brothers of the adoptive mother was contrary to Hindu Law and illegal and unenforceable. He further held that this agreement did not amount to a family arrangement, nor under the agreement any trust was created in favour of the plaintiffs, nor was any charge created on the property. He accordingly held that the plaintiffs not being parties to the contract were not entitled to enforce it. On the other hand Mukerji, J., did not consider that such an agreement was contrary to Hindu Law and, therefore, illegal or unenforceable, but held that the arrangement amounted to a family settlement, that it created a trust in favour of the plaintiffs and also a charge on the property and was accordingly binding on the defendant.

It has not been contended before us that apart from any prohibitions of Hindu Law the objection to the validity of the agreement can be founded on the ground that it is opposed to public policy. It is very difficult to extend the doctrine of public policy beyond the classes of cases already covered by it. Courts are reluctant to invent new heads. It is, however, contended that stipulations made by the widow before adoption are in the nature of a bargaining which is contrary to Hindu Law. It is pointed out that if such an arrangement were to be accepted by Courts, agreements would be encouraged which would be detrimental to her husband's estate. On the other hand if a widow cannot be allowed to make any arrangement she may very often refuse to make an adoption and thus fail to carry out the desire of her husband. No doubt the adopted son does not claim through the widow but in his own right which comes into existence as soon as he is adopted. It is, therefore, quite reasonable to assume prima facie that a Hindu widow can have no power to impose conditions on the estate which is going to vest in the adopted son. It is not disputed that a Hindu father can impose conditions before the adoption but the position of a Hindu widow with limited powers is certainly quite different as she does not possess a full disposing power over the estate.

In cases where a minor son is given in adoption by his natural guardian and the latter enters into an agreement with the widow curtailing the estate, it is a vexed question of law how far that agreement would be binding on the minor son. The general opinion seems to be that an agreement so far as it can be considered to be reasonable would be binding on the son because it was entered into by his natural guardian for his benefit and considered necessary by the guardian at the time. In the present case the defendant was admittedly of age when he himself entered into the agreement. He must be deemed to have been in the best position to know his own interest and his benefit. He entered into the agreement with open eyes apparently knowing full well that but for such an agreement he would not be adopted and would not inherit this valuable estate. Under such circumstances the question whether it was or was not reasonable, does not arise. Unless the agreement can be said to be void either for want of consideration or as being opposed to Hindu Law, it would be binding on him in its entirety. The question whether it can be enforced by third parties will be considered hereafter.

To my mind the question whether a widow can impose conditions on the boy to be adopted or the estate is entirely different from the question whether the adopted son can or cannot himself undertake a liability in lieu of consideration. I am prepared to concede that a Hindu widow as a general rule has no power to impose conditions. At the same time it has been held in several cases that an agreement with the natural guardian of the boy before adoption for allowing the widow to remain in possession of the entire estate for her lifetime is binding on him. Similarly other reasonable agreements under which the adopted son's powers were curtailed have also been upheld. Cases where such agreements have not been upheld are based not on a supposed ground that such agreements are illegal and opposed to Hindu Law but rather on the ground of want of authority in the widow to impose conditions on a minor son which are not for his benefit. I would, therefore, feel great difficulty in holding that agreements of this kind are prohibited by the Hindu Law so as to make them absolutely illegal and void.

Even if, therefore, the widow has no power to impose conditions on her would-be adopted son, I see no good ground for holding that the adopted son, if of age, is prevented from undertaking a liability on himself for consideration. The adopted son would be bound by his agreement not because the widow had power to impose such condition on him before adopting him but because he himself entered into an agreement in lieu of consideration. The defendant is bound not by the authority of the widow but by his own agreement.

It is now well settled by the Full Bench case of Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini Rawanji Maharaj (2) that a reversioner if he gives his consent to an alienation by a Hindu widow would be estopped from challenging it if he himself succeeds to the estate on her death. The position of the adopted son is somewhat analogous and I fail to see why he also should not be estopped from challenging his own agreement after the property becomes vested in him.

The widow though directed by her husband to adopt cannot be legally compelled to adopt a boy. The adoption to some extent is a matter of her discretion, and this is specially so when the boy to be adopted has not been named. In the case of Jain widows they can adopt even without an express authority of the husband [vide the case of Manohar Lal v. Banarsi Das (3).] Her agreeing to adopt the defendant is certainly an act which was a good consideration for the agreement. Under s. 2, sub-cl. (d) of the Indian Contract Act, when at the desire of the promisor the promisee or any other person has done or abstained from doing or does or abstains from doing or promises to do or to abstain from doing, something such act or abstinence or promise is called a consideration for the promise. It would be difficult to deny that the act of the widow in selecting the defendant and not selecting any other person to be adopted and adopting him did not amount to a consideration within the meaning of the section. It might have been her moral or even religious duty (which is doubtful in the case of a Jain widow), to adopt a boy, but it was certainly not her legal duty to adopt one and much less to adopt the defendant. Her agreement to adopt him was, therefore, a good consideration, and it is not possible to hold that the deed of agreement executed by the defendant was void for want of consideration.

That agreements entered into at the time of adoption are neither absolutely illegal nor without consideration has been assumed in several decided cases; vide the cases of Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (4) and Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Taty Genu Pawar (5). The Privy Council case of Ramasami v. Venkata Ramaiyan (6) is, in my opinion, a clear authority that agreements curtailing the rights of the adopted son are not absolutely void but in the case of a minor merely voidable, and capable of ratification on his attaining majority. In that case the natural father of the boy had entered into an agreement with the adoptive mother that the boy would have no concern with certain properties previously sold and disposed away by the widow and that he would inherit only certain properties described by name which were in the possession of the widow. There was a clear covenant that 'whether or not there are more properties neither the natural guardian nor his begotten son, who is the adopted son, would have any sort of claim or title to the same or to their enjoyment.' When the boy attained majority he ratified this agreement but subsequently went back upon it and sued to set aside all the alienations and to claim all the properties. On the facts their Lordships felt themselves bound to assume that the father consented to give his son in adoption on the understanding that he would inherit only about one-third of the late husband's property being aware, or not caring to enquire, how the remaining two-thirds had been disposed of. The High Court had held that the agreement was void in law in so far as it relinquished on behalf of the plaintiff his right to any part of the property which had been his adoptive father's. Their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked "How far the natural father can by agreement before the adoption renounce all or part of his son's rights, so as to bind that son when he becomes of age, is also a question not altogether unattended with difficulty; although the case of Chitko Raghunath Raja Diksh v. Janaki (7) certainly decides that an agreement on the part of the father that his son's interest shall be postponed to the life-interest of the widow is valid and binding. In this case their Lordships think it enough to decide that the agreement of the natural father which has been set out was not void, but was, at the least capable of ratification when his son became of age. The main question in the case when his son became of age is, therefore, reduced to this, whether the son did or did not validly ratify it". Accordingly when their Lordships found that the plaintiff had on attaining majority ratified the agreement they held that he was bound by it. This, in my opinion, is a clear pronouncement in support of the view of Mukerji, J., that agreements of this nature are neither prohibited by Hindu Law nor are without consideration.

If a minor is to be bound by an agreement entered into by his natural father and subsequently ratified by him when he comes of age, there is no good ground for holding that an adult adopted son cannot be bound by an agreement into which he enters with open eyes. I would, therefore, hold that the agreement executed by the defendant was neither illegal nor without consideration.

Although under the Indian Contract Act it is not necessary that the consideration should move from the promisee himself, it is nevertheless necessary under s. 2 that the proposal should be made to the promisee and the latter should signify his assent thereto. It would, therefore, follow that a stranger cannot enforce a contract to which he was himself no party. This point is completely covered by the case of Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (8) affirming a decision of this Court where a person for whose payment money was left in the hands of a transferee was held not entitled to maintain a suit against the transferee. Mukerji, J., has conceded that a stranger cannot enforce an agreement to which he was not a party unless the agreement amounted to a family arrangement or created a trust or created a charge.

In support of his view that this transaction amounted to family arrangement he has relied on the case of Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tataya Genu Powar (5). That case is certainly an authority for that view. The facts of the present case also are very similar to the facts of that case. In both cases the adopted son was of age at the time of the agreement. But with great respect I am unable to agree that the correct basis of decision was the existence of a family settlement. Lindsay, J., has correctly pointed out that a family arrangement is one arrived at by members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims, cases in which there being uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute being composed by a settlement based upon the acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a bona fide dispute which has to be settled by a private family settlement without having recourse to law. In the present case there could be no dispute whatsoever. The widow particularly as she was a Jain widow, had a full discretion both in the matter of adoption and in the choice of the boy. The brothers of the widow had no claim to the estate and no right to be paid an amount. There was, therefore, no dispute which required a settlement and in fact none was settled. The mere fact that an agreement is entered into by persons who are relations of each other does not make such an agreement a family settlement so as to be binding on persons who are not even parties thereto. Section 23, sub-cl. (c) under which a compromise of doubtful rights between the members of the same family can be specifically enforced by any person beneficially entitled thereunder cannot, therefore, be applicable.

I also agree with Lindsay, J., that the compromise to pay Rs. 15,000 to the widow's brother did not amount to a trust. The defendant merely declared that he should abide by all the conditions laid down in the Will of Musammatt Manohri. His agreement at best amounted to a promise to pay Rs. 15,000 to the brothers within 15 years. There was no money belonging to the widow over which she had created a trust, nor was the possession of the defendant that of a trustee holding trust property for the benefit of the plaintiffs. It was merely an agreement to pay them the said amount and by this agreement he constituted himself a promisor liable to pay them that amount. In the case of Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (8), the money which had been left in the hands of the transferee was money actually belonging to the mortgagor and had been expressly left in the hands of the transferee for payment to a named creditor. Even then their Lordships did not consider that such a transaction created a trust in favour of the person to whom it was to be paid. In the present case there was not even any money in existence at the time of the agreement and such money certainly did not belong to the widow who can be said to have created a trust in favour of the plaintiffs. Mukerji, J., has considered that it falls within the definition of a trust as given in s. 3 of the Indian Trusts Act (Act II of 1852) which says that a trust is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner, (8) 13 Ind. Cas. 304; 34 A. 63; 16 O. W. N. 97; 11 M. L. T. 6; 9 A. L. J. 37; (1912) M. W. N. 32; 15 O. L. J. 68; 14 Bom. L. R. 1; 21 M. L. J. 1158; 39 I. A. 7 (P. O.).

But here before the adoption the widow was not the absolute owner of the property capable of creating any trust, nor had the property then vested in the defendant. If Rs. 15,000 are to be treated as trust money, is the obligation annexed to the ownership of it or the estate? If the widow had no power to impose an obligation on the adopted son she could not annex an obligation to the ownership of the property which was to vest in Data Ram. It is, therefore, very difficult to hold either that the money was a trust money or that Data Ram was a trustee or that the plaintiffs were beneficiaries of the trust.

Lindsay, J., has agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the agreement does not create a charge on the immoveable property which vested in the defendant. The deed does not purport to create any such charge expressly. It specifies no property by name. It is called an ikrarnama (agreement) and is written on a stamp paper of the value of eight annas. Had it been intended to create a charge on some property it would under s. 2, sub-cl. (17) of the Indian Stamp Act have been treated as a mortgage-deed and a stamp paper of much larger value would have been used. It merely records the agreement of the defendant that he would abide by all the conditions specified in the deed dated the 12th of December 1918, as well as in the Will dated the 13th of December 1918. The last document has not been produced by either party. As the first document is merely a Will the last one was necessarily the more important one if it in any way purported to modify the provisions of the former. In the agreement there is no express mention that the persons to whom the money is to be paid would have a right to enforce a charge or realise their money by sale of any specified property. All that it says is that they may have the terms enforced by the Court. It is true that in the Will to which the deed refers there is a provision that in the case of non-payment the payees will have power to realise the amount through a competent Court by causing the property of the executant (Musammât Manohri Bibi) to be sold at auction or by any other way they like. I have already mentioned that Musammât Manohri was not the owner of the property capable of creating a charge which would enure for the benefit of the charge-holder beyond her lifetime. It was she who purported to create a charge but in view of her inability to do so her doing so could not be efficacious. Data Ram accepted the conditions but did not himself purport to create any charge on his estate. Furthermore, it is the plaintiffs' case that the oral agreement was completed before the adoption was made. If that is so then at that time the property had not even vested in Data Ram. As to the document executed by Musammât Manohri it was in the nature of a Will which did not come into effect on the date of the agreement by Data Ram but would be operative after Musammât Manohri's death. A charge is defined in s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act as being created on immoveable property of one person when that property is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage. It is very difficult to say that the defendant created a charge on his estate and made it security for the payment of the promised amount.

In this view of the matter it is unnecessary for me to express any definite opinion whether, when a charge is created on property in favour of a third person and the contract is not even a settlement on marriage or a compromise of doubtful rights between the members of the same family as referred to in s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act, the beneficiary even though a stranger to agreement, can enforce the contract.

I accordingly hold that the plaintiffs, not being a party to the contract are not entitled to enforce the agreement and their suit is liable to be dismissed with costs in all Courts.

By the Court.—The decree of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed. The result is that Letters Patent Appeal No. 39 of 1925 preferred by the defendant would be allowed and the Letters Patent Appeal No. 30 of 1925 filed by the plaintiffs dismissed. The plaintiffs will have to pay the costs of the defendant in all Courts including in this Court fees on the Higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 105, 111 (g)—Landlord and tenant—Tenant-at-will—Adverse possession, ingredients of—Limitation, commencement of.

It is possible for a tenant-at-will without first surrendering his tenancy and without effecting a new forcible entry on the land to set up a claim to hold by afflux of time so that his claim so to do may be ultimately uncontested. To such cases the period of limitation applicable is that provided in Art. 144 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and the time from which the period of limitation begins to run is the date when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

As a general rule failure to pay rent by a tenant-at-will is apt to be regarded as the starting point of limitation, because that in itself amounts to a forfeiture of the tenure and if the tenant refuses to pay the rent the landlord has unmistakably notice and an opportunity if he wishes to eject the tenant and if he does not eject the tenant and allows him to remain in possession limitation begins to run against him. Mere failure, however, on the part of the landlord to exact from the tenant the rent due would not enable the tenant to assert that he was holding adversely. In a case in which the tenant is by virtue of his agreement with the landlord not liable to pay any rent, the mere failure to pay rent cannot form the starting point of limitation. [p. 1008, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fact that a tenant-at-will has made structural alterations on the land of his tenancy to the knowledge of the owner does not convert the possession of the tenant into adverse possession, inasmuch as such construction or alteration by even a tenant-at-will is not necessarily wholly incompatible with his position as a tenant. [p. 1008, col. 2.]

The entry of the name of a tenant as owner of the land of his tenancy in the Municipal records is not necessarily by itself such a proceeding as to amount to clear manifestation of the intention of the tenant to set up his own title to the land. Such an entry might well be made with the permission of the landlord on grounds of convenience. [ibid.]

An assertion in a public circular, however, by a person in permissive occupation of land and not paying rent or rendering services to the landlord, to the effect that the land belongs to him amounts to an assertion of adverse title and converts his possession into adverse possession and limitation begins to run against the landlord from the date of such assertion. [p. 1008, col. 2; p. 1009, col. 1.]

Per Aston, A. J. C.—Section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to a permissive tenancy which does not fall within the purview of s. 105 of the Act. [p. 1010, col. 1.]

In the case of a monthly tenant or a tenant from year to year something more than a mere assertion of adversity would be required to determine the tenancy. Such an assertion merely gives the landlord the option to evict the tenant and the tenant must still prove some act on the part of the landlord indicating that the tenancy has been determined before he can claim that his possession was not that of a tenant but was adverse. [ibid.]

In the case of a permissive tenancy or a tenancy-at-will, however, it is an ingredient of the tenancy that it is terminable on the will either of the landlord or the tenant and in such a case the possession of the tenant becomes adverse to the landlord when he sets up a title of ownership in the property. [p. 1010, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Kennedy, J. C.—The facts as found in the present appeal are the following:—

The appellant Haji Yacub was the owner of a certain house which was divided into two parts. About the year 1890 one Haji Jan who was a Pir came from Las Bella and settled in Karachi, and entered into occupation of the house in suit which was then apparently demarcated from the rest of the building. Haji Yacub remained in possession of the other half of the building where boat accessories and fishing nets were stored. It is not ascertained precisely in what capacity Haji Jan was allowed to remain. It has been assumed all through that he was a lessee but perhaps his position is rather that of a licensee. This point, is however, not very material as the legal question would be the same in both the cases. It was set up that he had been paying rent monthly to Haji Yacub but that has been held not proved by the Trial Court and there was also an assertion by the present respondent that there had been a sale by Haji Yacub to Haji Jan Mahomed but this sale also has been held not proved. The position, therefore, of Haji Jan Mahomed at the time of his death in 1900 was that of a permissive occupant whether called a tenant-at-will or a licensee. On the death of Haji Jan Mahomed the present plaintiff Mahomed Faruq continued to be in possession of the property. By that time he was residing in the adjoining house as his own. About 1917, disputes arose between Sidik, the son of Haji Yacub, and Mahomed Faruq, son of Haji Jan Mahomed, who is the present plaintiff and Sidik took civil and criminal proceedings by which he re-gained possession of the property. It would appear that up to 1917 the possession was of Mahomed Faruq who had continued to be in possession of the plaintiff property. This was an action brought by Mahomed Faruq to re-gain possession of the property inasmuch as he had been ousted by a decree in a summary suit under the Specific Relief Act.

It would seem from the facts as found by the Trial Court that the question merely is whether by 1917, Mahomed Faruq had succeeded in obtaining title by adverse possession. There is no doubt that there is a certain amount of conflict of authorities as to what is necessary for a tenant to do in order that limitation might start against his landlord.

It seems generally admitted that it is possible for a tenant without first surrendering his tenancy and without effecting a new forcible entry on the land to set up a claim to hold by efflux of time so that his claim so to do may be ultimately uncontested. It would appear that in such cases the correct Article of the Indian Limitation Act that applies is Art. 144 and the time from which period of limitation begins to run is the date when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. That is to say, if before the bringing of the summary suit the possession of Mahomed Faruq had become adverse to Yacub and that possession had matured into a full title then inasmuch as he has been ousted by a summary decree he is entitled to lay claim to recover possession as being the person who is entitled by reason of his title to possession of property. The question, therefore, is what act was there which gave a starting point for adverse possession.

As a general rule, failure to pay rent is apt to be regarded as starting point of limitation because that in itself is forfeiture of tenure and as a general rule if a tenant refuses to pay rent the landlord has unmistakable notice and an opportunity if he wishes to eject the tenant and if he does not eject the tenant but allows the contumacious tenant to remain in possession, the limitation begins to run. But on the authorities it would appear that mere failure on the part of the landlord to exact rent due would not enable the tenant to assert that he was holding adversely. Further this contingency is not capable of arising in the present case because whether Mahomed Faruq was a mere permissive tenant or a licensee no rent was due to Haji Yacub under any agreement. Therefore, mere failure to pay rent obviously could not form the starting point of limitation. Nor again does the fact of the making of the structural alterations on the plot by plaintiff or his father to the knowledge of the owner Haji Yacub form such a point of departure, because such construction or such alteration by a tenant even a tenant-at-will is not necessarily wholly incompatible with his position as a tenant, although such action if permitted may give rise to certain equities between the landlord and the tenant but they do not amount to a notice that the tenancy is at an end.

Similarly the entry of Haji Jan Mahomed and his son as owners in the Municipal records is not necessarily by itself such a proceeding as to amount as to clear manifestation of the intention of the occupant to set up his own title. Such an entry might well be made with the permission of the real owner for convenience.

But all these things taken into consideration with another circumstance, with which I will presently deal seem to point unmistakably to the assertion of adverse title to the knowledge of the original owner. It appears that in 1904 a mortgage-decree was passed against Haji Yacub. There was an order by the Court that the house should be sold to satisfy the decree. At that point the plaintiff filed an application Ex. 6 setting up his ownership, claiming to be a purchaser. Further at the time of the auction-sale, the plaintiff circulated a notice stating that he was the owner of the land and that the judgment-debtor in that case, namely, Haji Yacub had no right in it. The result of which was that no purchasers came forth to bid for the property. It is not shown in any way that Haji Jan Mahomed was a party to the proceedings or that the objection to the order of sale was made for his benefit. The notification was certainly an intimation to Haji Yacub that the plaintiff was then claiming by title to the land. It seems to me that if such an open and public declaration communicated to the landlord is not to be held to amount to a starting point of limitation by a person in permissive occupation and not paying rent or rendering services claiming adversely to be an owner it would be impossible in these cases that limitations should ever have any effect to extinguish stale titles. It is to be observed that the Transfer of Property Act was extended to Sind on 1st January 1915, and it would be difficult to apply the provisions of s. 111, cl. (g) to circumstances which took place in 1904. In the present case there being no rent payable and no services to be rendered by the occupant what was due from the occupant to the landlord was the acknowledgment of permissive occupation and if it was repudiated the whole residue of the rights of the owner was repudiated in full and the owner could there and then have taken steps to establish his own title and to eject the occupant.

It is thus proper to take 1904 as the date from which adverse possession was made to run against Haji Yacub. That being so he is entitled to maintain a suit to re-gain the property, his dispossession of which took place in 1917. That is to say by that time the title of the present plaintiff by adverse possession was full and matured. That being so the plaintiff as found by the lower Court is entitled to recover possession.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Aston, A. J. C.—I agree. The tenancy in the present suit which arose on the death of Pir Haji Jan was not a regular tenancy within the definition contained in s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has held that the plaintiff being the heir of Pir Haji Jan, continued in possession as a permissive tenant.

Had the plaintiff been a tenant under a tenancy to which the provisions of s. 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act applied, I am of opinion on the principle a verbis legis non est recedendum that something more could have been required to terminate the tenancy than the non-payment of rent by the tenant, or the renunciation by the tenant of his character as such, by setting up an adverse title. Section 111 (g) clearly provides that in order to terminate the tenancy there must also be some act on the part of the lessor or his transferee showing his intention to determine the lease. See the case of Srinivasa Ayyar v. Muthusami Pillai (1), where it was held that a tenant repudiating the title of his landlord becomes liable to immediate eviction but that until the landlord indicates that he intends to exercise his option the tenancy subsists. See also Seshamma Shettati v. Chickoya Hegade (2), where it was held that a person who has lawfully come into possession of land as tenant from year to year or for a term of years cannot, by setting up during the continuance of such relation any title adverse to the landlord inconsistent with the legal relation between them and that, however notoriously and to the knowledge of the other party, acquire by the operation of the law of limitation title as owner or any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession. This ruling was followed in Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Mukku Narasaya (3): see also the case of Ittapan v. Manavikrama (4), where Shepherd, J., pointed out that the landlord is not bound to insist on a forfeiture when the occasion arises and unless he selects to do so the tenancy remains unaffected. The ruling of the Bombay High Court in Maidin Saiba v. Nagapa (5) is clearly distinguishable, for there the tenant (so-called) was a trespasser, who was setting up a pretended tenancy which the landlord denied throughout the case, therefore, (sic) was to be regarded as one against a trespasser. Budesab v. Hanmanta (6) does not conflict with the Madras decisions above referred to, for there the landlord did an act showing his intention to determine the tenancy, viz., by filing a suit. The case of Thakore Fatesinghji v. Bamanji Dalal (7) is also distinguishable for there the tenant agreed to go into possession under rules, which would give him a permanent tenancy and ever since he went into possession, he claimed to be in as a permanent tenant and he was in adverse possession as a permanent tenant for more than the statutory period. In Beni Prashad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (8), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the possession of a tenant for life is not rendered adverse within the meaning of Act XV of 1877 by a notice from the tenant that he claims to be holding on a perpetual or a hereditary tenure. Madhava v. Narayana (9) is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case for in that case as in Maidin Saiba v. Nagapa (5), there was no question of the defendant determining a tenancy by an adverse claim. He entered into possession under a kanom alleged to be valid. Hutchens, J., there held that they were either trespassers or kanamdars and that their possession for the statutory period in either capacity adversely to the family was as bar to their ejection. On the other hand the Bombay High Court in Rambhat v. Bababhat (10) held that the mere fact that a tenant treated land as khalsat and paid assessment to Government and no rent to plaintiff for 26 years the plaintiff merely protesting at the surrender to Government could not affect the relations of landlord and tenant which admittedly existed in 1863.

Section 111 (g), however, has no application to the facts of the present case for the tenancy was not a tenancy within the meaning of s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, but a mere permissive tenancy.

The contention that s. 111 (g) did not apply because the provisions of that section had not been applied to Sind, until the year 1915 was not pressed by Mr. Castillino. No doubt the express provisions of the section would not be applicable but the section as pointed out by the Madras High Court in Srinivasa Ayyar v. Mithusami Pillai (1) contains an exposition of the general law which is applicable.

Had it been established that the plaintiff was a monthly tenant or a tenant from year to year in 1904 when by his application dated 18th July 1904, and by public notice issued by his Pleaders he claimed the property as his own, I would have held that the tenancy was not determined but that the plaintiff's acts merely gave the landlord the option to evict him and that the plaintiff had still to prove some act on the part of the landlord indicating an intention to exercise his option before he could claim that his possession was not that of a tenant but adverse.

But the plaintiff was a mere permissive tenant or tenant-at-will. Now it is an ingredient of a tenancy-at-will that the tenancy is terminable at the will of either the landlord or the tenant : see Halsbury's

Laws of England, Vol. XVIII, page 484, para. 899.

In Ittapan v. Manavikrama (4), it was conceded by Shepherd, J., that in the case of a tenancy-at-will disobedience on the part of the tenant might afford evidence of the determination of the tenancy.

In Krishnaji Ramchandra v. Antaji Pandurang (11) the Bombay High Court held that the tenancy of the defendants whose possession was permissive became adverse when they set up a title of ownership in the property. In Gobind Lall Seal v. Debendranath Mullick (12), where the facts were somewhat similar to those in the present case, the Calcutta High Court held that Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applied to cases where occupation was permissive and that limitation would operate from the time when possession first became adverse.

I am of opinion in the circumstances that the suit was rightly decided by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner and agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Panton, J.—The only question for decision in these second appeals is whether the first part of s. 1 of Regulation XI of 1825 applies to land forming from the bed of a small and shallow river where bed is recognized as the property of an individual.

The learned Munsif found that it did; in appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has expressed the contrary opinion.

The form in which the question presents itself in the present case is that the appellants are the owners of occupancy holdings to which holdings the disputed land has accreted: the respondents are lessees of the zemindar to whom the bed of the river belongs. It is important to notice that the appellants do not pretend that the land in dispute was at any time part of their holdings before its recent emergence. The principle, then which applies to the case is the same as that which would apply in a contest between the "recognized proprietor" of the bed of the river on the one hand and a different riparian proprietor.

For the answer to the present question it is not really necessary to go further than to the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1). Bearing in mind what was then said, it is hard to see why a zemindar who holds the bed of a river embordered by any Subordinate tenure should be deprived of the full enjoyment of his property when the land in question emerges from the river.

The distinction in respect to the application of Regulation XI of 1825 between small and shallow rivers, such as are dealt with in s. 4 and rivers not small and shallow where the ownership of individuals in the beds has not been recognized was pointed out in Chunder Monee Chawdhurani v. Sreemuttee Chowdhurani (2). In Jugdish Chunder Biswas v. Chowdhury Zuhoorul Huq (3), Markby, J., observed: "If it be decided that it 'the bed of a river' was the property of a private individual.....then there is an end of the matter & consequently in that case the Regulation XI of 1825 has no application at all." The same view was expressed by Holmwood and Chapman, JJ., in Ramjan Ali v. Maharam Ali Khondkar (4).

But the latter decision was dissented from by Fletcher, J., (Huda, J., concurring) in Gobinda Hota v. Kristapada Singha Babu (5). With all respect to the learned Judges we are not, however, pressed by this decision. The earlier cases I have mentioned were not referred to and it proceeded upon the footing that the decision in Ramjan Ali v. Maharam Ali Khondkar (4) was opposed to the view taken by a Full Bench of this Court in Gourhari Kaiburto v. Bhola Kaiburto (6). But there is nothing in the report to indicate that the latter case related to land formed in a "small and shallow river", nor does this condition appear to have been present in any of the earlier decisions the correctness of which was affirmed. The judgment proceeds upon the assumption that Regulation XI of 1825 applied to the land in suit and on that assumption decided that an occupancy raiyyat was entitled to share in the benefits which s. (1) provides. It does not purport to decide to what land the Regulation does or does not apply.

In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and these appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

tion of absolute transfer in favour of mortgagee—
Burden of proof.

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act cannot be pleaded in defence to a suit to recover possession of mortgaged property unless the person pleading it has had 12 years' possession of the property in suit. The Article refers to cases in which the subsequent transfer has been with possession and applies only to suits to recover possession of immoveable property. [p. 1083, col. 2.]

Where land is mortgaged without possession and possession of it subsequently passes to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transfer in which possession was given was an outright sale lies on the person alleging it. [p. 1014, col. 2.]

First appeal against a decree of the District Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Regular No. 20 of 1922.

Mr. Jeejeebhoy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Chari and Moore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was originally owned by two Karen Christians, Maung Aung Tha and Ma Pa Dit, who were husband and wife. In the year 1901 by registered mortgage-deed they executed a simple mortgage on the land in favour of the respondent Nadir Shah for Rs. 1,450. The mortgagors at first remained in possession of the mortgaged property, but in the year 1904, after the death of Maung Aung Tha, Ma Pa Dit made over possession of the land to Nadir Shah. On the 2nd August 1905, Nadir Shah executed a mortgage in favour of a Firm of K. A. L. T. Annamalai Chettiar. The property mortgaged consisted of altogether 18 items of which the land in suit formed one. The mortgage was without possession. On the 6th July 1906, the Chetty firm instituted a suit on this mortgage for sale of the mortgaged properties. They obtained a decree but considerable delay ensued before the decree was executed. Finally the property now in suit was sold in execution of the mortgage decree on the 13th September 1915. The purchaser at the auction sale was one V. T. A. L. Swaminathan Chettiar and the appellants A. T. R. M. M. Firm have subsequently acquired the rights of the auction-purchaser. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was filed by one M. A. M. Kasim. The plaintiff claimed that when possession of the land was made over to Nadir Shah in 1904, Nadir Shah continued to be merely a mortgagee of the land, and that the right of redemption still remained with the original owners. In the year 1912 Ma Pa Dit executed a registered deed of sale whereby she purported to sell her interest in the land to one Kya Gaing. In the year 1915 a further registered sale-deed with regard to the land was executed. In this deed Ma Pa Dit and her two sons Maung San Dwa and Maung Tun, and the purchaser of 1912 Maung Kya Gaing, are shown as vendors, and Maung Po Chet as the vendee. Subsequently Maung Po Chet has sold his rights to Kasim. The present suit was filed by Kasim for redemption of the mortgage made by Ma Pa Dit and her deceased husband in the year 1901.

The appellants contended that the land was made over outright to Nadir Shah in the year 1904, and that Ma Pa Dit, and her sons, therefore, had no rights in the land to transfer to Po Chet, and Kasim has no right to redeem. They further contend that the suit is barred by limitation. The Trial Court has found that Nadir Shah obtained possession as a mortgagee and not as an outright purchaser and that the suit is not barred by limitation. Kasim has been given a decree for redemption on the payment of Rs. 2,755.

The appellants attack this decree mainly on two grounds. They contend that the suit is barred by limitation, and that, if not so barred, the finding on fact by the Trial Court ought to have been that the land was made over to Nadir Shah outright in the year 1904.

The persons from whom it is now sought to redeem the land are not the original mortgagees, and it is contended that Art. 134 of the Limitation Act is applicable, and that the period of limitation begins to run from the date of the mortgage by Nadir Shah to the K. A. T. L. Firm, that is from the year 1905. If this contention is correct then the suit is clearly barred by limitation. There was at one time some doubt as to whether Art. 134 applied to a case where, as in the present case, the subsequent transfer was by way of mortgage and not by way of sale. But these doubts were set at rest by the amendment of the Article which was made in 1908. As the Article now reads it is worded "property..... afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for valuable consideration," and these words are, in our opinion, clearly wide enough to include a transfer by way of mortgage. If the mortgage in 1905 had been a mortgage with possession, there would have been no difficulty in the matter, and the suit which was filed on the 3rd April 1922, would clearly have been barred by limitation.

But possession was not given in 1905, and Nadir Shah appears to have remained in possession until 1915. The question for decision is, therefore, whether Art. 134 bars the bringing of a suit in a case in which the transfer of possession to the defendant was made less than 12 years before the suit, but the original transfer by way of mortgage to his predecessor-in-interest was made more than 12 years before. The exact meaning of the Article has been the subject of discussion in a number of reported cases of the High Courts in India. In the case of Ramachandra Vithal Rajadhiksh v. Sheikh Mohidin (1), it was held that Art. 134 applied only to cases where there had been a transfer of possession, and that the transferee could claim the benefit of the Law of Limitation only when he had enjoyed 12 years' possession. A number of cases were referred to in which the Article had been held applicable, and in all those cases the purchasers or mortgagees had had possession. In the case of Hussaini Khanam v. Hussain Khan (2), a Bench of the Allahabad High Court stated that they were disposed to think that the Article was applicable only to cases in which a purchaser whether his purchase be absolute or merely sub modo, has obtained and held possession for 12 years or upwards. This expression of opinion was an obiter dictum as it was held that in the case in question, possession for 12 years had been made out. The whole question was discussed at length by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras consisting of five Judges in the case of Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (3). The learned Judges who decided the reference in that case were divided in opinion. Wallis, C. J., and Coutts-Trotter, J., were of opinion that the word transfer in Art. 134 could not be read as transfer with possession, that the Article applied whether at the time of the transfer, possession did or did not pass and that, if possession passed subsequent to the transfer, limitation began to run from the date of transfer and not from the date of possession. The other three learned Judges took a contrary view. They were all of opinion that the Article does not apply to cases where there has been a transfer without possession being taken by the transferee. Abdur Rahim, J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., were, however, of opinion that if possession did subsequently pass then the Article would apply but limitation would run from the date when the transfer was completed by delivery of possession. Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., was of opinion that in such cases the Article would have no application at all. The balance of judicial authority, therefore, appears to be in favour of the view that Art. 134 of the Limitation Act cannot be pleaded in defence unless the person pleading it has had 12 years' possession of the property in suit. The opinions of the late Chief Justice and the present Chief Justice of the High Court of Madras are entitled to great weight, but we nevertheless think that the view of the majority of the Bench of that Court which is the view taken by the High Court of Bombay and Allahabad was correct. The opinion of Wallis, C. J., is founded largely on the fact that Art. 134 is based on s. 25 of the English Real Property Act of 1834. But it seems to us that if the three columns of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act be read together, and the other provisions of the same Act whereby title can be acquired by 12 years' adverse possession are considered, the only reasonable interpretation of the Article, as it stands, is that it refers to cases in which the subsequent transfer has been with possession. The Article applies only in suits to recover possession of immoveable property. It would obviously not apply to a suit for the redemption of a usufructuary mortgage brought against the original mortgagee. A suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage from the original mortgagee could not, in our opinion, be a suit within the meaning of Art. 134 of the Act. Such a suit would be founded on the original contract of mortgage between the mortgagor and mortgagee, and as between them it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature that the mortgagee should be able to shorten the period of limitation by the mere process of creating a charge of mortgage of his rights in favour of some third person. The Article can in such a case be applicable only when the suit in question is being brought against the subsequent transferee. But it is obviously a sine qua non that before such a suit could be brought against the subsequent transferee, that transferee must be in possession. A mere transfer of certain mortgage rights in the land without delivery of possession can give no right of suit whatever under this section, nor in such a case would the original mortgagor have any right of suit against the subsequent transferee. And it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature to provide a period of limitation for suits which do not lie. The result of such an interpretation of the law would be to give no remedy whatever to a mortgagor who had mortgaged his land with possession when his mortgagee created a non-usufructuary mortgage of his rights, and then more than 12 years later delivered possession of the land to the person in whose favour he had created the non-usufructuary mortgage. So long as the second mortgage was non-usufructuary, the original mortgagor would have no right of suit whatever against the subsequent transferee and when his right of suit against him did arise it would already be barred by limitation. We find it impossible to hold that the Legislature intended this to be the case. Nor does it appear to us that it is an undue extension of the wording of the Article to hold that in the case of a subsequent mortgage by the original usufructuary mortgagee, the Article only applies when there has been actual delivery of possession. The Article applies to a suit to "recover possession of immoveable property . . . mortgaged, and afterwards transferred by the mortgagee for a valuable consideration." It appears to us reasonable to hold that a transfer in such a case means a transfer of such a nature that the original mortgagor cannot enforce his rights to the land against the original mortgagee. A subsequent non-usufructuary mortgage by the original mortgagee to a third person would clearly not have this effect. It would be a transfer of certain rights of the mortgagee, but would not be a transfer in any way affecting the original rights of the owner of the land and would give him no right of action against the third person. We are of opinion that the mere mortgage of his own rights in the land by Nadir Shah in 1905 was not a transfer of the property within the meaning of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act and that the present suit was not, therefore, barred by limitation.

There remains for decision the question whether the transfer to Nadir Shah in 1904 was an outright transfer or merely a mortgage. It was held in the case of Ma Dun v. Lu

O (4), that when land is mortgaged without possession and possession subsequently passes to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transfer in which possession was given was an outright sale lay on the person alleging it. The burden of proof in this case, therefore, in the first instance lies on the appellants. But in considering whether that burden has been discharged all the circumstances of the case must be borne in mind including the conduct of the parties. Unfortunately the original mortgagee has no further interest in the land. Shortly before the sale of the land in execution of the mortgage-decree he stated that his rights over the land were those of a mortgagee only and that he was not the absolute owner. Some stress has been laid on this fact by the learned District Judge. It is true that at the time that he made the statement he still had an interest in the property. This statement was, therefore, admissible in evidence as an admission against the present appellants. But it was by no means conclusive and in view of the circumstances in which it was made it is of very little value. There had at the time Nadir Shah made the admission been lengthy litigation between him and the decree-holder. Nadir Shah had denied the decree-holder's right to a decree, and had attempted to delay execution. And the sale did not, as a matter of fact, take place until many years after the decree had been passed in favour of the decree-holder. It does not appear that Nadir Shah really stood to lose or gain much by a finding that he was not the outright owner of the property in suit. He made the allegation at about the time that the original owner of the land was executing the sale-deed in favour of Po Chet and there is strong ground for suspecting that at the time he was acting in collusion with Ma Pa Dit and Po Chet. His statement is, therefore, of very little value. He has not himself given evidence in the present case. The appellant has called three witnesses U Aung Myat, U Lon and San Maung, who give direct evidence as to the transaction of 1904 being a sale and not a mortgage. Their evidence has been rejected as unreliable by the Trial Court and it is obvious that oral evidence of this sort after so many years is not by itself very convincing. Ma Pa Dit is dead, and her evidence has not, therefore, been procurable. But two of her sons Maung San Dwa and Maung Tun have given evidence in the case. Maung San Dwa was called as a witness for the original plaintiff, and stated definitely that his mother had made over the land outright to Nadir Shah. Maung Tun was called originally by the plaintiff but was not examined by him. He was subsequently examined as a witness for the appellant. After making two or three contradictory statements on the point he finally stated that the land had not been made over outright. It would obviously be to the interest of these two witnesses to claim that the rights of redemption still remained with their mother or with them, and the evidence of Maung San Dwa to the contrary effect is, therefore, of special value.

There is no oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff as to the terms of the transaction of 1904. The actions of Ma Pa Dit, and the persons who subsequently brought from her do, as contended on behalf of the appellants, suggest that Ma Pa Dit had, in the first instance, no real claim to the land, and that she entered into these transactions of sale speculatively. The suit for a mortgage decree was filed in 1906. But no claim of any kind appears to have been made by Ma Pa Dit until 1912. She then executed a sale-deed of the land in favour of Kya Gaing but made no mention whatever of the mortgage to Nadir Shah in that deed. This transaction appears to have been infructuous as three years later we find her executing another sale deed in conjunction with Kya Gaing for the same land in favour of Po Chet. In this deed the mortgage is mentioned. By the time the deed of 1912 was executed a decree had already been passed in favour of the Chetty firm against Nadir Shah. In the judgment in that case reference was made to the land now in dispute, and it was stated that the decree affected only the equity of redemption of that land. (This was clearly not correct. If Nadir Shah had only a limited right in the land as against Ma Pa Dit it was clearly not the equity of redemption). This entry was apparently made in the judgment on account of the fact that Nadir Shah was shown as mortgagee in the revenue maps. And it was not till after this statement appeared in the judgment that Ma Pa Dit made any claim to the land at all. She does not appear to have made any claim at all when the suit was filed. Her dealing with the land in this way at so late a stage of the proceedings does not in any way increase the probability of her having any rights left in the land. And in the present case the transaction of 1905 was not between two Burmans. It was a transaction between a Karen on the one hand and an Indian on the other. The Indian appears to have been a trader and not a cultivator, and the presumption in favour of a mortgage if it can be drawn at all must be very much weaker than in the case of a transaction between Burman cultivators. It is true that the revenue map for the year 1907 shows Nadir Shah as a mortgagee only. But that is the only fact which really tells in favour of the plaintiff, and the map of 1919-20 is in plaintiff's favour. In spite of the various sale transactions no really serious effort to enforce Ma Pa Dit's right to redeem was made until the filing of this suit in 1922. Maung Po Chet did file a suit to redeem but he subsequently withdrew it, and it was not till seven years later that the present suit was filed and Ma Pa Dit is now dead. The evidence given by the only surviving representatives of Ma Pa Dit such as it is decidedly in favour of the appellant's claim. The oral evidence brought as to the outright sale though not conclusive in itself is all that could be expected to be procurable in the circumstances. There is a clause in the original mortgage-deed of 1901 to the effect that on the failure of the mortgagor to pay principal and interest as stipulated, the mortgagee might do what he liked with the land. And the appellants or their predecessors-in-title have been in undisturbed possession for 18 years before the filing of the suit. In our opinion the circumstances all point to the transfer to Nadir Shah having been an outright transfer. It has been suggested that as Ma Pa Dit and her deceased husband were Christians, Ma Pa Dit had no right to transfer the land outright. The suggestion curiously enough was first made on behalf of the appellants. The contention was that no right to the property of the deceased U Aung Tha could pass without Letters of Administration under the provisions of s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act and that, therefore, the plaintiff has acquired no right to the property in suit. But it has been enacted by Act VII of 1901 that section 190 of the Succession Act does not apply to the cases of native Christians. There was no bar, therefore, to a transfer of title here. Ma Pa

Dit would not, as in the case of a Burman Buddhist be the sole heir of her husband. But that is not a matter of great importance, so far as the plaintiff is concerned. The right to redeem a mortgage lies with any person who has an interest in the property (s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act). The limits to the power of Ma Pa Dit would be damaging if at all rather to the appellant's than to the plaintiff's case. For the complete transfer after the death of her husband the consent of all the heirs would be necessary. But if it be believed that Ma Pa Dit made over the land outright it may safely be presumed in the circumstances that she did so as manager of the property and with the consent of the other children, her heirs. In any case as one of the original mortgagors she had the right to redeem the mortgage, and the result of her action in making over the land would be to put an end to the mortgage. Her action would, therefore, be effectual in defeating any claim the present plaintiff might have to the land. A suit for possession not based on the mortgage would clearly be barred by limitation.

We are of opinion that the mortgage on which the suit was based is no longer in existence, and that the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to a decree.

We set aside the decree of the Trial Court and pass a decree dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents with costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.

Madhavan Nair, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration that he and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are each entitled to one-fourth of the plaint schedule, moveable and immoveable properties including debts, for the recovery of the plaintiff's one-fourth share of these properties making him liable for one-fourth of the debts mentioned in Schedule D and for a declaration that certain alienations are not binding on him.

The facts of the case are not seriously disputed. The plaintiff, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with their deceased brother Bali Reddi formed members of a joint Hindu family. Jogi Reddi, the 3rd defendant, who, is the appellant before us, is the son of their sister Sanjamma, who married a Christian. On the death of his father, Jogi Reddi and his mother lived with his uncles as members of one house-hold. It is admitted that when Jogi Reddi came to live in the family he had considerable properties. All these properties were managed by his uncles along with the family properties and fresh acquisitions were made to the family properties from the income of these properties and also by the joint labours and skill of the plaintiff, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and Jogi Reddi. In course of time, Jogi Reddi though a Christian married his Hindu cousin, the daughter of the deceased Bali Reddi. This family composed of the Hindus and a Christian lived together in peace for a quarter of a century when the plaintiff demanded partition. A partition karar was, therefore, entered into between the various parties to the suit, but the attempt to divide the moveables, immoveables and the debts proving abortive, the plaintiff instituted the suit for partition which has given rise to this second appeal.

Briefly stated, the 3rd defendant's contentions were that the properties standing in his name which are admittedly large should be treated as his own properties that he should be given a share in the family properties or in any event the parties to the suit are bound by the partition arrangement entered into between them in April 1916. On these contentions the lower Appellate Court held that the partition karar being an unregistered document was inadmissible in evidence, that there is absolutely no satisfactory evidence to show that the family intended to keep the properties of Jogi Reddi separate, that all the properties were treated as the common properties of the whole family of which the 3rd defendant was a member and by a combination of those properties, and the labour and skill of all the members the family eventually became wealthy. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, gave a decree for the plaintiff substantially as asked for after declaring some of the alienations not binding on the plaintiff.

In second appeal the learned Vakil for the appellant has argued two points (1) that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding the partition karar inadmissible in evidence for want of registration; and (2) that the Subordinate Judge's finding that the plaintiff is entitled to one-fourth of the family properties is wrong in law and is not warranted by the legal character of the relationship of the parties to the suit which only shows a "partnership". The document in question is called a division settlement karar. Under this document certain properties were exclusively given to Jogi Reddi for his enjoyment and he was given one-fourth share of the debts, outstandings, and other moveables. Then a provision was made for the maintenance of Ellamma, the wife of Pedda Bali Reddi, and a land was given to Sanjeeva Reddi. The remaining properties moveables and immoveables were allotted in equal shares to the other three members. As this document creates rights in immovable property admittedly worth more than Rs. 100, it has got to be registered and as it has not been registered it cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting immovable property. It has been argued that there has been part-performance of the karar agreement but there is no evidence to support it. The Full Bench decision in Vizagapatam Sugar Development Company v. Muthurama Reddi (1) does not at all deal with the admissibility in evidence of an unregistered document requiring registration. It is no doubt true that it was held in Konduri Srinivasa Charyulu v. Gottumukkalu Venkataraju (2) that in a suit for specific performance of a contract to grant a lease, an unregistered deed containing the alleged agreement is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the contract for the breach of which the suit was brought; but this decision must be considered to be overruled by the Full Bench decision in Narayanan Chetty v. Muthiah Servi (3), the principle of which exactly applies to the argument now under consideration. In my opinion, the principle of this decision in Narayanan Chetty v. Muthiah Servi (3), is not in any way shaken by the decision of the Privy Council in Varada Pillai v. Jeervarathnammal (4). I, therefore, hold that the Courts below were right in refusing to admit this document in evidence. As regards the second point, the argument has been put in this way by the learned Vakil. The family of the kind mentioned in this case is unknown to Hindu Law. At most, it can only amount to what may be called a partnership between these various members and if so, the division of the property should be made according to the provisions of s. 253 (1) of the Indian Contract Act. If this principle is accepted, the 3rd defendant will get for his share all the properties which originally stood in his name. There are two objections to the acceptance of this view. In the first place, it is not quite clear whether the relationship of the parties comes strictly within the definition of a partnership as given in s. 239 of the Indian Contract Act. It may be that the parties in this case might have combined their properties, labour or skill, but their combination cannot be said to have gone beyond the mere stage of the co-ownership, and, even if it has, the relationship of partners is regulated by s. 253 only in the absence of any contract to the contrary. The lower Courts have found that there was no intention to keep the various properties separate and that all the properties were treated as the common property of the whole family which necessarily implied an agreement between the members that they were all to share the properties alike and appellant was a party to the agreement. Accepting this finding, I overrule this argument.

In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (2)—Reference to High Court—Application presented more than one month after date of order—Jurisdiction to make reference.

Where an application to the Commissioner of Income Tax to make a reference to the High Court under s. 66 (2) of the Income Tax Act, is made more than a month after the date of the order which has given rise to the application, the Commissioner has no jurisdiction to make the reference and a reference made by the Commissioner in such a case will not be acted upon by the High Court.

Reference made by the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, with his No. 5202, dated the 11th September 1924, for orders of the High Court.

Lala Moti Sagar, R.S., for the Petitioner.

Kunwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is a reference, under s. 66 (2) of the Income Tax Act of 1922, made by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi to this Court.

Mr. Dalip Singh takes a preliminary objection that the reference is not competent inasmuch as the application upon which it is based was presented more than a month after the order had been passed which gave rise to that application, the actual dates being the 11th of July and the 25th of August 1924, respectively. In addition to several other points the question of whether this bars the reference has also been referred by the Chief Commissioner, though he says he does not wish to press it unless it is in itself fatal.

It is clear, in our opinion, that the delay in presenting the application robs the Chief Commissioner of all jurisdiction, and, therefore, the reference made by him under s. 66 (2) was not competent. This view has been taken by a Division Bench of this Court in Civil Miscellaneous No. 497 of 1923*, [Murlidhar v. Secretary of State] and there is ample authority of the English Courts to the same effect. The Indian Income Tax Act reproduces the Law of England on this point, and we find that the preliminary objection is fatal to the determination of the reference on its merits, and we, therefore, answer the reference accordingly.

The costs of the respondent will be paid by the petitioner.

*The following is the Order of Abdul Raoof and Harrison, JJ., dated the 12th March 1924, in Civil Miscellaneous No. 497 of 1923:—

"This is an application which purports to be made under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act in consequence of an alleged refusal by the Income Tax Commissioner to refer a question of law to this Court. Whether or not there was such a refusal, the application itself under s. 66 (2) was made two months after the order of the Assistant Commissioner, dated 12th December 1923, under s. 31 of the Income Tax Act. It was, therefore, clearly barred, as is the further remedy under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act.

We dismiss the application with costs."

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 28—Contract providing for suit to be brought in one of two Courts having jurisdiction, validity of.

Where there are two Courts both of which would normally have jurisdiction to try a suit relating to a dispute arising out of a contract the parties are entitled to agree among themselves that a suit relating to such a dispute should be brought in one of those Courts and not in the other. Such an agreement does not contravene the provisions of s. 28 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the plaintiff is not thereby restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of the contract by the usual legal proceedings in the ordinary Tribunals, as the restriction is only partial. Crawley v. Luchmee Ram, 1 Agra H. C. R. 129, distinguished.

Petition, under ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Presidency Court of Small Causes, Madras, dated the 17th January 1924, in New Trial Application No. 111 of 1923, in S. C. S. No. 8979 of 1921.

Mr. K. P. Mahadeva Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Rajanatha Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition arises out of a suit instituted in the Madras Small Causes Court, and the only question raised is whether the suit can be entertained by the Madras Court.

The plaintiffs are a firm of merchants at Madras and the defendants are residents of Ahmedabad. The defendants' firm was engaged by the plaintiffs as their Adat agents for the purpose of purchasing 80 bales of Ahmedabad dhoties from the manufacturers at Ahmedabad and sending them to Madras. Exhibit I is the deed of agreement which regulated their relationships inter se. The suit is for the recovery of the amount alleged to be due to the plaintiffs in respect of the several dealings between the parties.

The defendants besides denying the plaintiffs' allegations on the merits also set up the plea that the suit should not be entertained by the Small Causes Court at Madras and that it should be instituted at Ahmedabad. They relied for this purpose on cl. 8 of Ex. I, the deed of agreement mentioned above, which runs as follows:—"In all legal disputes arising out of this contract, Ahmedabad will be understood as the place where the cause of action arose."

The learned Trial Judge interpreted the above clause to mean that the parties thereby stipulated that all suits in respect of the contract should be instituted at Ahmedabad. He held that this agreement did not offend against the provision in s. 28 of the Indian Contract Act, because no party thereto is restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of the contract, by usual legal proceedings in the ordinary Tribunals, inasmuch as the restriction is only partial. He accordingly decided that the agreement was valid and must be given effect to and that the suit should therefore, be brought in the Ahmedabad Court and in that view dismissed the suit.

On application by the plaintiffs, the Full Bench of the Small Causes Court consisting of all the three Judges considered the question again; they agreed with the Trial Judge in his interpretation of the above clause, but the majority of the Judges held that the agreement is void because it ousts the jurisdiction of the Madras Court. They, therefore, remanded the suit to the Trial Judge for enquiry as to whether the cause of action arose either in whole or in part within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Madras Court and directed him to proceed with the suit if he finds that it did so arise, or to return the plaint (under s. 19 (a) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act) for presentation to the proper Court if he holds that it did not. The defendants have filed this revision petition against the decision of the Full Bench.

In the first place, I do not think it is right to construe cl. 8 of Ex. I so as to mean that no suit in respect of the contract shall be brought in the Madras Court at all under any circumstances. Supposing, for instance, the defendants at the time of the institution of the suit happened to reside or carry on business at Madras, that clause which deals with the question as to where the cause of action shall be deemed to have arisen—even if given full effect to, could not obviously stand in the way of the suit being instituted at Madras. It is, therefore, not strictly correct to say that the agreement by itself has the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of the Madras Court. But, even assuming that it has that effect, that is to say, that the agreement means that all suits in respect of the contracts should be brought at Ahmedabad only and not at Madras, I do not think that it is void, because the Ahmedabad Court is also a Court which would normally have jurisdiction to entertain those suits. I am, of course, assuming for the purpose that part of the cause of action in this case has arisen at Madras as well, so that the Madras Court would but for such agreement have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Where there are two Courts both of which would normally have jurisdiction to try the suit, I do not see why the parties should not be allowed to agree among themselves that a suit should be brought in one of those Courts and not, in the other. Such an agreement does not, in my opinion, contravene the provision in s. 28 of the Indian Contract Act, because the plaintiff is not thereby restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of the contract by the usual legal proceedings in the ordinary Tribunals as the restriction is only partial. The case of Crawley v. Luchmee Ram (1) relied on by the Full Bench is clearly distinguishable. In that case it was held that a clause in a Bill of Lading whereby it was agreed that the questions arising on the bill should be heard by the High Court of Calcutta instead of the Court at Mirzapur which was the proper Tribunal to try the questions was void and could not be pleaded in bar of a suit brought in the Mirzapur Court. There, the Calcutta High Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit; the only Court having jurisdiction being the Mirzapur Court. The case was decided before the Indian Contract Act came into force, but, I think, the decision would be the same even under s. 28 of the Act; for, as no amount of consent by the parties would confer jurisdiction on the Calcutta High Court and as the Mirzapur Court was the only Court having jurisdiction, the agreement has the effect of absolutely restricting the parties thereto from enforcing their rights under the contract contained in the Bill of Lading by the usual legal proceedings in ordinary Tribunals. In the present case, as stated above, the agreement has not this effect.

I would, therefore, hold that the agreement between the parties embodied in cl. 8 of Ex. I is valid and must be given effect to. It is not, therefore, open to the Madras Court of Small Causes to entertain the present suit. The plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court and I direct accordingly.

The defendants will get their costs upto date.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on the 13th February 1921 for Rs. 3,000 being the price of the plaintiff's house and some building materials with interest at 10 annas per cent. per annum. The plaint alleges that the defendant took possession of the house but refused to fulfil his obligation on the note. The question argued before me is that the defendant should be allowed to give evidence of an oral condition which would obviate or suspend the obligation evidenced by the promissory note. It is argued before me that the putting of the defendant into possession of this house was a condition precedent to the arising of an obligation under the note. It is thus extremely important to find out, if it is possible to do so, from the very prolix written statement put in by the defendant, what exactly his position was at the earliest possible moment in the case. In para. 5 of his written statement he says "As the plaintiff did not find it convenient to deliver possession of the said house to the defendant, the plaintiff told the defendant that he would purchase the house of one Rajagopala Iyer and go and reside there and that thereafter he would deliver possession of his own house and the building materials to the defendant and then receive the said sale amount of Rs. 3,000 in cash and that till then he would not enforce the said note"; and again in the same paragraph; "the suit pro-note was executed and delivered to the plaintiff subject to the condition precedent, that as a condition precedent to payment of the said sale amount, etc., he should deliver possession etc.". At the end of the same paragraph: "The suit promissory note was executed on the understanding and in the belief that the plaintiff should not claim the amount under the suit note before he put the defendant in possession of the said house, bricks, etc.". Again in para. 9: "The plaintiff has not delivered possession as per contract as a condition precedent to the suit promissory note coming into operation". Paragraph 10: "The plaintiff's suit is premature". Then that is explained in para. 11: "Though the plaintiff was well aware of the fact of the defendant's preparedness to make such payment, yet without putting the defendant in possession of any such thing, the suit has been filed, etc". It seems to me that on best consideration one can give to this somewhat rambling written statement that the agreement set up was that the promissory note should not be enforced until possession was delivered. Both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that the defendant is not in law entitled to give evidence of any such oral agreement. The question is, are they right? Section 92, proviso 3 of the Indian Evidence Act would apply if what is sought to be established is a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the promissory note. Reference has been made to Ramjibun Serowgy v. Aghore Nath Chatterjee (1), where it is distinctly laid down, though by a Single Judge, that an oral agreement purporting to provide that the promise to pay on demand in a promissory note, though absolute in its terms, was not to be enforceable by suit till the happening of a particular event, i.e., that the legal obligation to perform the promise was to be postponed, is not such an agreement as falls within the proviso 3 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act and in Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Krishna (2), the learned Judges held that an oral agreement whereby plaintiff is said to have agreed that he would not present the note till certain events have happened cannot be brought within the terms of the proviso. Much stress had been laid on Ahmed Saheb Bapu Saheb Kafre v. Ubhaiya Harsi (3) not reported in the authorised series. There the question is raised as to whether the promissory note was given by way of indemnity for a contingent liability and there seems to be some doubt on the pleadings as to whether that was what the defendant had raised. But assuming it was so, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the defendant was entitled to establish his plea under proviso 3. The learned Judges in that case seem to have been in some doubt as to whether the evidence should be admitted. But I think having regard to the cases in Ramjibun Serowgy v. Oghore Nath Chatterjee (1) and Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Krishna (2), there is no doubt in my mind that the law does not allow oral evidence to be given of such an agreement under s. 92, proviso 3 of the Evidence Act. The English Law is to the same effect, as can be seen in Moseley v. Hanford (4), Rawson v. Walker (5) and Woodbridge v.

(5) (1815) 1 Stark. 361.

Spooner (6). In the latter case, the law is thus expressed; "where a promissory note, on the face of it, purported to be payable on demand, parol evidence is not admissible to show that at the time of making it, it was agreed that it should not be payable till after the decease of the maker". It is further remarkable that in this case on the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the defendant having failed in the first Court, no suggestion of this plea under proviso 3 appears. The only definite ground that is raised is ground No. 11 as to failure of consideration. It is further difficult to see that the ground has been specifically raised in the grounds of appeal to this Court, though there is a general ground under s. 92. The sale-deed which bears the same date as the promissory note further recites that the plaintiff has delivered possession of the house to the defendant. On all these grounds I am of opinion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld and that the defendant is not entitled in law to give oral evidence of this condition by which he says it was agreed to postpone the enforcement of the promissory note. The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

V. N. V. Appeal dismissed.

Dr. Muhammad Alam and Lala Shamair Chand for Mr. Abdul Qadir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By a sale-deed dated the 17th of September 1906, Musammât Bhag Bhari, widow of Ilahi Bakhsh, sold the land in suit to Abdullah and Imam Din, the former being her son-in-law and the latter a collateral. Three-fourths of the land was sold to Abdullah and 1-4th to Imam Din. The plaintiffs, who are the three sons of Imam Din, instituted a suit on the 20th of February 1920 praying for a declaration that the sale in question should not affect their reversionary rights. A pedigree table is to be found at page 32 of the printed book which shows the relationship of the various persons concerned. It appears that after Imam Din the plaintiffs are the only male reversioners of Musammât Bhag Bhari; another person alleged by the plaintiffs to be competent to sue to have the alienation set aside is one Musammât Bhagan, widow of Karim Bakhsh. This lady, it is alleged, is a preferential heir to the plaintiffs, but being old and infirm has not cared to sue. Musammât Bhag Bhari, it seems, died about seven years before the institution of the suit.

On behalf of the defendants various pleas were taken, the most important being that the plaintiffs had no right to sue because they were not born at the date of the sale. The plaintiffs claimed that they had a right to sue as a person competent to contest the alienation, e. g., Musammât Bhagan was alive at the date of the alienation. The defendants denied that Musammât Bhagan was entitled to succeed collaterally to the estate of Musammât Bhag Bhari and averred that in any case she being a female heir was not competent to sue to contest an alienation made by another female-holder of a life interest. Another plea that was taken on behalf of the defendants was that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the defendants on all these points and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have presented this appeal from the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge.

We will take the question of limitation first. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was governed by Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and that as the limitation commenced from the date of the alienation, the suit instituted on the 20th of February 1920, more than six years after the accrual of the cause of action, was clearly barred by limitation. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has attacked this finding on the ground that all the plaintiffs were minors at the date of the suit and as the limitation began on their birth, therefore, by virtue of s. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, their suit was within time. The learned Counsel on behalf of the defendants-respondents on the other hand contended that, even if it be held that the plaintiffs had a right to sue by virtue of the existence of a reversioner, the time must run from the date of the alienation, and that once time has begun to run no subsequent disability would prevent its running. He relied on s. 9 of the Indian Limitation Act. He further contended that on the face of it the suit was barred by limitation and no ground for exemption having been mentioned in the plaint it was liable to be rejected as required by O. VII, r. 11 of the C. P. C. These contentions follow the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge.

We will, therefore, proceed to examine the grounds on which the suit has been dismissed by the Court below. The learned Judge has held that the present suit which was one for declaration in respect of an alienation by a widow was governed by Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act. This proposition was not contested by the learned Counsel for the appellants. The important question is from what date the time began to run. A suit governed by Art. 120 must be brought within six years from the day when the right to sue accrues. The question then is when the plaintiffs' right to sue accrued. It will be on this question that the decision of the appeal will depend.

Section 6, Indian Limitation Act, provides that where a person entitled to institute a suit is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, he may institute the suit within the same period after the cessation of minority as would have otherwise been allowed from the time prescribed for such suit in the third column of the First Schedule. This extension is subject to a maximum of three years from the cessation of the disability by virtue of s. 8 of the same Act.

Section 9 of the Act provides that where once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue would stop it.

It would thus be observed that if in the case before us, the time began to run from the date of the alienation then by virtue of s. 9 of the Indian Limitation Act, the suit would be barred by limitation, the time having begun to run before the disability or inability of the plaintiffs to sue commenced. On the other hand, if the time began to run from the births of the respective plaintiffs as claimed by their Counsel, then s. 6 would govern the case and the suit would be within limitation.

The only authority supporting the contention of the appellants that we have been able to discover is a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court, namely, Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (1), where it was held that a minor plaintiff instituting a suit which falls under Art. 120, Second Schedule, Indian Limitation Act, is not excluded from the benefit of s. 7 merely because the right of some other person through whom he does not claim to sue, has for some reason become time-barred. It was further held that this right to sue means the right to sue of the plaintiff and the period of limitation mentioned in s. 7 means the period of limitation for the suit which the plaintiff or some one through whom he claims is entitled to institute. Section 7 referred to therein is of the Act of 1877 which is analogous to s. 6 of the present Act. This case, it might be mentioned, related to parties governed by Hindu Law and that might also be a point of distinction between this and the case before us.

A contrary view was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Challagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (2), where it was held that a suit by one reversioner to set aside an alienation by a Hindu widow is a representative suit on behalf of all the reversioners, and that all of them have but a single cause of action which arises on the date of the alienation. Therefore, if the remedy of the existing reversioners becomes barred by limitation, reversioners thereafter born are equally barred.

In Civil Appeal No. 190 of 1906, Mohan Singh v. Dewa Singh (3), a Division Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab held that the right to sue for a declaratory decree is vested in the whole body of reversioners in existence at the time of alienation jointly and severally and begins to run simultaneously against them all and no subsequent disability stops it. The Allahabad judgment referred to above was not considered to be good law, it being held that the time began to run from the date of the alienation and that by virtue of s. 9 of the Limitation Act an after-born reversioner would be barred if the ordinary period of limitation reckoned from the date of the alienation had expired.

In Umra v. Ghulam (4), the same view was expressed, it being held that time in such suits begins to run from the date of the alienation and that a reversioner born subsequent to the date of the alienation cannot avail himself of an extension of time under s. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877.

This exhausts the important case-law on the subject that we have been able to discover. In our opinion, the view of the Chief Court of the Punjab which we must follow, is the correct one and consequently the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge dismissing the plaintiffs' suit as barred by limitation must be confirmed. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender—Bona fides, finding as to.

A surrender by a Hindu widow of her estate to the nearest reversioner of her husband is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that some provision is made for the benefit of the surrenderer. [p. 1025, col. 1.]

A surrender by a Hindu widow to be valid must be bona fide and not merely a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. A finding that the transaction was not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner, does not necessarily involve the conclusion that the surrender was bona fide, since want of good faith may be evidenced by other circumstances. Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tinnevely, in I. A. No. 441 of 1919, in Compensation Reference No. 15 of 1915.

Mr. T. L. Venkatrama Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Bench which heard C.M. No. 322 of 1919, decided that the surrender by Subbammal in favour of the appellant, if bona fide, would have the effect of divesting the respondent of her right to the property. Having taken this view of the law (we are not at present concerned with deciding whether this view is correct or not), the learned Judges remanded the case for the further question being determined whether the surrender was bona fide or not. The District Judge who has heard the case has recorded a finding that the surrender was not bona fide. This finding is attacked before us in this appeal.

The effect of the learned Judge's judgment is this. Subbammal executed a surrender in favour of the appellant who was her son. As part of the arrangement, the appellant undertook to pay and did pay his sister, that is Subbammal's daughter Arumugathammal a sum of Rs. 4,000. The District Judge mainly from this fact concludes that the surrender was not made in good faith. To use his own words, "Legally this amounts to a partition of the estate between the surrenderer and surrenderee."

The first question we have to determine in this appeal is:—Does the surrender become inoperative by reason of the fact that a provision in favour of Subbammal's daughter was made. If nothing further appeared than that a sum of Rs. 4,000 was paid to Arumugathammal, we would not be disposed to hold that the surrender is not valid. It is now authoritatively settled that the mere fact that some provision is made for the benefit of the surrenderer does not render the surrender invalid: see Angamuthu Chetti v. Varatharajulu Chetti (1), Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdari Prashad Singh (2) and Sureshwar Misser v. Mahesh-rani Misrain (3). In this connection it is necessary to observe that the case put forward by the appellant was not that in fact Rs. 4,000 was paid to his sister as a part of the arrangement and that that payment would not render the settlement bad, but on the contrary he wished to maintain that a debt having been due to the lady, it was discharged by payment of Rs. 4,000 at the time of the surrender. This contention is palpably false and we do not think it is necessary to add to the reasons that have been given by the District Judge in support of his finding. The evidence of Draviyam Pillai as has been observed by the learned Judge is utterly unreliable and we cannot act upon it. The very fact that this false contention was put forward indicates to some extent that the appellant did not regard the surrender as a bona fide surrender for his desire to conceal the true facts must in part be due to his conviction that the transaction was not above board. What then are the circumstances which induce us to take the view that the surrender is not bona fide? Before dealing with this question, we shall just refer to a passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdari Prashad Singh (2) already referred to. This is how their Lordships state the law:—

"This voluntary self-effacement is sometimes referred to as a surrender, sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights; and it may be effected by any process having that effect, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property." The ultimate question, therefore, to be decided in each case, is, was the surrender bona fide or was it not? But great stress was laid by the appellant's learned Vakil upon another passage in another judgment of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Goundan v. Nachiappa Gounden (4). That passage runs thus:—

"But the surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner."

It is contended that if the Court is satisfied that the transaction is not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner, it necessarily follows that the surrender is a bona fide surrender. We cannot agree with this contention. If the transaction is a device to divide the estate the surrender is clearly not bona fide; but the converse is not necessarily true, for want of good faith may be evidenced by other circumstances. Having made these observations, let us now examine the facts of the case in order to ascertain whether the surrender was bona fide or was not. At the date of this transaction Subbammal was about 75 years old, whereas the age of the appellant was only about 55. Subbammal, her son and her daughter were then living together as members of one family. Subsequent to the surrender, it does not appear that the appellant exercised any act of exclusive ownership from which unequivocal enjoyment or possession can be inferred. Subbammal was very old and in the ordinary course on her death the appellant would take the property. This event has since actually happened. What necessity was there for this surrender to come into existence? Subbammal was more anxious that her daughter should be provided for than that her son should take immediate possession of the estate and it was fairly certain that on her death the appellant would not carry out her wishes. It was not her intention that she should forthwith divest herself of the estate or that the surrenderee should enter into possession. There is still another circumstance. The compensation money was paid by the Government into Court, and on the 1st of May 1919, the respondent claimed that money. To defeat her right to that amount and to get immediate possession of the corpus, these objects could be achieved by a surrender. A deed was accordingly executed on the 23rd of May 1919; and it was followed by an application by the appellant, dated 15th July 1919, for the payment of this money. We are prepared to draw from these circumstances the inference that the surrender was not bona fide. On the whole, we think the District Judge has come to a correct conclusion and we affirm his judgment and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Fatal Accidents Act (XIII of 1855), ss. 1, 2—Death caused by collision on Railway—Damages, suit for—Remote damages, whether can be recovered—Money carried by deceased, loss of—Railway, liability of.

The Fatal Accidents Act is primarily intended to give the legal representatives of a person whose death has been caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another person, a right to recover compensation from the latter for the pecuniary loss resulting from the death to the deceased's children or other relatives enumerated in the first section of the Act. The second section of the Statute also allows the legal representatives to include in their action a claim for "any pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased occasioned by such wrongful act, neglect or default." The Act contemplates two sorts of damages: pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased resulting from the accident and pecuniary loss sustained by the members of his family through his death. [p. 1027, col. 1.]

The cardinal principle in cases of this character is whether the damage claimed is the natural and reasonable result of the defendant's act. A damage will assume this character if it can be shown to be such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the act. The damage will be remote when, although arising out of the cause of action, it does not so immediately and necessarily flow from it that the offending party may be made responsible for it; for instance, when it results from the wrongful act of a third party such as could not be naturally contemplated as likely to spring from the defendant's conduct. [p. 1027, cols. 1 & 2; p. 1028, col. 1.]

Every cause leads to an infinite sequence of effects but the author of the initial cause cannot be made responsible for all the effects in the series. He is liable only for those which immediately flow out of his wrongful act. [p. 1027, col. 2.]

If any personal injury is caused to a passenger by the negligence of a Railway Company, not only the immediate pain and expense caused by the accident, but also any consequent incapacity to attend to business would be a natural sequence of the wrongful act. If any loss is caused to his business by reason of the injured man's incapacity to attend to it, it is a loss to the estate and can be recovered by the injured person if he is alive and by his representatives if he dies. [ibid.]

Where a person is killed as the result of a Railway collision which is due to the negligence of Railway servants, his legal representatives are entitled to recover damages caused to them or to the estate of the deceased by the death of the deceased, but they are not entitled to claim from the Railway Company a sum of money which the deceased was carrying on his person at the time of the collision and which was not found on his person after the collision, unless it can be proved that the loss of the money was due directly to the collision. [p. 1028, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st May 1922.

Kunwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, and Mr. Ram Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dev Raj Sawhney and M. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The facts of this case relevant to the question of law debated before us are simple and do not admit of any dispute. On the night between the 28th and 29th June 1919, one Bansi Lal, who was travelling in a train belonging to the North-Western Railway, sustained serious injuries in consequence of that train colliding with another train of the same Railway Administration; and the wounded man succumbed to his injuries shortly afterwards. His legal representatives have brought the present action for the recovery of damages for the pecuniary loss, which resulted from his death, to the members of his family, and have also included in the action a claim for Rs. 1,300 on the ground that the deceased was carrying with him currency-notes of that amount, and that the notes were lost by reason of the negligence of the Railway Administration.

The Trial Judge has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, and the dispute in this appeal preferred by the Railway Administration is confined to the question as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover Rs. 1,300, the value of the currency notes lost by the deceased.

Now, the Subordinate Judge finds, and his finding has not been impeached by the learned Government Advocate, that the deceased Bansilal had with him Rs. 1,300 in currency-notes on the night in question, and that the notes were not mentioned in the list of the property found at the place of the accident. The evidence on the record gives no indication as to how the loss took place or whether any person stole the notes.

Now, the Fatal Accidents Act XIII of 1855, is primarily intended to give the legal representatives of a person, whose death has been caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another person, a right to recover compensation from the latter for the pecuniary loss resulting from the death to the deceased's children or other relatives enumerated in the first section of the Act. The second section of the Statute also allows the legal representatives to include in their action brought for the purpose mentioned above a claim for "any pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased occasioned by such wrongful act, neglect or default." The law contemplates two sorts of damages: the one is the pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased resulting from the accident; the other is the pecuniary loss sustained by the members of his family through his death. The action for the latter is brought by the legal representatives, not for the estate, but as trustees for the relatives beneficially entitled; while the damages for the loss caused to the estate are claimed on behalf of the estate and when recovered form part of the assets of the estate. The loss to the estate had accrued during the lifetime of the deceased and could have been recovered by him.

Now, the disappearance of the currency notes in the present case undoubtedly caused pecuniary loss to the estate of Bansilal; but the loss was not occasioned by any act, neglect or default of the defendant. The cardinal principle in cases of this character is whether the damage claimed is the natural and reasonable result of the defendant's act, and according to the rule repeatedly adopted by the English Courts a damage will assume the character if it can be shown to be such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the act. The damage is held to be remote when, although arising out of the cause of action, it does not so immediately and necessarily flow from it, that the offending party can be made responsible for it.

Now, the loss of the notes is not a necessary consequence, not even a probable consequence, of a person being injured in a Railway collision. There can be no doubt that, if any personal injury is caused to a passenger by the negligence of a Railway Company, not only the immediate pain and expense caused by the accident, but also any consequent incapacity to attend to business, would be a natural consequence of the wrongful act. If any loss is caused to his business by reason of the injured person's incapacity to attend to it, it is obviously a loss to the estate and can be recovered, by the injured person if he is alive, and by his representatives if he dies. I do not think that Bansilal, had he been alive, could have succeeded in an action against the Railway for the loss of the currency-notes. The loss of the notes was only a remote, and not an immediate, result of the accident; and damages can be awarded only for the immediate result of the defendant's wrongful act. Every cause leads to an infinite sequence of effects, but the author of the initial cause cannot be made responsible for all the effects in the series. He is liable only for those which immediately flow out of his wrongful act.

I will make my meaning clear by citing, as an illustration, the facts of the English case, Sharp v. Powell (1). In that case, the defendant, in breach of a Police Act, washed a van in a public street and allowed the waste water to run down the gutter to a grating about 25 yards off from which, in the ordinary state of things, it would have drained into the sewer. In consequence of a hard frost the grating was obstructed by ice, and the water in consequence flowed over the pavement and froze. There was no evidence that the defendant knew of the grating being obstructed. The plaintiff's horse slipped on the ice and broke its leg. It was sought to recover from the defendant the value of the horse, but it was held that the damage was too remote, not being one which he could fairly be expected to anticipate as likely to ensue from his act.

(1) (1872) 7 C. P. 253; 41 L. J. C. P. 95; 26 L. T. 436; 20 W. R. 584.

It must be remembered that the evidence in this case does not show who took away the notes. If some person stole them, while the injured person was lying unconscious or dead, surely the Railway cannot be held liable for the act of the thief. And it has been repeatedly held that the damage is too remote if it results from the wrongful act of a third party such as could not naturally be contemplated as likely to spring from the defendant's conduct.

The learned Counsel for the respondents invites our attention to the word "occasioned" used by the Legislature in respect of the loss caused to the estate, and contends that this expression is different from, and wider in scope than, the term "caused" which is used in the first section of the Statute in connection with the death of the injured person. Now, I have two observations to make with respect to this argument. In the first place, I do not think that the Legislature intended to draw any distinction between the two words and to alter the rule against the award of remote damages by the mere use of the term "occasioned". In the second place, the Statute by enacting the rule allowing the legal representatives to include in their suit a claim for the loss to the estate does not create any fresh liability but merely recognises what already existed under the Common Law and prescribes only the procedure for enforcing it.

I accordingly hold that the loss of the currency-notes was only a remote consequence of the defendant's negligence, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover from the defendant compensation for that loss. In this view of the defendant's liability I consider it unnecessary to pronounce any opinion on the question that s. 74 of the Indian Railways Act exempts the Railway Administration from responsibility for the loss of the notes because no Railway servant had booked them and given a receipt therefor. The result is that I accept the appeal and reduce the amount awarded to the plaintiffs by Rs. 1,300. I would, however, leave the parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts in so far as this claim is concerned.

Le-Rossignol, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice. The question whether a result is sufficiently proximate to the alleged cause is very often very difficult to resolve, but on the facts established in this case I hesitate to hold that the loss of the notes was a natural consequence of the collision. Had the direct connection between the collision and the loss of the notes been established, I do not think that s. 74 of the Indian Railways Act would have operated to protect the appellant Railway, regarded not as a carrier, but as a tort-feasor.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183—Execution of decree—Decree-holder, death of—Legal representative, substitution of, whether necessary—"Payment", whether must be by judgment-debtor or his agent—Limitation.

On the death of a decree-holder, it is not necessary that his legal representative should bring himself on the record in the place of the deceased before applying to execute the decree. No such process is contemplated by the procedure laid down either in the Procedure Code or in the rules on the Original Side. All that is necessary is that the person who becomes by operation of law entitled to have execution should make an application for execution [p. 1029, col. 1.]

A payment to save limitation and give rise to a fresh starting point under Art. 183 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act must be for the judgment-debtor or on his account. It is not necessary that it should be either by the debtor himself or by some person acting on his behalf. [p. 1029, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—This an appeal from an order of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., ordering execution on an execution application made by the assignee of a decree. Objection was taken to the execution application on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The Article applicable to the application in question for execution is Art. 183 because it was in respect of a decree passed on the Original Side of this Court. Under that Article, the decree-holder has 12 years not only from the date on which he becomes entitled to enforce the decree but also 12 years from the date on which some part of the principal money secured thereby or some interest on such money has been paid. In this case, we find that M. Sabapathy Chetty, the original decree-holder died without drawing from the Court the sum of Rs. 24,000 and odd ordered to be paid to him by order, dated 6th October 1909. Subsequently, the Administrator-General of Madras, I believe, as Administrator-General pendente lite in the Administration suit relating to Sabapathy's estate applied to the Court for the payment to him of the entire sum of Rs. 25,932 standing on that date to the credit of the suit, and Wallis, J., passed an order directing such payment on the 9th January 1912. The present application for execution is within 12 years from that date and a fortiori is within 12 years from the date on which the payment was made out from the Court.

It has been sought to be argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that it was not a proper application by the Administrator-General, because, previous to that application, he had not brought himself on the record in the place of the deceased decree-holder. No such process is contemplated by the procedure laid down either in the Procedure Code or in the rules on the Original Side and all that is necessary is that the person who becomes by operation of law entitled to have execution is required only to make an application for execution.

It has, next, been argued that the payment referred to in Art. 183 must have been a payment either by the judgment-debtor himself or by some duly constituted agent or some person acting on his behalf. In s. 20 of the Limitation Act, where a part payment is referred to as giving rise to a further starting of limitation, it is significant that it is prescribed that, for the purpose of saving limitation part of the principal of a debt should be paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in that behalf, but, in Art. 183 there are no such words to be found after the words "some part of the principal money secured thereby or some interest on such money has been paid."

The payment is not, therefore, required to be made either by the debtor or by some person acting on his behalf. The difference in the wording is significant, and, I cannot help thinking, fully intended. It, therefore, follows that, even if payment is for the judgment-debtor or on his account, it would be a payment that will save limitation giving rise to a fresh starting point.

In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the decision in the case of Gorindasami Pillai v. Desai Goundan (1) that was under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act and had reference to the special terms of s. 20 of the Limitation Act. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether, a Court of Law can be deemed to be an agent duly authorised on behalf a debtor to make any such payment as would save limitation.

The execution application is, therefore, not barred by the Law of Limitation and the learned Judge was right in ordering execution. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—I am of the same opinion. No doubt if the matter has to be considered one might find that it was necessary to put some qualification on the latitude of the language of Art. 183 to obviate the contingency referred to by Lord Westbury in Chinnery v. Evans (2) and by the learned Judges in the Irish case, Brew v. Brew (3). That contingency is the possibility of a payment made by a mere volunteer being sought in aid to affect adversely the rights of third parties. But we need not consider it here, because it cannot be suggested that either the Court or the JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that half of the property attached in execution of the decree of defendant No. 3 against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 belonged to him and, therefore, was not saleable in execution of the decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. This claim was based upon the main ground that after the separation of the sons of Durbari Mal, a re-union had taken place between Raman Mal and Udham Mal and that the properties, though standing in the name of one or the other, were owned jointly by them. To support his claim he relied both upon documentary and oral evidence. On the 13th of November the evidence of four witnesses was recorded. Jaimal witness, who was summoned for that date, had not turned up as service of summons had not been effected upon him. The Court made the following order:—

"Orders relating to him will be passed to-morrow. Adjourned to to-morrow for further proceedings."

On the 14th of November 1924 warrants were directed to be issued to Gokal and Nand Lal witnesses who had absented themselves in spite of personal service of summonses upon them. The warrants were sent to Hissar and were received on the 24th of November. They were handed to the bailiff on the 6th of December 1924. The next date for hearing was fixed for the 12th of December 1924. Thus there were six days during which the warrants could have been executed, but the bailiff refused to act on the ground that the distance of the place where the witnesses resided from Hissar was 35 miles and that the service could not be effected. Jaimal, Jiwan Singh, Kirpa Ram, and Hira Lal witnesses had not been served.

The Court, therefore, made the following order:

"Jaimal Singh, Jiwan Singh, Kirpa Ram and Hira Lal have not been served. The plaintiff himself admits that he did not take any step to get them served. Such being the case he has forfeited his right to get fresh processes issued to these persons. He can himself bring them to Court on the next hearing. Case adjourned to 12th December 1924 for remaining evidence of the plaintiff and rebuttal evidence of the defendant. No other opportunity shall be given to the parties for evidence."

This order was made on the 14th of November 1924. Of the two witnesses against whom warrants had been issued Gokal appeared and was examined as a witness. Of the witnesses whom the plaintiff was directed to bring into Court on the date fixed for hearing the plaintiff succeeded in bringing Jaimal, Jiwan Singh and Kirpa Ram whose evidence was recorded but Hira Lal did not come, for the summons had not been served upon Hira Lal. The Court ought to have issued fresh summonses for service and it was not justified in depriving the plaintiff of his right to have the evidence of this witness taken.

The suit of the plaintiff has been dismissed, and in appeal it has been contended before us that the decision has gone against the plaintiff-appellant because the case has been decided upon an incomplete record. Having regard to the circumstances referred to above we are constrained to hold that the Court below did not act properly in refusing to enforce the attendance of these witnesses. Under ordinary circumstances we would have set aside the decree of the Court below and remanded the case for trial de novo after recording the evidence of the two witnesses mentioned above; but as the parties are anxious that the case be decided speedily, acting under O. XLI, r. 28, C. P. C., we direct the Court below to procure the attendance of Nand Lal and Hira Lal, record their evidence and send it to this Court after it has been recorded with as little delay as possible.

Where for the purpose of discharging a money-decree obtained against a minor and his guardian jointly and severally, the guardian mortgaged the properties solely belonging to the minor, in a suit to enforce the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the ultimate liability of the minor under the money-decree was only in respect of half of the decree amount; [p. 1031, col. 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Salem, in A. S. No. 87 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in O. S. No. 18 of 1919.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and V. N. Venkatavaradachari, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Sankara Sastry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—One Ponnappa Chetty and his brother Periyanna Chetty executed a promissory note. After Periyanna Chetty's death, a decree was obtained against Ponnappa Chetty and Periyanna Chetty's sons, defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5. In execution of this decree Ponnappa Chetty was arrested. He borrowed money from another brother, the present plaintiff, to pay off the amount, undertaking to execute a mortgage in his favour; shortly afterwards he executed the plaintiff mortgage-deed, Ex. A, in which he mortgaged the property of defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 as their guardian. The present suit has been brought upon this mortgage-deed and it is sought to recover the whole amount lent thereunder from the property of the minors, defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5. The consideration was Rs. 1,468 paid towards a decree debt and Rs. 532 paid for cultivation expenses, etc., the lower Courts have found that this amount of Rs. 532 is not binding upon the minors and have given a decree for the other item after deducting a small amount therefrom. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 now appeal and contend that their properties are only liable for half of the amount of the decree-debt discharged by Ponnappa Chetty out of the mortgage-money. The decree was originally passed against them and Ponnappa Chetty jointly and severally; but in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, each would be liable to pay half the amount, subject to the decree-holder's rights to execute the decree against any one of the judgment-debtors. The District Judge has held that under this decree the minor defendants were liable to the decree-holder for the whole amount, and, therefore, as the decree could have been executed against them for the whole amount, their property is liable for that sum. In coming to this conclusion he has omitted to notice that the ultimate liability of the minors is only half of the decree amount, for even if they were compelled to pay the whole by the decree-holder they could recover half from their co-judgment-debtor, and consequently their real liability is only one-half. In support of this view I may refer to a case reported as Kali Rai v. Karu Singh (1). In that case, which goes further than is necessary for the present case, it was held that even when the property of a minor was about to be sold in execution of a decree in which he and another co-tenant were judgment-debtors, yet the mortgage was only binding to the extent of the minor's liability for that decree, namely, one-half of the amount. In the present case we have not got the additional circumstance that the minor's property was going to be sold, for when the mortgage was actually executed the decree had been satisfied, and it can make no difference that Ponnappa Chetty, the guardian of the minors, is the mortgagor. It cannot be said that the minors were liable for the whole decree amount. If the decree had been looked at, it would have been at once apparent that the liability was joint, the minors' liability being only the half share for which their father was liable. It must also be remembered that the mortgagee is the brother of Ponnappa Chetty and the uncle of the minors, and he was in a position to know all these facts. In these circumstances it certainly cannot be said that the mortgage amount was borrowed wholly for the benefit of the minors; for they are only liable for one-half of the decree-debt and only received benefit to that extent.

A contention is raised on behalf of the respondent that really the property mortgaged belonged jointly to the minors and to their uncle, Ponnappa Chetty, it being alleged that they formed members of an undivided family. The plaintiff himself admits that Ponnappa Chetty and his brother, Periyanna Chetty, and three other brothers were all divided; and, although he says that Ponnappa and his nephews were living as one family, he does not allege that there was any re-union. In fact it is clear from the plaint that it was not part of the plaintiff's case that Ponnappa had mortgaged his own property, as is apparent from paras. 3 and 3 (a). The question was not raised in the lower Court because the plaintiff proceeded on the assumption that Ponnappa Chetty had no interest. That being so, this argument is of no avail. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the decree modified by altering the amount recoverable to Rs. 734, being half of the decree amount and proportionate costs. Time for payment three months.

The other points raised in the memorandum of appeal have not been argued and consequently, in so far as the appellants have failed, they are liable to pay the proportionate costs of the respondents. Parties will, therefore, pay and receive proportionate costs in this appeal.

BHAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Attestation of document in token of consent—Estoppel.

Where a document recites that a certain person has put his thumb impression thereto in token of his consent and it appears that the document was read over to such person at the time of registration and that he again put his thumb impression to the document, this is not a mere attestation of the document but amounts to distinct and clear acquiescence which binds the person so thumb-marking the document and estops him from questioning its validity. [p. 1033, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 28th July 1924, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Jullundur, dated the 26th February 1923.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan for Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case, one Bhan Singh, brought a suit based on a Will alleged to have been executed by his mother's brother Wazir Singh in his favour. The defendants were the four collaterals of Wazir Singh who in the ordinary course of events would have succeeded him. The suit has been decreed as regards three and as regards the fourth it has been dismissed, the reason being that whereas all the three attested the Will the fourth did not. Two of three collaterals have appealed.

A second suit was instituted to recover the value of the crop admittedly sown by the late Wazir Singh and alleged to have been cultivated by the plaintiff and seized on maturity by the four defendants. A decree was given for one-half only, the finding being that these allegations were established and as no appeal was presented by the plaintiff to the District Judge, this decree stands so far as he is concerned. The collaterals have appealed and this judgment will dispose both of that appeal and of the appeal in the main case.

A third suit was instituted by two of the reversioners for a declaration that their thumb-marks on the Will had been obtained by fraud and also for a declaration that they were entitled to their share of Wazir Singh's estate. This suit was dismissed and no appeal preferred.

I take first the appeal of the three reversioners. Counsel urges that a mere attestation of a document is not in itself sufficient to constitute acquiescence. He further contends that even if there was acquiescence inasmuch as the Will was in favour of a relation who normally was not entitled to succeed, that acquiescence must be ignored. He quotes and relies on Udai Bhan Singh v. Gajendra Singh (1) in which an appeal was dismissed as concluded by a finding of fact by the District Judge. This does not help him as here also there is a finding of fact against the appellant. He also relies on Pandurang Krishnaji v. Markandeya Tukaram (2) for his main proposition and he wishes to draw an analogy from the Hindu Law where the position is as explained in Chuni Lal v. Nanda (3) that unless all the reversioners agree to an alienation by a Hindu widow the whole of the alienation is bad. The facts of this case are wholly different. Wazir Singh wishing to benefit his sister's son executed this Will and it is recited in the clearest possible terms that the reversioners, defendants Nos. 2 to 4 have given their consent:—"Barazi warsan jaddi Hardit Singh, Pal Singh wa Santas Singh yeh wasiyat tahrir kar dihai jinke nishanat angusht bhi sabat hain." The endorsement shows that the Sub-Registrar read out and explained the document to the testator in the presence of two out of these three reversioners and had thereupon attached their thumb-marks for a second time. This, in my opinion, is not a mere attestation in the sense in which the words are used in Pandurang Krishnaji v. Markandeya Tukaram (2) but is a distinct and clear acquiescence which binds these three reversioners and estops them from questioning the validity of the Will. The other point has no force, in my opinion, and there would be no meaning in acquiescence or in estoppel, if at a later stage it was possible to upset that acquiescence by showing that it affected the course of events. Mr. Fakir Chand's argument as I understand it is that the only form of acquiescence which can be given is to recognise the inheritance of the natural heir. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

As regards the second appeal about the crop it is urged in the first place that the suit should have been tried by a Revenue Court, but this has been definitely dropped. The second point is that the suit is clearly one for damages for wrongful occupation. This was also dropped and the only point urged by Mr. Fakir Chand is that Sundar Singh has succeeded in the main suit as he did not acquiesce and, therefore, no decree should have been passed against him. The finding is that the crop was sown by the late Wazir Singh and cultivated by the plaintiff and this finding being based on evidence I do not see how the question of title arises. All that has been decreed is that one-half of the value of the crop seized by the collaterals is to be paid to the plaintiff who on the findings is entitled to the whole. I dismiss this appeal also with costs.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and T. Kumarasamiah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question that arises in this appeal is one of limitation. The suit is brought on a mortgage-deed, dated 20th September 1890, in 1916 the mortgage-money not being payable under the deed until 1904. There is also a clause in the deed that in default of payment of interest the whole amount, principal and interest, up to that date should become due. It is argued before us in the first place that the default clause leaves no option to the mortgagee as to whether he shall or shall not enforce it; but on a consideration of the language of the document which is translated in this Court as follows:—"If I should fail to pay.....you shall be at liberty to recover", it is clear that the option is reserved with the mortgagee to enforce this clause at his pleasure. That being so, the question is whether the period of limitation started to run on the date of default, or when the money became due under the terms of the main contract, namely, 1904, under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The view that the money becomes due within the meaning of this Article at the date of the first default has been adopted by the Allahabad High Court in Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (1) and that decision has been followed in two subsequent cases in Nathi v. Tursi (2) and Collector of Jaunpur v. Jamna Prasad (3). The case of Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (1) has been considered by this Court in Narna v. Ammani Amma (4) in which a Division Bench took a view different from that of the Allahabad High Court and that view has subsequently been followed in Ramadh Bibi Ammal v. Kandasami Pillai (5), Lachakkammal v. Sokkayya Naick (6), Kalippa Nadar v. Sami Iyer (7) and Bitragunta Appayya v. Addanki Venkataramanayya (8) and to one or other of these cases we both have been parties. There is no definite pronouncement of the Privy Council on this point, although there is a dictum in support of the view taken in this Court in Juneswar Das v. Mahabeer Singh (9), the other cases of the Privy Council cited before us, namely, Kishan Narain v. Pal Mal (10) and Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zakariya (11) are decisions under O. II, r. 2, of the C. P. C., and are not authorities on this point. In this state of affairs we prefer to follow the course of decisions in this Court in preference to the view of the Allahabad High Court, and consequently, this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs of plaintiff and 3rd respondent.

In this view it is unnecessary to decide the further point upon which the lower Court relies, namely, that the limitation was saved by reason of the acknowledgment of the debt.

The balance of Rs. 50 due to the Court guardian will be paid by the appellant.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Partition—Step-mother, whether entitled to share.

Under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law a step-mother is entitled, on partition of her deceased husband's estate, to a share in the estate equal to that of a son. [p. 1036, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 25th October 1920, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 17th March 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Man Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This second appeal arises out of an action brought by the plaintiff Harnam Singh for the partition of the estate left by his father, who died in July 1916 leaving a widow Musammatt Bhagwanti and three sons, namely, the plaintiff and his two step-brothers, who with their mother Musammatt Bhagwanti are defendants in the case. It is not disputed that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara School of the Hindu Law, and the question for determination is whether Musammatt Bhagwanti, who is the step-mother of the plaintiff, is entitled to a share on partition equal to that of a son.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff, while conceding the mother's right to a share on a partition between her sons, contends that a step-mother does not occupy the same position as a mother, and that she is not entitled to any share out of the joint estate. This distinction is, no doubt, recognised by the Dayabhaga School of the Hindu Law which does not allow any share to a sonless step-mother on a partition between her step-sons; but the doctrine adopted by the leading authorities of the Mitakshara School is to the effect that a mother and a step-mother are equal sharers with the sons.

This proposition was laid down as long ago as 1882 by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Damoodur Misser v. Senabuttu Misra (1); and the same view has since been affirmed by the Bombay High Court in Damodardas Maneklal v. Uttamram Maneklal (2) and Vithal Ramkrishna v. Prahlad Ramkrishna (3), by the Allahabad High Court in Harnarain v. Bishambar Nath (4), and by the Patna High Court in Suba Raut v. Manla Rautain (5). The learned Vakil for the plaintiff places his reliance upon the judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in Bishen Das v. Mansa Devi (6) which enunciates the rule that a step-son is not bound to contribute to his step-mother's maintenance after the joint property has been partitioned between the step-son and her own son. It is true that the judgment contains some observations to the effect that there is no difference between the two systems of the Hindu Law, the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara, as to the position and rights of a step-mother; but the question whether on a partition of the joint property a step-mother is entitled under the Mitakshara Law to a share was not before the learned Judges, and the general observations relating to the step-mother's position qua her step-son can be regarded as mere obiter dicta. With all respect to the learned Judges I am unable to endorse the view that the doctrine of the Mitakshara School on the subject of the step-mother's right to a share is identical with that followed by the Dayabhaga School.

Mr. Man Singh for the plaintiff frankly admits that, with the exception of the observations in Bishen Das v. Mansa Devi (6), there is not a single judicial authority in support of his contention; but he invites our attention to the original text and urges that the word 'mata' used therein means only a mother and does not include a step-mother. This contention runs counter to all the authorities on the subject, the jurists of the Mitakshara School as well as the judicial decisions, and I have no hesitation in rejecting it. The commentaries including the Mitakshara are unanimous that the word 'mata' used by Yajnavalkya in the text, which speaks of the share of a mother on the occasion of the partition of the property among sons after the decease of their father, included a step-mother; and it would be presumptuous to impeach the correctness of the interpretation adopted by all the jurists.

Mr. Man Singh also urges that, even if Musammatt Bhagwanti is entitled to a share in the estate, the value of the stridhan received by her from her husband should be deducted from that share. The determination of this question depends upon facts and, as the point was not raised in either of the Courts below, it cannot be agitated for the first time in second appeal.

I accordingly hold that Musammatt Bhagwanti is entitled to a share equal to that of each of the sons, and that the plaintiff cannot get more than one-fourth of the estate. The result is that I accept the appeal and grant him a decree for possession by partition of one-fourth of the immoveable property specified in the plaint. The respondent must pay the costs incurred by the appellants in this Court.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The facts are that Babu Bishun Narayan, who figures as opposite party No. 3, brought a suit in the Rent Court against a number of under-proprietors, and obtained a joint decree against them. In execution of this decree he obtained a sum of Rs. 186-9-0 from two of the judgment-debtors, Ram Autar and Bhaggan, who now figure as opposite party Nos. 1 and 2. As this amount was in excess of what they were due to pay, they brought a suit for contribution against a number of the other judgment-debtors. Ultimately, only one of these defendants contested the suit. That was the present applicant, Ram Hakh. A decree was passed against various defendants for various amounts. As regards Ram Hakh, the decree against him was for Rs. 25-5-6 but he was also saddled with the entire costs of the suit which amounted to about Rs. 35.

He applies to this Court on two grounds. The first is that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction, because the suit was one such as is described in Art. 41 of the Second Schedule for contribution by a sharer against a co-sharer. This contention is wrong. This exact point was decided in Suraj Baksh Singh v. Raghubar Singh (1). The true doctrine is that the rights of the co-sharers, inter se, merge in their rights and liabilities as co-judgment-debtors in regard to the decree, and a suit for contribution being between judgment-debtors, does not fall under Art. 41. The ruling I have quoted is that of a Single Judge, but, it was upheld by a Bench of this Court in Bhagwati Prasad Singh v. Muhammad Abdul Hasan Khan (2). That decision is binding on me. I may add that I agree with it.

The second point is that the applicant ought not to be saddled with the whole of the costs. But orders with regard to costs are discretionary orders and this Court will not ordinarily make use of its powers, under s. 25, to upset an order of the Small Cause Court as to costs. The applicant prolonged the proceedings, after all the other defendants had admitted the justice of the plaintiff's claim, and it may very well be that he was rightly saddled with costs.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 36—Transfer by insolvent—Transfer by transferee of insolvent—Annulment of transfer.

Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 does not apply to a transfer made by an insolvent subsequent to his adjudication, but applies only to transfers made by him previous thereto. Nor does the section in terms apply to a transfer made by a transferee of the insolvent.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 31st May 1922.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda and Lala Jagan Nath Bhandari, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Bakhu applied to be declared insolvent on the 12th February 1918 and was adjudicated insolvent on the 13th March 1918. On the 2nd October 1918 Bakhu sold part of his land to Massu. On the 31st March 1919, Massu sold this land and some of his own land to Hussain Bakhsh and Sardar Khan. On the 18th June 1919 the latter vendees sold the land to Hayat Muhammad. On the 10th December 1921 the Insolvency Court annulled the sales in favour of Massu and in favour of Hussain Bakhsh and Sardar Khan. On the 31st May 1922 the sale in favour of Hayat Muhammad was annulled. Hayat Muhammad has appealed to this Court.

It is contended that s. 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not apply to transfers made by an insolvent subsequent to his adjudication but only to transfers made by him previous thereto. Moreover it does not in terms apply to transfers made by an insolvent's transferee. The transfer to Hayat Muhammad was not made by the insolvent himself. The section, therefore, does not apply to the original transfer made by Bakhu insolvent, much less to subsequent ones. Whether these transfers are binding on the Official Receiver is another question which we are not at present called upon to decide.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below annulling the transfer in favour of Hayat Muhammad. The appellant will receive his costs out of the insolvent estate.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The suit house originally belonged to the 1st defendant's father Narayana Iyengar and his brother the 2nd defendant Alagasinga Iyengar. A partition was effected between the brothers in 1881, but not by metes and bounds. Narayana's share was sold to one Dikshitar on 1st May 1905. Alagasinga's share was sold to the plaintiff on 10th March 1906. On 30th March 1906, Narayana's share was delivered to Dikshitar by symbolical delivery. On 25th March 1907, Dikshitar sold this share to Alagasinga's son the 3rd defendant. On 3rd July 1917, the plaintiff attached Alagasinga's share in execution of a decree. On 4th March 1918, Narayana put in a claim petition. On 10th June 1918 the claim was allowed and on 19th August 1918 the present suit was brought under O. XXI, r. 63. Meanwhile, on 3rd April 1918, Alagasinga had brought a suit to recover possession of his share, a suit which has been dismissed.

The lower Courts have found that there has been adverse possession by Narayana's son the 1st defendant for 12 years before suit, and now in this second appeal two questions arise: (1) whether the attachment by the plaintiff on 3rd July 1917 puts an end to the adverse possession of the 1st defendant that is, whether the possession of the 1st defendant from that date till this suit was filed, continued to be adverse, and uninterrupted, (2) whether the symbolical delivery of 30th March 1906 put an end to the 1st defendant's adverse possession or not. The decree in which symbolical delivery was given was against Narayana alone and 1st defendant, his son, was not a party to it.

The first point has been expressly decided in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1). In that case, the defendants had been in possession for less than 12 years at the time of attachment, but continued in possession until the suit was brought more than 12 years after their possession commenced. It was held in this Court that the attachment could not have the effect of arresting the running of time against defendants. If that ruling is adopted, it is clear that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. But it is urged for the appellant that the decision in Pandiyan Pillai v. Vellayappa Rowther (2) is authority to the contrary, and this contention appears to have some force, for, in that case, the facts were very similar and it was decided against the parties claiming adverse possession. Reference is made in the judgment to Seetharama Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) and it is not dissented from nor criticised in any way, apparently because it was held that no question of interruption of possession or of its continuance despite the attachment arose. Although, therefore, the decision appears to be in direct contravention of the decision in Seetharama Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) it is based on other grounds, which are not too clear, because in the judgment the facts do not appear to be correctly set out owing to the apparent transposition of the words "plaintiff" and "defendant" in two places. Reliance is also placed on Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna Thite (3) and that, no doubt, is an authority directly in favour of the appellant, for it was there held that in such a suit, namely, under s. 283 of the old C. P. C., it must be proved "that on the date of attachment which was subsequently raised by order of the Court on the application of the 1st respondent, their judgment-debtors had a subsisting right to the property." For this proposition Harishankar Jebhai v. Naran Karsan (4) is relied on, but a reference to the latter shows that in that case the date of the order on the claim petition was treated as the date on which the adverse possession ceased. If that date is taken in the present case, namely, 10th June 1918, the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. This latter proposition is supported by the authority of the Calcutta High Court in Phal Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (5), where it was held that the order of the Court was the basis of the subsequent suit. We have not been referred to any other authority than Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna Thite (3) which is directly in point and inasmuch as that case purports to be based on a prior decision which was not so to the same effect, there is no argument in the judgment which goes to show that the decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) is incorrect.

It is suggested that we should refer this point for the decision of a Full Bench, but I do not think it is necessary in view of the following circumstances. In the first place, the decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) has never been dissented from, although it was given so long ago as 1901, and on the merits I respectfully agree with the conclusion. Attachment or immoveable property is effected by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. (Order XXI, r. 54, C. P. C.) It has always been held that an attachment does not confer any interest in the property, and it is difficult to see how a mere attachment can disturb the continuance of physical possession of the holder at the time. There are many authorities for holding that adverse possession is not disturbed except by actual ouster. For instance, in Pankaj Mohan Bal v. Bipin Behary Chakladar (6), where the Court ordered the property to be put in possession of a Receiver but possession was not actually given, it was held that possession was not disturbed. Again in Singaravelu Mudaliar v. Chokka Mudaliar (7), it was held that a declaration that the party in possession had no title has not the effect of interrupting the continuity of his adverse possession. At page 751* of the same volume in Subhaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (8), it was held that a decree which was not executed did not disturb possession. In view of these decisions it is difficult to hold that a mere attachment, under which possession is in no way disturbed, can affect the continuity of adverse possession. Appellant relies on two cases reported as Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (9) and Sarat Chandra Maiti v. Bibbabati Debi (10), but in both these cases, the attachment was not one made under the C. P. C., but was made by a Magistrate in proceedings under Ch. XII, of the Cr. P. C., and must be distinguished on the ground that an attachment under that Chapter implies an actual taking possession of the property by the Magistrate or by some one under his orders. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) is correct and see no necessity for referring the case to a Full Bench as there is no actual conflict of opinion in this Court. In this view, it is unnecessary to decide the second point raised which was not raised in the lower Courts. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Odgers, J.—Two points have been raised in this appeal: (1) Is symbolical possession, i. e., delivery by the Court of immoveable property in the execution of a decree sufficient to interrupt adverse possession? and (2) Does an attachment of immoveable property serve to interrupt adverse possession?

The plaintiff who brings the suit under O. XXI, r. 63 after the disposal of a claim petition in favour of defendant's father pleaded that since the 10th of March 1906 the plaintiff's father and himself had been in possession of a moiety of the immoveable property in question and he brought the suit for a declaration that the other moiety belongs to the 3rd defendant or to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and that it was liable to be attached in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 54 of 1912. The first defendant who is the only contesting defendant pleaded that he and his father had been in adverse possession to the plaintiff and the other defendants of the whole of the property in question for a period of over 25 years. The dates material to the points set out are:—On the 8th of June 1881 there was a partition between the 1st defendant's father and his co-parcener Alagasinga of the property in question; on the 1st of May 1905 there was a Court auction sale of the 1st defendant's share to one Dikshitar. On the 30th of March 1906 there was symbolical delivery of 1st defendant's share to Dikshitar. On the 25th of March 1907 there was a private sale by Dikshitar to the son of Alagasinga who was the 1st defendant's co-parcener above referred to and previously on the 10th of March 1906 there was a private sale of Alagasinga's share to the plaintiff's father. On the 3rd of July 1917 there was an attachment by the plaintiff of Alagasinga's share. On the 4th of March 1918 there was a claim petition by the 1st defendant's father who was in possession. On the 3rd of April 1918 the plaint in Second Appeal No. 109 was presented by Alagasinga. On the 10th of June 1918 the claim of the 1st defendant was allowed and the attachment was raised; and on the 19th of August 1918 the plaint in the present second appeal was presented by the plaintiff.

It will be observed that both the plaints are more than 12 years from the date of the symbolical delivery of the plaintiff's share to Dikshitar but the attachment by the plaintiff on the 3rd of July 1917 is within 12 years.

Now as to the first point reliance is placed by the appellant on the case reported as Kocherlakota Venkatakrishna Rao v. Vadrevu Venkappa (11) and Radha Krishna Chanderji v. Ram Bahadur (12). In the first case it was held that the effect of symbolical delivery was in the case of the judgment-debtor himself absolute; but where the judgment-debtor is not the party in possession adversely to a third party (as here), delivery made in the absence of that third party and not hostilely to him cannot by itself affect his possession nor amount to an ouster or dispossession of him and his possession will continue uninterrupted but if he was present and the delivery takes place adversely to the claim of such third party, it may be equally operative as against him. It was contended that the present is the case of a stranger resisting the suit, not of a stranger trying to recover as defendant No. 1 was not a party to the suit. In Radha Krishna Chanderji v. Ram Bahadur (12), it was held that symbolical possession will avail to dispossess defendants sufficiently because they were parties to the proceedings, in which it was ordered and given: Juggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (13) affirmed.

The case in Jobeda Khatun v. Tulsi Charan Das (14) was also relied on. The learned Judges there say that the decisions show that symbolical possession does not in any way affect the possession of or give start to a fresh period of limitation against persons who are not parties to the suit or execution proceedings. The learned Judges refer to a Privy Council case reported as Radha Krishna Chanderji v. Ram Bahadur (12), where their Lordships say that "symbolical possession is sufficient to interrupt adverse possession when the adverse possessor is a party to the execution proceedings in which the symbolical possession is given; as regards persons not so parties, only actual dispossession can interrupt their adverse possession". This, in my opinion, is sufficient to dispose of the point adversely to the appellant, if we can assume that defendants Nos. 1 was no party to the execution proceedings.

A greater part however of the argument before us has been centered on the second point, viz., as to the effect of attachment as interrupting adverse possession. There being no doubt, as already pointed out, that on the date of the suit the period requisite to establish adverse possession had elapsed. It is said that there are two cases—neither of them reported in the authorised reports—on each side of the line.

For the appellant it is frankly admitted that the case reported as Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) is against his position. There the learned Judges distinctly and in so many words lay down that attachment could not have the effect of arresting adverse possession by strangers holding adversely when the properties were attached by the plaintiff as belonging to certain of the defendants in the case against whom the strangers were holding. It is said that the case in Pandiyar Pillai v. Vellayappa Rowther (2) is diametrically opposed to this, and the head-note certainly gives some colour to this view. The learned Judges, however, dispose of the case in another manner. The decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) was brought to their notice, but they merely remark: "An old decision of this Court, not reported in the authorised reports, namely, Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) supports Mr. Devadoss." They proceed to dispose of the case on a different ground, namely, "that a decision in a regular suit instituted to contest the order in the claim proceedings places the parties in status quo ante either by vacating the order made in the said proceedings, or by confirming it. The result is the plaintiff is directed not to interpose obstacles in carrying out the further steps necessary to reap the fruits of the attachment. Both the parties are bound by that pronouncement. Consequently no question of interruption of possession or of its continuance despite the attachment arises." So far from intending to overrule or disapprove of the decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1), it appears to me from this last sentence quoted from the judgment that the learned Judges held that the question did not arise. In my opinion, therefore, as far as authorities have been brought to our notice the case in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) stands uncontradicted. It is a case that has stood for over 23 years and it seems to me that it would be improper for us to decline to follow it unless there was some very cogent reason for doing so.

Now it has been constantly held that adverse possession is a question of fact. It has been argued for the appellant that the nature of an attachment is such that, on an attachment taking place, the Court receives the properties into its custody and what this means may be seen by the form of attachment given in Appendix E, Form 24, of the C. P. C. It only directs abstinence from transferring or charging the property by gift, sale or otherwise during the continuance of the attachment. It certainly does not physically interrupt the possession of persons already on the property and in my view it cannot be said even theoretically to do so. If it were allowed to interrupt any possession, one can see that a wide door is opened to fraud and oppression.

The case in Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna Thite (3) supports the appellant. That was a suit to establish the appellant's right and sell the property in dispute as that of the judgment-debtors and it was held that the appellant must prove that on the date of the attachment, which was subsequently raised, the judgment-debtor had subsisting right to the property; and that the suit must, therefore, be tried as if it were a suit for possession by the judgment-debtors. The learned Judges add "So regarded, it is not the case here of the judgment-debtors having been dispossessed or having discontinued possession while in possession of the property." The learned Judges there specifically rely on Harishankar Jobhai v. Naran Karsan (4), where the critical date is taken to be that of the order of 11th August 1913 which directed the removal of the attachment. That date corresponds to 10th June 1918 in the present case and is conclusive of the present point as that date is more than 12 years from 30th March 1906. An old case in Krishnama Rajah v. Narayanasamy Rajah (15) lays down that the effect of an attachment does not change in any way the possession of the property so as to bring the case within 12 years' limitation.

A further point was taken, namely, that the suit as allowed by O. XXI, r. 63 although called a suit, was in fact nothing but a continuation of the claim proceedings; and the appellant relied on Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Sahib (16). In that case the Privy Council decision in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (5) was referred to and in the opinion of Sadasiva Iyer, J., such suits have not any of the essential of original actions "but merely forms of appeal allowed by the C. P. C., to be brought in the guise of original suits." This judgment of their Lordships has, however, been commented upon by a Full Bench of this Court in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Keddiar (17), where

(15) 4 M. H. C. R. 281.

Wallis, C. J., said: "The Privy Council, no doubt, referred in one place to the suit under s. 283 to establish the right of the unsuccessful party to the claim petition as an 'action of appeal' and to the plaint in such a suit, as 'a plaint for review of a summary decision' but this language must be read, with reference to the question before them." Oldfield, J., in the same case points out that all their Lordships were concerned with was the question of Court-fee, in connection with which the character of the relief asked for by the plaintiff would be decisive.

For these reasons I am of opinion attachment does not interrupt adverse possession or rather possession which is ripening into adverse possession. This second point also fails and we must give effect to the decision in Seetharami Reddi v. Venku Reddi (1) above quoted. I agree with my learned brother that there being, in my opinion, good and sufficient authority against the proposition that adverse possession can be interrupted by attachment, there is no necessity for reference to a Full Bench. Consequently the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Jurisdiction, decision as to—Appeal—Revision, whether lies.

An appellate judgment deciding, even if erroneously, that a Court of first instance had jurisdiction to hear a suit, is not open to revision by the High Court.

Petition, under s. 44 of Act IX of 1919 for revision of an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 13th October 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Amritsar, dated the 24th March 1923.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Petitioners.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The weight of authority in the Punjab is in favour of the view that an appellate judgment deciding (even if erroneously) that the Court of first instance had jurisdiction to hear the suit is not open to revision by the High Court, vide Daulat Ram v. Asa Ram (1), Arur Singh v. Bua Ditta (2) and Chhubu Mian v. Har Charan Das (3). I hold that on this preliminary objection the petition fails and I dismiss it with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 143 OF 1924.

April 8, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

Syed MUHAMMAD SAHIB—DEFENDANT
No. 1—PETITIONER

A. P. R. L. ALAGAPPA CHETTIAR —COUNTER-PETITIONER—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Matters for consideration—Good defence on merits, relevancy of—Defendant's knowledge of decree; nature of—Effect—Order without considering real question—Interference—Revision.

In an application under O. IX, r. 13, C.P. C., what the Court has to find is not whether the defendant has any good defence on the merits but whether there has been proper service, and if there is proper service whether there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance. Apart from the question of limitation the defendant's knowledge of the suit after a decree is irrelevant for any other purpose. [p. 1043, col. 2; p. 1044, col. 1.]

And even for the purposes of limitation, a vague knowledge that a decree had been passed by some Court is not enough. It must be found that the defendant had knowledge that a particular decree had been passed against him in a particular Court in favour of a particular person and for a particular sum. [p. 1044, col. 2.]

Bapurao Sakharan v. Sadhu Bhivba, 72 Ind. Cas. 130; 47 B. 485; 25 Bom. L. R. 74; (1923) A. I. R. (B.) 193, relied on.

Where the Courts below have not considered in such a case the real question, whether sufficient cause has been shown by the defendant for non-appearance, it is an irregularity justifying the interference of the High Court in revision under s. 115, C. P. C. [p. 1044, col. 2.]

Where on summons being taken out in a suit the amin went to the village of the defendants and learnt that they had gone to another place and the time of their return was not known and there was no adult male member in their families and the summonses were then affixed to the outer-doors of their houses:

Held, that there was not merely substituted service but good service according to law. [p. 1044, col. 2; p. 1045, col. 1.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in C. M. A. No. 70 of 1923, preferred against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruppur, in I. A. No. 1181 of 1923, in O. S. No. 1006 of 1922.

Mr. Watrap S. Subrahmanya Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this revision petition may be stated as follows. The respondent before me was the plaintiff in O. S. No. 1006 of 1922 on the file of the District Munsif of Tiruppur. He filed a suit to recover Rs. 797-9-6 due on a pro-note executed on 27th December 1919 by the two defendants. The 2nd defendant never appeared in the suit and we are not now concerned with him. The first defendant is the petitioner before me. The first summons to him was issued in April 1922. It was not personally served and a fresh service was ordered. Summons was taken out a second time in July 1922. The amin went to the village of the defendants on 7th July. He learnt that the defendants had gone to Satyamangalam and other places and the time of their return was not known and that there was no adult male member in their families. The summonses were then affixed to the outer-doors of their houses. These facts were sworn to by the amin before the Deputy Nazir and apparently also confirmed by the report of the village officer. This return of the amin was on the 10th July. The District Munsif ordered the suit to proceed ex parte and the case was taken up on the 19th July and decreed in favour of the plaintiff. The first defendant filed the present petition on the 7th of August 1923 with an affidavit in which he states that he was not aware of the suit, that the notice in E. P. No. 2104 of 1923 (a petition filed for the execution of the decree) was served on him on 31st July 1923. He mentioned other facts going to show that there was collusion between the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant and referred to a mortgage obtained by the plaintiff's brother from the 2nd defendant. He afterwards applied for and obtained a copy of this mortgage and filed it before the District Munsif on the 19th of October 1923. The District Munsif said "No doubt there was no personal service but first defendant has apparently been aware of the decree and 2nd defendant's alleged partial adjustment of it. * * * * First defendant's defence on the merits seems to be very weak. * * * * I am not inclined to set aside the decree". In an application under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., what the Court has to find is not whether the defendant has any good defence on the merits but whether there is proper service and if there is proper service whether there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance. I presume that in this case there was service which was good service according to law, though I should think Courts ought not to proceed to the trial of a case, until at least three services have been taken upon the defendants which is the practice in the High Court and I would like this to be followed in the Courts below before the case is allowed to proceed ex parte, but as I said I will assume that there was some good service according to law. But even then a defendant may give a good reason for non-appearance. He may tell the Court that, as a matter of fact, he was unaware of the suit which means that he never saw any paper pasted on the outer-door of his house. If the Court believes him it follows that he could not be aware of the suit and in such a case though there was good service, there is sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the party, and in such a case the Court ought to set aside the ex parte decree.

In Arunachala Aiyar v. Subbaramiah (1), Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J., held that this ought to be the attitude of the Court in dealing with an application of this kind though no doubt there the facts were somewhat different. The same view was taken by the same Bench in Lakshminarayana v. Standard Oil Company of New York (2), though again the facts are somewhat different. Whether the first defendant was aware of the decree after the passing of the decree and partial adjustment by the 2nd defendant is irrelevant except for the purpose of deciding whether the petition is barred by limitation. There is no finding by the District Munsif that the petitioner became aware of the decree on or before a particular date. It is, therefore, clear to me that the District Munsif did not refer to the mortgage document and the first defendant being aware of the decree for the purpose of limitation, the application for the copy of the mortgage itself was made after the filing of the petition. If it is not useful for the purpose of limitation, it is irrelevant for any other purpose. I, therefore, think the District Munsif has not addressed himself to the question that has to be decided in an application of this sort. On appeal the District Judge says:—"Appellant was twice affixed, his co-executant's (2nd defendant's) property was attached before judgment. * * * I cannot believe his statement that he had no knowledge of the suit until more than a year after the decree." The statement that the appellant was twice affixed only amounts to saying that there was service which was good according to law, a matter with which I agree. The next statement "his co-defendant's property was attached before judgment" seems to be irrelevant. Assuming that a man heard of the attachment of a co-defendant's property, it does not follow that he has evaded service or that he abstained from appearing without proper cause. It may be he was waiting for being served and never got the summons. The next statement of the District Judge that he cannot believe the petitioner's statement that he had no knowledge of the suit until more than a year after a decree again leads to no conclusion. Unless the District Judge finds positively that the petitioner was aware of the decree at a time which was more than a month before the petition, it is not barred by limitation. And apart from the limitation the knowledge of the suit after a decree is irrelevant for any other purpose. I, therefore, think the District Judge also has not addressed himself to the proper question. The case of Sankaralinga Mudali v. Ratnasabhapati Mudali (3) only shows that an amin is justified in affixing the summons to the door if there is no prospect of his being able to serve the defendant within a reasonable time. I assume this point in favour of the respondent in this case. In Abraham Pillai v. Donald Smith (4), it was laid down that summons if possible must be served in person and that substituted service should be ordered only when reasonable grounds exist for believing that defendant is keeping out of the way to avoid service or for other reasons, he cannot be served in the ordinary way. Because these conditions are not fulfilled, the High Court interfered in revision. It is true the present case is not a case of substituted service and I have held that the service on the door by affixture was good service but still as the Courts below have not considered the question whether sufficient cause was shown by the defendant for non-appearance, I hold it is an irregularity justifying my interference in revision. In Abraham Pillai v. Donald Smith (4), the High Court itself set aside the ex parte decree. A similar view was taken in Nagary Rasappa Setti v. Namburi Venkataratnam (5), though I keep before my mind the fact that the revision petition in that case was a petition under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. Wallace, J., seems to have taken a similar view in Civil Revision Petition No. 745 of 1924. In Bapurao Sakharam v. Sadhu Bhivba (6), it was pointed out that even for the purposes of limitation, a vague knowledge that a decree had been passed by some Court is not enough. It must be found that the defendant had knowledge that a particular decree had been passed against him in a particular Court in favour of a particular person and for a particular sum. I agree with this view of Macleod, C. J., and Crump, J. A vague suspicion that the defendant must have heard of some decree is not enough to dismiss his petition on the ground that it is barred by limitation. It is true that the view in Abraham Pillai v. Donald Smith (4) was not fully concurred in Sitram Swami v. Kalandi Patra (7), Gontla Venkata Pitchayya v. Mahommad Abdul Kareem Beg (8) and Kasiriswanathan Chetty v. Somusundaram Chetty (9). In Sitram Swami v. Kalandi Patra (7), the defendant left Bengal for the Madras Presidency. It was held there was good service but the question whether there was sufficient cause for non-appearance otherwise, was not discussed. The only point discussed is whether the amin's affixture of the summons was proper. This case was followed in Gontla Venkata Pitchayya v. Mahommad Abdul Kareem Beg (8). In Kasiris Anathan Chetty v. Arunachalam Chetty (10), the defendant had gone to a foreign territory. Substituted service was held to be proper and no other question was discussed. The same remarks apply to Valluri Basavayya v. Peruri Kistna Brahman (11). In Bhai Chand Ful Chand v. Dawood Ayub (12), the defendant had notice. The only question is whether he could not attend on account of illness and the High Court refused to interfere in revision. Following Abraham Pillai v. Donald Smith (4) and the principle laid down in Arunachala Aiyar v. Subbaramiah (1) and Lakshmi Narayana v. Standard Oil Co. of New York (2), I hold I am entitled to interfere in revision. I find that the defendant was not, as a matter of fact, aware of the suit and showed sufficient cause for non-appearance. I set aside the order of the Courts below and direct the District Munsif to proceed with the suit according to law only so far as first defendant is concerned. But as I have no desire to be unduly lenient to the petitioner, the costs in all the Courts will abide the result. The security already furnished by the petitioner will continue till the disposal of the suit.

Dat Brahmans of village Damun Chak in the Kharian Tehsil of Gujrat District are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession. [p. 1045, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated 19th March 1923, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Gujrat, dated the 26th February 1923.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the possession of 465 kanals 9 marlas of land and of a house situated at Damun Chak, Tehsil Kharian, District Gujrat. The pedigree-table given in the judgments of the Courts below shows the relationship between the parties. The land and the house claimed formed part of the estate of Devi Dial on whose death his widow Musammam Makhni succeeded to his estate. On the 8th July 1918 she executed a Will by which she divided the whole of the property to which she had succeeded in favour of Musammam Kartar Devi, her daughter and Paras Ram, the minor son of the latter. Mutation was effected in favour of Paras Ram. The plaintiffs claiming to be the collaterals of the deceased, instituted the present suit on the allegation that Musammam Makhni had no authority under the custom applicable to the parties to make the alienation. The suit was resisted on the main ground that the community of *Dat Brahman*s of the village Damun Chak, Tehsil Kharian, District Gujrat, were governed in matters of succession by their personal law and not by custom. The principal issue which arose for decision was whether the parties were governed by custom or Hindu Law in matters of succession. The Trial Court, holding that they were governed by custom, decreed the plaintiffs' claim. An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court which took a different view from that taken by the Trial Court, and holding that the parties were not governed by custom but by Hindu Law, dismissed the claim. Hence this second appeal.

The findings recorded by the lower Appellate Court may be summarised as below:—

(1) That Damun Chak is principally inhabited by Dat Brahmans which is a large body having a large area in their possession;

(2) that admittedly some of the members of the Dat Brahmans of the village cultivate their land, some by tenants and some by themselves;

(3) that a large number of them have taken to service;

(4) that most of them carry on trade, do the business of money-lending; and

(5) that they had not given up their priestly duties.

Mr. Ralli the learned Counsel for the appellants has frankly admitted that no instances showing the application of agricultural custom to Dat Brahman of the village have either been cited or proved by the oral or documentary evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiffs. The defendants called witnesses to prove that Dat Brahmans of the village in matters of succession were governed by Hindu Law. Some of these witnesses have cited some instances also. However, no documentary proof of those instances was filed. The burden of proof lay upon the plaintiffs to prove affirmatively that the Dat Brahmans of the village were governed by custom and not by Hindu Law. In the case of Brij Lal v Sarja Nand (1), the rule laid down was that Brahmans were essentially Hindus and non-agriculturists and that the burden of proving that they had in any particular departed from their personal law and had adopted rules prevailing among their agricultural neighbours rested upon those who asserted it. The same rule has been recently laid down in the case of Salig Ram v. Badhawa (2). The head-note* sums up the rule in the following words:—

"That the initial presumption in the case of Brahmans is that they are governed by their personal law, and that the mere fact that a family or tribe has departed from its personal law in one respect does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that it has adopted agricultural custom in other respects."

Mr. Ralli has relied upon the following rulings among others and has asked us to hold that, inasmuch as the Dat Brahmans of the village Damun Chak were shown to have formed a compact body and to have carried on cultivation they were governed by agricultural custom:—

(1) Bishen Das v. Ram Dhan (3). The ruling is distinguishable, because in that case the Brahmans had given up their priestly profession, while the contrary has been proved in this case.

2. Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti (4). In this case instances of custom in the family were cited and proved.

3. Jai Ram v. Sardar Singh (5). In this case it was established that the Brahmans had given up their priestly profession and it was proved that daughters were excluded from succession.

4. Tahl Das v. Malik Singh (6). In this case the custom was not established and the collaterals' suit was dismissed. We fail to understand why the learned Counsel has relied upon this case.

The present case is fully governed by the recent ruling in the case of Salig Ram v. Badhawa (2). In our opinion the learned Judge of the Court below has arrived at a correct conclusion.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The passage from Dicey's Parties to an Action, page 134 (1870 Edition) apparently deals with a similar case, the only authority mentioned being Leake on Contracts, page 302. The view we are adopting is in accordance with Daniel's Negotiable Instruments, s. 1187, latter part. There is no section about payee like s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, in respect of maker and the general principles of the Law of Agency apply. The principal is disclosed in this case.

It is open to the defendant to prove that, at the time of the execution of the note, Ramaswami Naidu was not an agent of plaintiff and did not take the note for the plaintiff. It is also open to the defendant to prove payment to Ramaswami Naidu. The Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the suit is maintainable and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 582 OF 1925.

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Appeal, second—Finding of fact—Documentary evidence, construction of, whether question of law—Ala maliks—Shamilat, rights in.

The question of the construction of documentary evidence, apart from the construction of a document of title which is the foundation of a claim, is one of fact and not of law and cannot be agitated in second appeal. [p. 1048, col. 2.]

Gupta Nand Bharthi v. Hari Shankar, 78 Ind. Cas. 1016; (1925) A. I. R. (A.) 39, relied on.

The expression "construction" as applied to a document includes two things, namely, the meaning of the words and their legal effect. The meaning of the words in all cases is a question of fact but the legal effect of the words is a question of law. [ibid.]

Dal Singh v. Pluiman, 80 Ind. Cas. 264; (1923) A. I. R. (L.) 626, followed.The question whether an ala malik is or is not entitled to rights in the shamilat is not a question of law. Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 24th November 1924, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Kangra, dated the 25th May 1923.

Messrs. Gullu Ram and Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Mian Devi Chand sued Colonel Sir Jai Chand, Raja of Lambagraon; and the Secretary of State for India for a declaration that he should be declared jagirdar and ala malik co-sharer in the shamilat of 11 tikas in village Kotlu, Tahsil Palampur, District Kangra, to the extent of his jagir in these tikas and that he was entitled to share the income from the shamilat in the above proportion. The Raja inter alia pleaded that the plaintiff was a jagirdar and ala malik only in those lands which were in the occupation of his adna maliks, and that he had nothing to do with the shamilat. It was further pleaded that in the case of tika ban banjar the plaintiff was neither owner nor ala malik in that tika.

Issue No. 2 was whether the plaintiff was an owner and co-sharer with the Raja in the rights in dispute. The lower Court held that he had no rights in tika ban banjar and that as regards the other tikas he was ala malik only and had no right to the shamilat or its income. He found that the original sanad was not produced and that undoubtedly the Settlement entries of 1868 and of the last settlement were against the plaintiff's claim, though at the second Settlement of 1891-92 there were some entries against which an appeal was filed by the Raja and as stated in the second part of para. 91, page 53, of the final report of the revised Settlement of 1897 that appeal was accepted and it was ordered that the former entries of 1868 should be restored though this was not done. He came to the conclusion that those entries of 1891-92 were an interpolation.

The learned Additional Judge has come to the same finding on the above point and on all other points as did the Trial Court. As regards the entries of 1891-92 he could not understand how these entries had ever been made in face of the remarks in the revised Settlement report of 1897 already referred to. He further held that whether or not there had been some interpolation in 1891-92 the document in question could not be relied upon as there was no foundation for the making of those entries. He further held that the document relied upon was inconsistent and indefinite.

On the above finding and also on other grounds the Courts below concurred in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has filed this second appeal relying principally on the entries already discussed in the Settlement of 1891-92. It was contended, however, that no second appeal lay on this ground. In Durga Chowdhani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (1), it was held "that there was no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be". The Allahabad High Court held in Gupta Nand Bharthi v. Hari Shankar (2) "that the question of the construction of documentary evidence, apart from the construction of a document of title which is the foundation of a claim, is one of fact and not of law and cannot be agitated in second appeal". The Lahore High Court held in Dal Singh v. Pluiman (3) "that the expression 'construction' as applied to a document includes two things, namely, the meaning of the words and their legal effect. The meaning of the words is in all cases a question of fact and the effect of the words is a question of law." The document in question has been held by the learned Additional District Judge to be inconsistent and indefinite though he also held that the words "two parties" referred to the Raja and the zemindars and not to the plaintiff. This is a finding of fact which cannot be challenged on second appeal. Besides, there is other documentary evidence which is clearly against the appellants' claim and which both the Courts below were entitled to consider. There is no evidence that the rights claimed were ever exercised. I would, therefore, hold that no second appeal lies.

It is also clear that the contention that an ala malik must be presumed to have rights in the shamilat is not a question of law. It was laid down in Sultan Ali v. Amir (4) that where the lower Appellate Court had after full consideration of all the evidence including the terms of the sale-deed found that the ancestor of the defendant did not acquire a right to a proportionate share in the shamilat such finding was one of fact. Similarly it was held in Muhammad Ali v. Amir Khan (5) that where the deed of sale was silent on the point the question whether a pro rata share in the shamilat was intended to be conveyed to the vendee was not one of the construction of the deed and consequently could not be gone into in second appeal. In the recent case the original sanad has not been produced. It follows from these rulings that a share of the shamilat does not necessarily go to a particular proprietor. See also Diwan Chand v. Sundar (6). In the present case there is a clear finding of fact that the plaintiff is not entitled to the shamilat rights he claims and that finding is based on evidence properly considered and discussed.

I accordingly reject this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Decree in favour of minor—Transfer by guardian ad litem without sanction of Court—Transfer, whether void or voidable—Third party, right of, to question validity.

Under O. XXXII, r. 7, C. P. C., the guardian ad litem of a minor is not entitled to transfer a decree in favour of the minor without the sanction of the Court. But such a transaction is not void but only voidable at the instance of the minor, that is, the minor alone can avoid the transaction on attaining majority if he thinks fit, or even earlier if some guardian on his behalf thinks fit, to establish its invalidity.

But a third party is not entitled to intervene in the transaction and to plead that it is void ab initio when neither of the parties to the transaction accept that contention.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in A. S. No. 7 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada, in O. S. No. 125 of 1919.

Mr. G. Lakshmanan, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question at issue in this appeal is, whether the transfer of the decree in favour of the second defendant by his guardian ad litem to the first defendant is valid and whether the plaintiff is entitled to contend that it shall be deemed invalid. The lower Courts have found that the transfer was not a fraudulent or colourable transaction and consequently the plaintiff cannot avoid it as being a transaction in fraud of creditors, but it is contended that inasmuch as the guardian ad litem did not obtain the sanction of the Court to the transfer it is void. This question has been considered in this Court and it has been held in Kancherla Kanakayya v. Mulpuru Kottayya (1), that the sanction of the Court to such a transfer, even after a decree is necessary and in this it follows the prior decision in Davud Routhar v. Paramaswami Pillai (2) which itself follows Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (3).

Order XXXII, r. 7 (2), C. P. C., does not say that a transaction in which the sanction of the Court has not been obtained shall be void, but that it shall be voidable as against all parties other than the minor. That means that the minor can avoid the transaction on attaining majority if he thinks fit, or even earlier if some guardian on his behalf thinks fit, to establish its invalidity. This has been held in Ishan Chandra Kundu v. Nilratan Adhikari (4), Phulwanti Kunwar v. Janeshar Das (5) and Jita Singh v. Man Singh (6).

(1) 63 Ind. Cas. 285; 41 M. L. J. 75; 13 L. W. 637; (1921) M. W. N. 437.

(2) 35 Ind. Cas. 70; 31 M. L. J. 207.

(5) 83 Ind. Cas. 782; 22 A. L. J. 521; 46 A. 575; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 625; L. R. 5 A. 785 Civ.

It is now urged for the respondents that although the transaction is only voidable as against all parties other than the minor, it is absolutely void as against the minor, but this cannot be so, otherwise the minor could not ratify it, if it were void ab initio.

Then there seems to be no ground for allowing a third party to intervene in a transaction of this sort and to plead that it is void ab initio when neither of the parties to the transaction accept that contention. The transaction must be either ratified or impeached by the minor and it is not open in this case for the plaintiffs to say that it is not valid. The plaintiffs cannot consequently set aside this transaction and their suit, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs throughout.

An application for the substitution of the names of the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor on the record in place of the deceased may be made to the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution, and operates to extend limitation under cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. In any case the fact that the application is not made to the Court which passed the decree is a mere irregularity which is covered by s. 99 of the C. P. C., and does not render the application altogether invalid for the purposes of extending limitation. [p. 1051, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where in such an application the name of the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor is not correctly given under a bona fide mistake, the application is nevertheless one to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182 of

Sch. I to the Limitation Act and operates to extend limitation. [ibid.]

[Case-law considered.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 1st July 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujranwala, dated the 15th February 1924.

Dr. Shuja-ud-Din, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 30th of July 1916 Bulaki Mal obtained a money-decree from a Lahore Court against Fazal Hussain. The first application for execution of this decree was made on the 16th of June 1917. The execution case was then transferred under a certificate to a Court at Gujranwala on the 18th of October 1916. On the 9th of August 1917 the record was consigned to the record room. In the meantime Fazal Hussain, the judgment-debtor, had died on the 11th of June 1918. On the 19th of April 1920 second application for execution was made against the son of the deceased judgment-debtor who was described as Rahmat Ullah under the guardianship of his mother Musammat Hussain Bibi. This application was made to the Executing Court at Gujranwala. A prayer was made in this application to have the name of Rahmat Ullah substituted as the son and the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. A house was attached, and it is stated that $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of it was sold by auction and was purchased by a third party. This sale, however, was set aside on the 11th of January 1922, on the application of a third party who claimed the ownership of the house. This was done with the consent of the decree-holder. The present application for execution was made on the 25th of October 1922, against the son of the judgment-debtor who is now described as Inayat Ullah son of Fazal Hussain under the guardianship of his mother Musammat Begam Bibi. The execution of the decree was objected to on the following grounds, namely, (1) that the application for the substitution of the name of the son as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor ought to have been made to the Lahore Court which had passed the decree; and (2) that as Rahmat Ullah whose name was mentioned in the application of the 19th of April 1920, was not the son of the deceased judgment-debtor that application in the eye of the law was irregular and had no legal effect and that consequently the present application is barred by time.

On the first question there is a conflict of authority. The Madras and Allahabad High Courts are of opinion that an application for the substitution of the name of the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor ought to be made to the Court which had passed the decree (s. 50 of the C. P. C.); while, on the other hand, the Calcutta High Court has ruled that the application can be made to the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution and that in any case if the application is not made to the Court passing the decree it is a mere irregularity which is covered by s. 99 of the C. P. C. (s. 578 of the old Code, 1882). The objectors cited the cases of Seth Shapurji Nana Bhai v. Sankar Dat Dube (1), Madho Prasad v. Kesho Prasad (2) and Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (3) in support of their objections. The decree-holder relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sulan Sircar (4).

On the second question the decree-holder relied upon the case of Bipin Behari Mittar v. Bibi Zohra (5).

Sardar Sewa Singh, Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujranwala, gave effect to the objections and dismissed the application for execution as barred by time.

On appeal Mr. Ganga Ram, the learned District Judge, preferred to follow the ruling of the Calcutta High Court and held that the application for substitution had rightly been made to the Execution Court at Gujranwala and that in any case the irregularity was covered by s. 99 of the C. P. C. On the second question also the learned District Judge adopted the view expressed in Bipin Behari Mittar v. Bibi Zohra (5), and held that, though the name of the son of Fazal Hussain judgment-debtor was incorrectly given the application dated the 19th of April 1920, must be treated as a step-in-aid of execution according to law. The appeal was allowed, the application for execution was held to be within time and the case was remanded with the direction that the execution of the decree should proceed according to law.

Against this order the present appeal has been preferred and both the contentions raised in the Courts below have been put forward before us by Mr. Shuja-ud-din the learned Counsel for the judgment-debtor. We have no hesitation in holding that the view taken by the Calcutta High Court being more consonant with justice is correct, and, following that ruling, we hold that the application for substitution made in 1920, cannot be treated as being wholly ineffectual. We are also in accord with the view expressed by the Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Bipin Behari Mittar v. Bibi Zohra (5) and we hold that application of the 19th of April 1920 was a step-in-aid of execution according to law, and the present application not barred by time.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom—Estate of male proprietor in hands of female heir—Estate, whether liable for satisfaction of decree passed against previous male holder—Widow, whether reversioner.

Under the Customary Law of the Punjab property in the hands of the mother of a deceased proprietor is liable to attachment in execution of a decree obtained by a creditor in respect of a debt incurred by a previous male holder of the estate. [p. 1053, cols. 1 & 2.]

A female heir who derives her title to the estate of a deceased male proprietor by virtue of her marriage into the family of the deceased holder of the estate cannot be regarded as a reversioner of the deceased. [p. 1053, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 31st October 1924.

Lala Badri Dass, R. B., for the Appellant.

Moulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was instituted against one Udham Singh for recovery of Rs. 13,633. Udham Singh died during the pendency of the suit and his son Balwant Singh was substituted as defendant. Balwant Singh also died and his son Harmohan Singh was substituted in his place. Harmohan Singh also died and Sardarni Gopal Kaur widow of Balwant Singh and the mother of Harmohan Singh was substituted as defendant and a decree passed against the estate of the deceased Udham Singh. When the decree-holder attempted to execute the decree by the attachment of the property in the hands of Sardarni Gopal Kaur, he was met by an objection by the lady that the estate, not being charged with the debt of Udham Singh, came to her in her own rights as a reversioner and could not, therefore, be attached in execution of the decree. Reliance was placed on Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) and on Bur Chand v. Gopal Kaur (2). The learned Subordinate Judge upheld the objection of Sardarni Gopal Kaur and dismissed the application for execution of the decree. The decree-holder appeals to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the decree-holder that the judgment in Bur Chand v. Gopal Kaur (2), not being inter partes, is not res judicata and that Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) is distinguishable from the present case because in that case the property sought to be attached was in the hands of reversioners and the widow is not a reversioner. A widow, the learned Counsel says, does not claim through any common ancestor but derives her interest by virtue of her marriage with the judgment-debtor and it is, therefore, claimed that the present case is governed by Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (3), in which it was held that "where a male proprietor governed by Customary Law has contracted a debt, in respect of which a simple money-decree has been passed against him, and thereafter has died leaving ancestral landed property, which has come into the possession of his widow on the usual life-estate, such property is liable to be attached at the instance of the deceased proprietor's judgment-creditor in execution of his money-decree." In that case Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) was considered and distinguished and the question was propounded whether the widow was to be considered the next holder as the term was used in the 1913 ruling and the following answer was given:—

"The tenure of the widow is very different from that of the reversioner both in its nature and in its origin. The widow's life-tenure originated in her right to maintenance but though originally her right was one only of maintenance which in course of time became a right to the enjoyment of the whole estate, whether it exceeded her needs or not, it is not now disputable that her right is to the whole estate.

That right she derives from her marriage; she is her husband's representative and so far has this principle been carried that in many tribes she represents her husband even in collateral succession.

Had her husband remained in existence, he could not have resisted attachment of his property. How then can his widow who derives all her right from her husband, claim a privilege which her husband did not enjoy."

On these grounds it was held that the property was attachable.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has relied upon Mikor v. Chhaju Ram (4) in addition to the ruling already referred to. In that case the rule laid down in Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) was re-affirmed. LeRossignol, J., who was one of the Judges who sat on the Full Bench in Mikor v. Chhaju Ram (4) doubted the desirability or utility of laying down the abstract proposition contained in Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) and was of opinion that the earlier ruling was misleading in that it laid down one universal principle and appeared to hold that all the incidents of the tenure of a male owner of ancestral landed property had been exhaustively ascertained. But finally he agreed with the opinion of Chevis, J., who agreed with the earlier judgment. Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (3) which is also a judgment by LeRossignol, J., was not referred to in Mikor v. Chhaju Ram (4) probably that was not necessary. The status of a female heir in the Punjab is quite different to that of the male proprietors; one important difference is that females are not ordinarily entitled to contest alienations made by males: see Zenab v. Shah Nawaz Khan (5).

The learned Counsel for the appellant relied also on Kishen Singh v. Rahmat Bibi (6) in which it was held that "as a daughter is not an agnate and derives her title not from the common ancestor but from her father...she represents her father and his estate in her hands is liable for his debts." Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) was distinguished in that case also. On the strength of these judicial pronouncements it is claimed on behalf of the appellant that the estate being in the hands of the mother of a deceased proprietor who cannot be called an agnate and who derives her title by virtue of her marriage in the family is liable to attachment in payment of debts incurred by a previous male holder of the estate. The learned Counsel for the respondent sought to distinguish the authorities relied upon on behalf of the appellant on the ground that the original debtor in this case was Udham Singh and that between Udham Singh and Sardarni Gopal Kaur two male heirs, i. e., Balwant Singh and Harmohan Singh intervened and that, therefore, Musammatt Gopal Kaur stepped into the shoes of her husband and her son respectively and further that by virtue of Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1), the estate not being attachable in the hands of Balwant Singh and Harmohan Singh in payment of the debts of Udham Singh, it was equally not liable to attachment in the hands of the person, that is Sardarni Gopal Kaur who represents them. At first sight this contention seems to be plausible one but, in my opinion, there is no force in it. The real question to be decided is whether the person, who is in possession of the estate and who objects to its attachment is a reversioner that is whether she derives her title from the common ancestor of herself and the judgment-debtor. This cannot be predicated about any female heir at least not of one who derived her title by virtue of her marriage in the family of the deceased holder of the estate and that was the ratio decidendi in Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (3) and Kishen Singh v. Rahmat Bibi (6). The point is not free from difficulty but I think no difference is made by the fact that the son and the grandson of Udham Singh inherited the property before it came into possession of Sardarni Gopal Kaur.

I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that the land left by Udham Singh and in the hands of Sardarni Gopal Kaur is liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree against the estate of Udham Singh and I remand the case to the learned Subordinate Judge with directions to proceed with the execution of the decree in accordance with law.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 18—Insolvency jurisdiction of High Court—Stay of proceedings in Subordinate Courts.

Under s. 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the High Court in its insolvency jurisdiction has power to stay proceedings pending before a Mofussil Court subordinate to the High Court.

Appeal from the judgment and order of Mr. Justice Waller, dated the 3rd November 1924, passed in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court, in I. P. No. 299 of 1924.

FACTS.—The Official Assignee representing the estate of an insolvent applied by Judge's summons to His Lordship Mr. Justice Waller sitting in the Original Side to direct stay of the proceedings in O. S. No. 52 of 1924 on the file of the Sub-Court, Kumbakonam, pending the further orders of the High Court and also to give the Official Assignee leave to take such proceedings as may be found necessary against the Zemindar of Udayarpalayam in respect of certain properties. The question was then raised as to the power of the High Court sitting in insolvency to stay suits in Subordinate Courts. His Lordship Mr. Justice Waller held that the objection to jurisdiction must be sustained and that the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act has no power of supervision over the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam, that s. 18 did not apply and that the proper course for the Official Assignee was to apply to the Sub-Court under s. 18 (3) of the Act. The Official Assignee appealed.

Mr. Varadarajalu Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—This is a matter clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 18 corresponding to the familiar section of the English Bankruptcy Act, whereby cases of this kind are transferred as a matter of course every day and every one who has ever had any experience of these matters will be quite familiar with it.

The appeal must be allowed and the learned Judge must exercise the jurisdiction which he has held that he did not possess. Costs on the original scale.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree.

Railway Company—Carriage of goods—Goods consigned to Railway Company, loss of—Suit for damages—Wilful misconduct—Burden of proof.

In a suit to recover damages from a Railway Company for the loss of goods consigned to the Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" the burden lies upon the plaintiff to prove that his case falls within the exceptions laid down in the Risk Note. The refusal of the Railway Company to account for the loss of the goods does not justify the Court in holding that the loss must have arisen from the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 1st December 1924.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioners.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th February 1923, 168 tins of ghi were delivered at Kaithal to the defendant Railway Company for despatch to the plaintiffs at Amritsar, but when the goods reached the consignees at Amritsar, 10 tins of ghi were found missing. The question is whether the defendant Company are liable for the loss caused to the plaintiffs.

The contract between the parties is contained in what is called Risk Note Form B, and the goods were despatched at a reduced rate upon the condition that the Railway Company shall not be liable for loss, etc., unless the loss is due "either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants." It is obviously the duty of the plaintiffs to prove that their case falls within the aforesaid exception and this they have failed to do. There is no direct evidence to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to the theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, and the circumstances relied upon by plaintiffs are inconclusive.

As pointed out by the House of Lords in Smith, Limited v. Great Western Railway (1) even the refusal of the Railway Company to account for the loss of the goods cannot justify the Court in holding that the loss arose from the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants.

The learned Judge, of the Small Cause Court has, upon a consideration of all the relevant circumstances, come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove any wilful neglect or theft which would bring the case within the exception contained in the Risk Note and his finding cannot be impeached in revision.

The application for revision is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Election petition—Election rules—Voter writing candidate's name on ballot paper—Vote, validity of—Misconstruction of rule—Refusal to apply rule—Revision—Interference by High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

One of the rules regulating the conduct of elections in Madras is that the voter should only place his mark on the ballot paper against the name of the candidate for whom he wants to vote and should not write his own name or the name of the candidate on the ballot paper. A voter who writes the name of the candidate on the ballot paper against the space left for the cross-mark commits a breach of the election rules. These rules are not merely directory but mandatory and a violation of these rules nullifies the vote and such a vote should be declared invalid.

The fact that a lower Court in dealing with an election dispute has misconstrued an election rule, is not a proper ground for interference with its decision in revision. Where, however, the Court has refused to apply a certain rule on the ground that the rules should not be strictly construed in the case of illiterate voters its decision is open to revision.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Anantapur, dated the 31st August 1922, in O. P. No. 21 of 1922.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the District Judge of Anantapur, declining to set aside an election on the ground of violation of the rules.

The petitioner's allegation in the petition was that one of the voters, instead of making a cross against the name of the candidate, wrote his name (the candidate's name) in the space provided, and that this was against the rules governing elections. The learned Judge held, that it would be inexpedient to construe too strictly the rules regulating the conduct of unlettered persons like many of these voters. One of these rules regulating the conduct of elections, is, that the voter should only place his mark against the name of the candidate for whom he wants to vote, but should not write his own name or the name of the candidate, for, by doing so the very object of the secret ballot will be lost. It is essential that in the case of secret ballot that it should not be known for whom a particular voter recorded his vote. It is admitted that a voter who writes the name of the candidate against the space left for the cross mark commits a breach of the election rules. These rules are not merely directory but mandatory. The violation of these rules nullifies the vote, and such vote should be declared invalid. The contention of Mr. Ramadoss for the respondent is, that this is a revision under s. 115 and the learned Judge has neither exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law nor has he declined to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him. If the learned Judge has only misconstrued the rule, it would not be a proper ground for interference; but he seems to think that the rule should not be strictly construed in the case of illiterate voters. Whether the voters are literate or illiterate, the rule is the same. That being so, I think this is a case for this Court to interfere. It is very unfortunate that this matter comes up nearly two and half years, after the date of the election. It is said that an order now passed would unseat the respondent and would entitle the petitioner to a seat. Considering that the result turned upon a single vote, I think this is a case in which the lower Court's order should be set aside. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and the result will be that the petitioner will be declared elected and he will be entitled to take his seat and the respondent will lose his seat.

The petitioner will be entitled to costs only in this Court.

Hindu Law—Marriage—Widow, re-marriage of—Ceremonies, necessary—Anand marriage, validity of—Anand Marriage Act (VII of 1909), applicability of.

The Anand Marriage Act of 1909 is an enabling and not a disabling Act and it does not follow that because that Act does not apply to a particular marriage solemnized according to the anand ceremony, the marriage is not a valid one.

It is not necessary for the validity of the marriage of a Khatrî widow that all the usual ceremonies which have to be performed in the case of a Khatrî girl on her first marriage should be performed. In such a case if the parties go through such ceremonies as they can reasonably arrange for and clearly and unequivocally express their intention to enter into the marriage relation with each other and as a fact thereafter live together as husband and wife, such union is a valid marriage.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 11th October 1924, reversing that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 18th August 1924.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that she was not the wife of the defendant Daulat Ram who alleged that she had married him after the death of her first husband. She was given a decree by the Trial Court but the District Judge on appeal dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiff had been married to the defendant, the marriage having been solemnized according to the Anand ceremony, that she lived with him as his wife and that the marriage was valid.

It is contended for the plaintiff in second appeal that as the defendant Daulat Ram is a Khatrî and not a Sikh the marriage is invalid, the Anand Marriage Act VII of 1909 not being applicable to a marriage between persons not professing the Sikh religion. But as observed by the learned District Judge, Act VII of 1909 is an enabling and not a disabling Act and it does not follow that because that Act does not apply the marriage is not a valid one. In Lal Chand v. Thakur Devi (1), it was held that it is not necessary for the validity of a marriage by a Khatrî widow that all the usual ceremonies which have to be performed in the case of a Khatrî girl on her first marriage should be performed and that in such cases if the parties go through such ceremonies as they can reasonably arrange for and clearly and unequivocally express their intention to enter into the marriage relation with each other and as a fact thereafter live together as husband and wife, such a union is a valid marriage. I agree with the learned Judge that this ruling is in point and that the marriage solemnized between the parties in the Anand form was a valid marriage.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

An attachment does not interrupt adverse possession or rather possession which is ripening into adverse possession.

Per Phillips, J.—Obiter dicta.—Adverse possession is not disturbed except by actual ouster.

An attachment under Ch. XII of the Cr. P. C. implies an actual taking possession of the property by the Magistrate or by some one under his orders.

Per Odgers, J.—Symbolical possession is sufficient to interrupt adverse possession when the adverse possessor is a party to the execution proceedings in which the symbolical possession is given. But as regards persons not so parties, only actual dispossession can interrupt their adverse possession.

An attachment does not physically interrupt the possession of persons already on the property and it cannot be said even theoretically to do so. M RENGANATHA IYER v. SRINIVASA IYENGAR, 22 L. W. 274; 49 M. L. J. 656; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 42 1037

Where a tenant is in possession of land and the landlord has not the immediate right of re-entry, any assertion of title by the tenant would not make time run against the landlord, for the reason that the landlord cannot claim any redress so long as he is not entitled to get possession of the land. The real fact which makes the Law of Limitation run against the landlord is that he is entitled to immediate possession.

In a suit for possession of land, a mere assertion of tenancy does not deprive the tenant from pleading limitation and it is open to him in the first place, to plead that the land was comprised in his tenancy, and, in the second place to assert that if the tenancy is not established, as he has held possession of the land for more than 12 years, the right of the plaintiff to recover possession has been extinguished by the Law of Limitation. C KHATEMY CHHAIKUDDIN v. The report of a Commissioner under O. XXVI, r. 10, C. P. C., cannot be regarded as a document, the construction of which involves a point of law for the purposes of a second appeal.

----- Custom, whether question of law or fact—Finding, whether can be questioned—Wajib-ul-arz, erroneous rejection of.

A question as to the existence of a custom is one of mixed fact and law. The question whether the facts found in any given instance prove the existence of the essential attribute of a custom or usage is a question of law and in second appeal an enquiry is permitted to be made whether all the attributes of a legal custom have been established or not by the evidence which is accepted by the lower Appellate Court.

Where a lower Appellate Court in deciding whether a custom does or does not exist has rejected a wajib-ul-arz on an erroneous view of the law, it is open to the High Court to interfere with the finding of the lower Appellate Court in second appeal. O RAZA HUSAIN KHAN v. ----- Finding of fact involving conclusions of law, whether can be questioned—Appellate Court, duty of.

The finality given by law to a finding of fact arrived at by a Court of first appeal renders it necessary that the finding should be arrived at after due circumspection and be expressed in clear and definite terms.

A party to an appeal is entitled to claim a clear, definite and specific finding on every issue of fact raised in the case, and if the finding is vague, indefinite or ambiguous, it is but right to insist on such a finding being given or to send an issue back in order that the question of fact might be determined on findings adduced in a manner not open to misconstruction or doubt.

While findings of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal, the soundness of conclusions drawn from any facts may involve matters of law and may be questioned in such appeal. A CHANNU DUTTAVYAS v. SWAMI GYANNANDJI MAHARAJ, A. I. R. 1926 All. 130 976

----- Finding of fact—Documentary evidence, construction of, whether question of law—Ala maliks—Shamilat, rights in.

The question of the construction of documentary evidence, apart from the construction of a document of title which is the foundation of a claim, is one of fact and not of law and cannot be agitated in second appeal.

The expression "construction" as applied to a document includes two things, namely, the meaning of the words and their legal effect. The meaning of the words in all cases is a question of fact but the legal effect of the words is a question of law.

The question whether an ala malik is or is not entitled to rights in the shamilat is not a question of law. L DEVI CHAND v. JAI CHAND, A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 21 1047

The mere fact that upon the documents and evidence placed before the learned District Judge the High Court would have come to a different conclusion is no ground for second appeal; it is precisely this revision of evidence which is excluded by the limited character of a second appeal.

If there is evidence to be considered the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be when examined, must stand final.

Actual signatures of the parties to a submission to arbitration are immaterial provided that the agreement is in writing and there is evidence that its terms are assented to by both the parties.

A submission is not invalid merely because an arbitrator or an umpire is to sit in judgment on his own acts, if parties with their eyes open chose to agree to a submission providing for a reference to such an arbitrator or umpire, unless it be shown that the arbitrator or umpire has made up his mind so as not to be open to change it upon argument.

An agreement to refer a dispute to arbitration providing for a reference at the option of one of the parties is still an agreement within the meaning of s. 4 of the Arbitration Act,

Arbitration Act—concl'd.

Where it is contended that a clause in a contract providing for the submission of disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration is not enforceable on account of the plea of the defendant that the contract is void and impossible of performance, the true test to apply is whether what is alleged by the defendant is something which gives the go-by to the contract, that is to say, which arises and exists independently of the contract and avoids it by its own force, or whether what is alleged is some ground of defence arising upon the contract itself. In the former case alone the submission would be unenforceable. S MULCHAND SOBHRAJ v. RADHAKISHIN PARUMAL, A. I. R. 1926 Sind 27 932

Attorney, duties of—Duty to Court—Breach of duty—High Court, disciplinary jurisdiction of—"Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta," whether can move High Court.

An attorney, being an officer of the Court, owes a duty to the Court, as well as to his client.

The "Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta" is competent to bring a breach of his duties by an attorney to the attention of the High Court, when the matter is brought to its notice.

The plaintiff in a suit, who had obtained an attachment of certain furniture before judgment, stored it at premises belonging to a charitable trust, under arrangement with the trustees. The furniture was sold after some months by the Sheriff, who realized the sale-proceeds. A claim was then made by the trustees upon the plaintiff for rent amounting to Rs. 3,250. The attorney who was acting for the plaintiff, thereupon, wrote to the Sheriff, asking for the amount to pay the rent, and enclosing the bill. The Sheriff sent the amount. The plaintiff, however, did not wish to pay the amount to the landlords, and, on his instructions, the attorney wrote a letter to the trustees repudiating all liability in respect of the rent of the premises, but "as a matter of grace" enclosing a cheque for Rs. 474 as a donation to the trust. The trustees brought the matter to the notice of the "Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta", and the latter moved the High Court in the matter:

Held, (1) that the attorney made a serious mistake in making himself a party to the course adopted by his client, and that although it was not suggested that there was any moral turpitude on his part, yet he was guilty of a breach of the duty which he owed to the Court;

(2) that having regard to the way in which the money was obtained from the Sheriff, and the purpose for which it was obtained, the attorney should have insisted on his client paying the money to the landlords in full, or returning it to the Sheriff. C In the matter of ATTORNEYS, 29 C. Bengal Ghatwali Lands Act (V of 1859)—Bengal Ghatwali Lands Regulation XXIX of 1814—Birbhum ghatwalis—Zemindar and ghatwal, relation between—Minerals, right to—Ghatwal, whether can be maurashi mokarraridar—Lease by zemindar, whether includes mineral rights.

A person may be a maurashi mokarraridar and also a ghatwal.

Bengal Ghatwali Lands Act (V of 1859) applies only to ghatwalis within the meaning of Bengal Ghatwali Lands Regulation XXIX of 1814 and even with regard to them it does not confer the mineral rights but merely proceeds on the assumption (which may be erroneous) that they have those rights.

The distinction between a ghatwali within the meaning of Bengal Ghatwali Lands Regulation XXIX of 1814 and a ghatwali which is outside the Regulation is that in the former case there is no tenure between the zemindar and the ghatwal who holds direct from the Government, while in the latter such a tenure exists. In the former case while the lands of the ghatwali are still deemed to be within the zemindari, the zemindar no longer pays the Government revenue for them and has, therefore, no claim to the underground rights; his only right connected with these lands is to receive the difference between the rent paid by the ghatwal and the amount of the Government revenue which was assessed on that part of the zemindari. If the Government does not claim the mineral rights, there is no one to whom they can belong but the ghatwal. In the latter case, however, the zemindar still pays the Government revenue on the lands and if the ghatwal claims the minerals he must show some transaction which grants the minerals either expressly or by necessary implication.

The zemindar is not divested of the mineral rights by a lease of the land unless the minerals are expressly granted. PAT SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRAVARTY v. SUSHILA BALA DAS, 4 Pat. 799; A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 103 513

In a suit to set aside the sale of an estate, held by a Collector under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, on the ground that no arrears were due from the estate, the plaintiff must make out a prima facie case by showing that no arrears were actually unpaid on the date of the sale. C MEAH v. — s. 37—Revenue sale—Purchaser, rights of—Structures on land, whether pass by sale—Structures, whether encumbrance.

What passes at a revenue sale is the land or the share in the land and not the structures or buildings thereon.

The rights of a purchaser at a revenue sale are radically different from those of a purchaser at a voluntary sale.

Structures and buildings are not "encumbrances" within the meaning of s. 37 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act.

Where land is sold for arrears of revenue the owner of a house built on the land is entitled as against the auction-purchaser to reside in or enjoy the house paying an equitable ground rent for the site to such purchaser and that whether the house was built by a person holding under a lease granted by the former proprietor or by the ex-proprietor himself.

On the failure of an owner to pay the Government assessment his estate or interest in the land is determined and sold under the provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act. Under such a sale what is sold is not the interest of the defaulter owner, but the interest of the Crown, subject to the payment of the Government assessment. In a sale held under that Act the estate is sold in the condition in which it stood at the time of the settlement; the purchaser does not derive his title from the defaulting proprietor but takes the estate from the Crown in the state in which it was at its inception at the time of the settlement. C JATINDRA NATH ROY CHOWDHURY v. affected in view of the provisions of s. 195 (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The mere mention of a right to create a sub-lease in the patni lease does not vest the patnidar with a higher right than is granted to him under the Patni Law.

Sub-clause (2) of s. 11 of the Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation VIII of 1819 requires that in order that the zemindar should be bound by the sub-lease created by the patnidar, and to defeat the zemindari right to hold the tenure of his creation answerable in the state in which he created it for his rent, the patni lease must confer on the patnidar the right to create such an under-tenure as will bar this indefeasible right of the zemindar. C DURLAV CHANDRA CHOWDHURI v. In determining whether the status of a tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act is that of a tenure-holder or a raiyyat, what has to be considered is the purpose for which the land was granted and the extent of the tenancy. Where the original lease is inconclusive the attendant circumstances may be looked at for determining the purpose for which the tenancy was created.

The expression "jot wa abad karke wa krake" in a kabuliyat is consistent both with the status of a raiyyat and the status of a tenure-holder.

Though reclamation of the whole of a large jot by a settlement-holder and cultivation by his own ploughs may not be absolutely inconsistent with a tenure, it is entirely contrary to experience in the Province of Behar in cases where the tenancy is a tenure or the tenant proposes to settle raiyyats upon the land and become a rent receiver, more especially where the settlement-holder belongs to an agriculturist caste or tribe.

In a second appeal the High Court is not entitled to go behind the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court unless such findings result from the misconstruction of a document of title or the misapplication of law or procedure.

The trial by a Court of a suit beyond its pecuniary jurisdiction is not in itself a ground for setting aside its order on appeal unless the Appellate Court is satisfied that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits. PAT TARNI SINGH v. As soon as the lessee of a darpatni tenure transfers it in accordance with the provisions of ss. 11 and 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and ceases to have any estate, his liability for the payment of the rent ceases if that liability is based on the privity of estate. But if by the terms of the lease some further rights and liabilities, (e. g., security or charge for the payment of the darpatni rent) are created between the parties, they do not cease automatically on the transfer of the tenure and the termination of the relationship of landlord and tenant.

The rule against perpetuities affects only the creation of a future interest in property and the restricting of transfer of property by tying it up. The rule has no application to the case of a charge where a present interest is created and there is no transfer of an interest in property, but the property is merely made security for the payment of money. Therefore, where a charge or security is created as a part of the consideration for a darpatni lease, that charge or security is not extinguished on lessee's transfer of his interest under the lease. C KANAI LAL GHOSH v. ——— s. 22 (a)—Occupancy holding—Purchase by joint proprietor or tenure-holder, effect of—Lease in favour of third person—Under-raiyat of holding, status of—Lessee, whether entitled to recover rent.

Under s. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act when the occupancy right in a holding is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, such person has no right to hold the land as a raiyat but holds it as a proprietor or permanent tenure-holder as the case may be. Thereafter the raiyati holding ceases to exist and is merged in the superior right of the proprietor or the tenure-holder. Persons holding as under-raiyats under the original raiyat are in such a case automatically raised to the position of the raiyats of the holding under the proprietor or tenure-holder. If the proprietor or tenure-holder subsequently to his purchase lets out the holding to another person the latter does not become a landlord of the under-raiyats who have since the date of the purchase become the raiyats of the holding, and unless there is a grant of a right to collect rent from the tenants in favour of the transferee he is not entitled to sue the raiyats for the rent of the holding. C HOCHANUDDI v. ——— ss. 26, 183—Occupancy right acquired by under-raiyat, whether heritable—Custom, proof of.

The right of occupancy acquired by an under-raiyat is a right acquired by custom or usage and not by Statute, and before such right can be said to be heritable it must be proved by evidence that by custom or usage heritability is an incident of such right. The question is one of fact and not of law.

Per Cuming, J.—Ordinarily the interest of an under-raiyat holding on an annual holding is not heritable. All that his heirs get is the right to remain on the holding until the end of the agricultural year. If he holds under a lease his heirs are entitled to succeed him in the tenancy and can be ejected without notice at the expiry of the lease.

It is inaccurate to speak of an occupancy holding. The right of occupancy is a right peculiar to a particular person not to a particular parcel of land or holding, and is a personal right.

Whatever may be the origin of a right of occupancy, heritability of such a right is a creature of the Statute created by s. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and outside the Statute there is no heritability of such a right. To determine if the occupancy right of an under-raiyat is heritable the Court must look to the Act itself. Such a right has been deliberately excluded from the operation of s. 26, but it is open to the under-raiyat to prove that by custom or usage

the right is heritable. C SUDHANYA KUMAR DAS v. ISMAIL, 29 C. W. N. 733; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 956 844

A lease granted by a raiyat for a period of nine years stipulated for a rent which was more than the rent which the lessor was entitled to exact from the lessee under the provisions of s. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant agreed that if he did not pay the rent at the stipulated rate he was liable to be ejected without notice and the lease also contained a covenant for renewal if the lessee observed all the provisions of the lease. The lessee failed to pay rent at the rate stipulated in the lease and paid rent only at the rate at which he was liable to pay it under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. After the expiry of the period of the lease the lessor sued to eject the lessee from the land. The defendant objected that he was entitled to continue in possession of the land under the covenant for renewal contained in the lease:

Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

Held, per Greaves, J.—That the tenant having observed all the provisions of the lease which he was by law bound to observe, the mere fact that he had declined to pay rent at a rate at which he was not bound to pay by virtue of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not disentitle him from obtaining a renewal of the lease.

Per Cuming, J.—(1) That there was nothing illegal in the stipulation to pay rent at a rate higher than that recoverable under the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the contract providing for the payment of such rent was not void; the mere fact that it was not enforceable in law did not prevent it from being a condition of the contract of renewal, the failure to comply with which justified the lessor in not carrying out his part of the contract;

(2) that the tenant having failed to fulfil his part of the contract, viz., to pay the enhanced rent, the landlord was absolved from his part of the contract, viz., to grant a renewal of the lease;

(3) that the period of the lease having expired the landlord was entitled to eject the lessee from the land without any notice.

A person who has entered into a contract should be held to it unless it can be shown that the contract is contrary to some provision of the law or has been obtained by fraud or undue influence. C ASHRAF ALI v. ARMAN KHAN, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 162 893

Where a contract of tenancy is made not with reference to any boundaries or a specific block otherwise identifiable but for a certain area at a certain rental the area is of the essence of the contract and any subsequent excess found upon measurement renders the raiyat liable to pay additional rent under s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

For the purposes of s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is not always necessary to ascertain the area of the original grant and the rent thereby reserved. All that the landlord has to show is that the present area is greater than the area for which the rent was last paid. The onus is then shifted on the tenant to show that the excess land used previously to belong to the holding and was lost by diluvion or otherwise.

A jamabandi prepared by the landlord though not binding upon the tenant is admissible in evidence to show that since the creation of the tenancy rent has been assessed and that such assessment was on the basis of a certain area. PAT SIB SAHAI LAL v. In order that Art. 3 of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act may apply to a suit for recovery of tenancy land, there must be actual dispossession of the tenant by the landlord. The operation of the Article cannot be extended to the case of so-called constructive dispossession, where the landlord has never allowed the tenant to take possession of the land. C RAJANI KANTA BISWAS v. PANCHANON MONDAL 793

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 167—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 15 (2), 29—Suit against Municipality to recover refund of house tax—Limitation, commencement of—Notice, period of, whether can be excluded—Refusal to reconsider previous order, whether affords new cause of action.

Section 167 of the Bombay District Municipal Act prevents a claimant from commencing his suit after six months from the date of the act complained of and thereby expressly excludes time being extended under s. 15, cl. (2) of the Limitation Act. The period of a month's notice required to be given by the section cannot, therefore, be added to the said period of six months in counting the period of limitation.

Plaintiff's claim for the refund of a certain sum of money paid by him as Municipal house tax was rejected on the 29th March by the Managing Committee of the defendant Municipality, to whom the powers of the General Body with reference to such matters had been delegated. The resolution of the Managing Committee was communicated to the plaintiff in a letter by the Chief Officer of the Municipality dated 10th April which was received by the plaintiff on 22nd April. Thereafter the plaintiff again addressed the President and the members of the Municipality requesting them to re-consider the matter whereupon the papers were re-submitted to the Managing Committee who, on July 25th, refused to re-consider the matter. Plaintiff instituted a suit on 30th October for the recovery of the amount from the defendant Municipality:

Held, (1) that assuming that the period of limitation under s. 167 of the Bombay District Municipal Act commenced from 22nd April when the resolution of the Managing Committee was communicated to the plaintiff, the suit was barred by time under the provisions of that section;

(2) that the refusal by the Managing Committee to grant a refund and not its subsequent refusal to re-consider the matter was the act which afforded the plaintiff his cause of action and that the limitation for the suit commenced from the date of the refusal of the Managing Committee and not from the date of their refusal to re-consider their previous refusal. S REWACHAND FATEHCHAND v. Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), ss. 25, 25-A, 26, 79—Bombay General Clauses Act (I of 1904), s. 21—Disturbance—Compensation, levy of—Police charge, levy of—Suit for declaration of illegality of notification, whether maintainable—Irregularity in notification, effect of—"Final" in s. 25A (4), meaning of—Power of Courts to interfere with action of Government and District Magistrate.

Under s. 25 of the Bombay District Police Act Government has no power to call upon A to make a payment on behalf of B. It is open, however, to the Government under sub-s. (2) (b) of the section to charge any section or sections or class or classes of persons, and under the powers mentioned in s. 21 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, it is open to them to add to, amend, or vary a previous order on this point. So long as in substance the tax or rate is a tax or rate levied on another class of persons living within area concerned, it is within the legal authority of the Government to make the alteration.

The Court is not concerned with the propriety of the tax or rate; it is concerned only with its legality. It is for the Government to consider its propriety, as the Legislature has laid the obligation of determining the questions mentioned in the section upon that authority.

The mere fact that a notification, under s. 25 of the Bombay District Police Act, calls upon the Collector to collect the rate or tax imposed and does not in the first instance call upon the Municipality to pay the amount as required by sub-s. (4) of the section does not render the notification illegal. The direction to the Collector to make the collection is in the nature of an irregularity which does not affect the legality of the tax or rate imposed.

The express provision as to the finality of an order made by a District Magistrate under sub-s. (1) of s. 25-A of the Bombay District Police Act which is contained in sub-s. (4) of the section excludes the application of s. 21 of the Bombay General Clauses Act to such an order.

Quære:—Whether the Commissioner has power to revise such an order from time to time and to introduce changes into it?

Where, however, the District Magistrate has not yet made a requisition on the Collector under sub-s. (1) (b) of the section, the stage of finality contemplated by the provisions of sub-s. (4) has not been reached and the subject is still open to the District Magistrate.

It is for the District Magistrate with the previous sanction of the Commissioner to require the Collector under s. 25-A (1) (b) of the Bombay District Police Act, to recover the amount of compensation determined under the section in such proportions as he may, with the like sanction, draw from all inhabitants of the area declared under sub-s. (1) (a) (ii) or from any section or sections or class or classes of such persons and it is for the Government to determine the same questions under s. 25 of the Act with regard to Police charges. A Civil Court can interfere only when the discretion is exercised in such a manner as to enable the Court to say that it is not an exercise of the discretion within the meaning of these sections.

Section 25-A of the Bombay District Police Act does not provide for any enquiry as to an order under sub-s. (1) (b) of the section. The words "after such enquiry as he deems necessary" are to be found in sub-s. 1 (a) and do not govern cl. (b).

The omission to hold an enquiry departmentally arranged is not sufficient to vitiate a direction given by the District Magistrate under s. 25-A (1) (b). The provisions of s. 79 of the Bombay District Police Act would condone such an irregularity in the procedure.

An obligatory provision in a Statute cannot be allowed to be ignored without adequate grounds.

There is nothing in s. 25-A of the Bombay District Police Act to suggest that no fresh order can be passed by the District Magistrate in accordance with the revision of his first order by the Commissioner. The word "final" in sub-s. (4) of the section does not mean that the District Magistrate can only make his order under that section once and for all. The use of the word "final" merely excludes the jurisdiction of the Courts and not the power of the Commissioner or the District Magistrate to alter an order passed under the section.

The finality provided for an order under s. 25-A cl. (4) of the Bombay District Police Act means to give a final effect to the ultimate order which the District Magistrate, with the previous assent of the Commissioner may, subject to the revision of the Commissioner or in accordance with any such revision, pass. The clause is not intended to exclude the powers which by s. 21 of the Bombay General Clauses Act are included in a power to issue an order.

If a charge for Additional Police levied under s. 25 of the Bombay District Police Act is not a rate on property, it is a tax, however if may be described in the notification and is, therefore, within the powers of Government to levy under the section. Any objection to the form of such a notification is cured by s. 79 of the Bombay District Police Act.

The Courts are not concerned with whether Government or the District Magistrate have judged correctly the party who should pay the Police charge, or the amount of compensation under ss. 25 and 25-A of the Bombay District Police Act, provided the Government or the District Magistrate has exercised its or his judgment on the point. That is a matter left to Government under s. 25 and to the District Magistrate, with the previous sanction and subject to revision by the Commissioner, under s. 25-A. Section 25-A was not intended to permit the Court to enquire into the question as to who were the persons really responsible for the occurrences in respect of which the cess is levied. B BHAGCHAND v. Buddhist Law, Burmese—Ecclesiastical—Pongyis, duties of—Participation in politics, whether permissible.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law it is the bounden duty of the laity to do their utmost to discourage pongyis from transgressing the bonds which the vinaya lays down for them and the rules which, by donning the yellow robe, they voluntarily promised to observe. And it is the bounden duty of a pongyi who desires to participate in party politics to put off the yellow robe and re-assume the responsibilities as well as the privileges of ordinary civil life.

Pongyis are subject to the laws of the land they live in. If they are dissatisfied with such laws it is not for them to oppose the authorities but to move to other parts where the laws will be more congenial. So long as the civil laws are not in conflict with the rules to be observed by monks they must be obeyed by them.

According to Burman Buddhist ideas he who dons the yellow robe has one of two duties to perform:—

(1) to practise austerities and meditation in order to work out his own salvation; or

(2) to learn the sacred scriptures and to impart the knowledge to others.

Those who follow the first are known as Patibatti Sangha and those who adopt the second as Pariyatti Sangha.

When a pongyi belongs neither to the Pariyatti nor to the Patibatti, he is no longer entitled to live on the offerings of the laity, nor to receive respect from them. He has no raison d'être.

In attempting to oppose the orders of the executive a monk not only breaks his own personal law but sets an example to the laity which is greatly to be lamented. R MAUNG TOK v. EMPEROR, 3 R. 352; A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 354; 26 Cr. L. J. 1622 918

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), ss. 11, 12, 13, 14, 105—Hindu Law—Widow—Will of property inherited by widow, validity of—Occupancy holding, devise of—Ejectment, suit for—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A Hindu widow has only a restricted power of alienation over property which she has inherited from her husband. She has only a life-estate in such property and can make no disposition which would enure beyond her lifetime; much less she can make one which is to come into operation after her death.

A Hindu widow, therefore, who inherits an occupancy holding from her husband cannot make a testamentary disposition of it and thus defeat the provisions of s. 11 of the C. P. Tenancy Act.

The intention of enacting the law of tenancy in the Central Provinces was to recognize a tenant-right of a restricted character as regards its heritability, transferability and partibility under certain conditions and limitations; but it was never understood to carry with it the incident of devisability by Will at the instance of the tenant. It is property in which the interest carved out is more of a limited or personal character, than of a character conveying unlimited powers of disposition to the incumbent for the time being.

Where a transfer is invalid, irrespective of the provisions of the C. P. Tenancy Act, the Act is not called into operation; there is nothing upon which it can fasten; there is no legal transaction for the consideration of the Revenue Officers. In such a case the intended transferee is not a transferee at all and if he enters upon possession under colour of the transaction his entry is a trespass at civil law and he can be ejected from the land by a suit in the Civil Courts. The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain such a suit is not ousted by anything contained in ss. 12, 13, 14 and 105 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. N SHEODAYAL v. RAMPRASAD 247

— s. 37—Sir land—Person cultivating, status of—Lease of sir and khudkasht land—Landlord not taking part in cultivation—Lessee, ejectment of.

The status of a person cultivating the proprietor's sir land under s. 37 of the C. P. Tenancy Act is that of a sub-tenant and is not that of an ordinary or occupancy tenant. In spite of the fact that sir land was let out to a person along with other land under one set of conditions so as to constitute one holding the land is liable to be separated from the remainder of the holding and the landlord is entitled to a declaration that the person in possession of the sir land is liable to be ejected on partition by Revenue Officers.

If the malguzar has supplied no capital for or has not taken any part in the cultivation of the khudkasht land but has let it out on condition that he should be given half the produce, the contract is not that of a batai and the person cultivating becomes the occupancy tenant thereof. N GOKUL v. — s. 49, applicability of—Mortgage of sir land—Foreclosure before C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898—Compromise after Act—Occupancy rights in sir land, whether revived.

The respondent took a mortgage from the appellant under which some part of the property in dispute was mortgaged by way of conditional sale. He obtained a foreclosure decree on the mortgage which was made absolute before the coming into force of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898. Subsequently appellant brought a suit to have the foreclosure decree set aside. This suit ended in a compromise under which one portion of the property was left with the mortgagee as his absolute property and the other portion passed to the mortgagor free from the incumbrance. In the meantime the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 had come into force and the mortgagor contended that the mortgagee could not obtain actual possession of the sir lands which had been left to him under the compromise as occupancy rights in the land vested in the mortgagor under s. 49 of the C. P. Tenancy Act :

Held, (1) that under the foreclosure decree the mortgagor had lost all interest in the mortgaged property and the mortgagee had become the absolute proprietor thereof and that the effect of the compromise decree was merely to vary the original decree and that it did not operate to revive the rights of the mortgagor regarding the sir land which he had already lost;

(2) that, therefore, s. 49 of the C. P. Tenancy Act had no application to the case. N GOPALA v. LAXMAN-SINGH 162

The jurisdiction of Additional Munsifs or Subordinate Judges who are Revenue Officers should be strictly confined to suits for arrears of rent under s. 106 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. Such an officer has no jurisdiction to try a suit for rent brought against a defendant who is described as a trespasser.

Where, however, during the pendency of such a suit, the plaintiff admits that the defendant is a tenant the admission converts the suit into one for arrears of rent under s. 106 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and gives a Revenue Officer jurisdiction to try it. The suit must be deemed to have been properly instituted against the defendant on the date of such admission and if this date happens to be after the coming into force of the C. P. Tenancy Act, the arrears can only be recovered for a period of three years. N GANESHDAS v. HARILAL 279

The meaning of the provision contained in s. 107 of the Cess Act is that what is done under the Act is done only for the purposes of the Act and has no other effect on the rights of the parties. The section does not in any way modify the conclusive effect given by s. 93 of the Act to the cess valuation.

The question as to the liability of a tenant to pay cess has to be determined under s. 41 of the Cess Act and involves the question of the tenant's status. It is not, however, his status under the Bengal Tenancy Act that is in question, but his status under the Cess Act and his liability under s. 41 of the latter Act must be determined according to the entries in the cess valuation statement and not with reference to the entries in the Record of Rights. Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 89, 139, 258—Suit to recover possession of occupancy holding—Denial of title by defendant—Suit, whether cognizable by Civil Court—Order of Attestation Officer revised by Settlement Officer—Suit to set aside order, whether maintainable—Ghatwali lands—Occupancy rights, whether can be acquired.

Section 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act contemplates a case where the relationship of landlord and tenant is admitted to exist between the parties. It does not contemplate cases where there is a dispute as regards title.

A suit to recover possession of an occupancy holding on the allegation that the defendant denies the tenancy right of the plaintiff and has been asserting that the plaintiff has no right in the land in suit is not cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner under s. 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The relationship of landlord and tenant not being admitted, the section does not operate as a bar to the maintainability of the suit in the Civil Court.

All orders whether by khanapuri officers or by Attestation Officers have to be made during the preparation of the draft Record of Rights and all such orders passed before final publication of the Record of Rights are subject to revision under the provisions of s. 89 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. Where an order made by an Attestation Officer before the final publication of the Record of Rights has been revised by the Settlement Officer under s. 89, the order is final and has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court and s. 258 of the Act operates to bar a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the order.

Occupancy rights cannot be acquired in ghatwali lands. PAT GOBINDA BAURI v. KRISTO SARDAR, A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 64 489 — ss. 214, 231, 258—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 95—Sale of holding—Suit to set aside sale on ground of fraud, nature of—Limitation applicable.*

Sections 214 and 258 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act do not create a right to institute a suit to set aside a sale of a holding held under the provisions of the Act. They bar the institution of such a suit except on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction. The right to institute a suit to set aside a sale is conferred by the general law and has been restricted by these sections to the case of fraud or want of jurisdiction. A suit, therefore, to set aside a sale of a holding held under the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act on the ground of fraud, is not a suit instituted under the provisions of the Act as contemplated by s. 231 of the Act, and consequently the period of limitation applicable to such a suit is not the one provided by that section but the one laid down in Art. 95 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and begins to run from the date on which the fraud becomes known to the plaintiff. PAT RAMESWAR NARAYAN SINGH v. MAHABIR PRASAD, A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 47 325

During the pendency of that suit plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption of that property from a mortgagee and obtained possession thereof. Held, that the decision in the previous suit on the question of title operated as res judicata between the parties and that the plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, fail. O BHONDAI MISER v. RAM PRASAD MISER, 2 O. W. N. 710; A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 607 569

The section is not imperative on the Courts, and does not deprive a higher Court of jurisdiction to try a suit that should have been brought in a Court of a lower grade.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Where a partition decree merely directs the separation of the shares of the plaintiffs in the suit and leaves the shares of the defendants joint amongst themselves, the defendants cannot execute the decree and there is nothing to prevent them from bringing a fresh suit for partition of the lands jointly allotted to them. Where, however, in such a suit a partition takes place between all the parties thereto and shares are allotted to each, the defendants are also in the position of plaintiffs and in regard to the properties allotted to them they are in the position of decree-holders and can obtain possession of such properties by execution of the decree. A separate suit by any of them to obtain possession of the property allotted to him would be barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C.

In a partition suit a defendant has merely to ask for his share of the properties in suit to be separately allotted to him and it is then open to the Court to order the shares of the defendants to be separated as amongst themselves. The decree that is finally drawn up in a partition suit has to be stamped as an instrument of partition under the Stamp Act and, except the stamp duty levied on the decree, no other duty as Court-fee is payable by the defendants in such a suit. PAT HEMCHANDRA MAHTO v. In execution of a decree on a mortgage, the plaintiff purchased the property himself, but was obstructed by a prior purchaser (a party to the suit) in execution of a money-decree obtained against the mortgagor. Two years thereafter, he again applied for delivery under O. XXI, r. 95, C. P. C., but the Court “referred to him to suit” under the mistaken impression that the petition was under r. 97. The decree-holder without appealing filed a suit:

Held, (1) that the matter arose under s. 47, C. P. C., and, therefore, the plaintiff ought to have appealed and a separate suit did not lie;

(2) that the suit having been misconceived ab initio, the plaintiff was not entitled to ask in second appeal that the suit should be converted into an execution proceeding.

Where claim proceedings under O. XXI, C. P. C., fall also under s. 47, r. 103 of O. XXI does not prevent an appeal against an order therein as it falls under s. 47 of the Code. But the two remedies are not concurrent, so as to entitle a party to proceed at his option either by a suit or by way of appeal; the procedure under s. 47 and that under O. XXI, r. 103 are not cumulative.

Under s. 47 (2), C. P. C., the Court is at liberty to treat a proceeding under the section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding but subject only to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction. M PACHAIAPPA CHETTI v. VENKATACHARIAR, (1925) M. W. N. 577; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1198 952

A sale by a Receiver with the approval of the Court is not a sale in pursuance of any decree or order of the Court and in the case of such a sale the Court does not grant a sale certificate nor does it confirm the sale. Section 66 of the C. P. C. has no application to the case of such a sale. A NARAIN DAS v. RAM CHANDRA, L. R. 6 A. 610 Civ.; 24 A. L. J. 26; A. I. R. 1926 All. 124 116

— s. 80—Suit against Secretary of State and Public Officer—Injunction, suit for—Notice, whether necessary—Suit instituted before expiry of period of notice, maintainability of—Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), s. 81.

Per Shah, J.—The rule contained in s. 80 of the C. P. C. is a rule of procedure and does not affect in any way the cause of action or the rights of the parties. Where the cause of action requires an immediate remedy by way of injunction the Courts have power to entertain the suit before the expiry of two months specified in the section, where they are satisfied as to the need of an immediate remedy by way of prevention of the wrong complained of.

Where a class of persons is taxed heavily and the payment of the tax is about to be enforced by measures which would cause serious apprehension in the minds of the persons taxed that irremediable damage might be caused to their business unless the enforcement of the orders imposing the tax were stopped at once, the remedy by way of injunction is appropriate and necessary to safeguard their interests, and in such a case the suit might be entertained even if instituted before the expiry of the period limited in s. 80 of the C. P. C.

Section 81 of the Bombay District Police Act provides an additional remedy which the party concerned may follow but it does not bar a suit, which it may be otherwise open to the party to file.

Per Kemp, J.—So far as a suit against the Secretary of State is concerned the words of s. 80 of the C. P. C. are imperative and make no exception in the case of suits for an injunction and a Court of Law is not entitled to graft on to the plain wording of the section a qualifying clause excepting suits for an injunction from the operation of the section. Relief by way of injunction is a kind of relief which must have been in the contemplation of the framers of the Code when the section was drafted and re-drafted. It makes no difference that the injury apprehended is immediate or irreparable. No suit may be instituted against the Secretary of State until the expiration of the two months' notice required by the section.

Where, however, a suit is for an injunction against a public servant in respect of a threatened act, the section has no application and no notice is necessary under the section before the institution of the suit. B BHAGCHAND v. The expression "affecting the decision" in s. 105 of the C. P. C. signifies that there has been at work something which has influenced the Judge in the mental process of arriving at his decision that the error, defect or irregularity in the order, has, so to speak, warped the mind of the Judge so as to lead him to a wrong conclusion. The word "decision" in the section must, therefore, be taken to mean decision upon the merits.

An order setting aside an ex parte decree cannot be said to affect the decision of the suit within the meaning of s. 105 of the C. P. C.

Per Daniels, J.—Many things may affect a decision besides the reasons given by the Judge in his judgment. Where a suit has been finally decided but an illegal order is subsequently passed setting aside the decision with the possible result that the case is heard over again and decided in the opposite way, it cannot be said that the error committed in restoring the case has not affected the ultimate decision. An illegal order, and by consequence the illegality committed in passing that order, affects the decision of the case within the meaning of s. 105 of the C. P. C., if the order passed is one but for which the decision might have been other than it was :

Petitioner filed an application for the commutation of his rent under s. 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act before the Sub-Deputy Collector and filed a patta alleged to have been given to him by the opposite party in support of his application. The opposite party contended that the patta was a forgery and asked the Court to direct the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under ss. 471 and 193 of the Penal Code, but the Sub-Deputy Collector after enquiry refused the application. The opposite party moved the Collector on appeal and that officer set aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and made a complaint against the petitioner under ss. 471 and 193 of the Penal Code. The petitioner thereupon appealed to the Divisional Commissioner who held that no appeal lay to him and rejected the appeal. On an application for revision being made to the High Court :

Held, (1) that the Collector was acting as a Revenue Court and was exercising judicial powers in setting aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and was, therefore, subject to the superintendence of the High Court and his order was revisable under s. 115 of the C. P. C. ;

(2) that the Court also had jurisdiction to interfere under s. 107 of the Government of India Act ;

(3) that the Commissioner had jurisdiction to hear the appeal preferred by the petitioner against the order of the Collector and to set aside that order if necessary.

Section 476-B of the Cr. P. C. contemplates that if an Appellate Court sets aside the order of the Original Court, the party prejudicially affected by the order of the Appellate Court has a right of appeal to the Court to which appeals from such Appellate Court ordinarily lie.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

When a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed in the course of a revenue or civil proceeding, the rule is that the facts upon which the criminal offence is founded should, as far as possible, be finally determined in the Civil or Revenue Court before a prosecution in respect of the criminal offence is commenced. The refusal of the Revenue or Civil Court to try out the proceedings in which the criminal offence is alleged to have been committed materially affects the criminal proceedings and amounts to a denial of the right of fair trial. In such a case the High Court is competent to interfere with the order directing the institution of criminal proceeding under s. 107 of the Government of India Act. PAT FAUJDAI RAI v. — s. 115—Question of fact—Error of law—Revision—Interference by High Court

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with a finding of fact in revision.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to decide a question of law, the mere fact that its decision is erroneous is no ground for interference in revision.

The question whether the death of one of the arbitrators to whom a dispute had been referred for decision renders an award made by the remaining arbitrators invalid, is a question of law, and the mere fact that this question is decided erroneously by a Court having jurisdiction to decide it will not render its decision open to interference in revision. O GAJADHAR v. An error of law furnishes no ground for revision.

Where on an appeal from an order directing that a plaint should be returned for presentation to a proper Court, the Appellate Court decides that the Trial Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, its decision is not open to revision inasmuch as even if it is erroneous, it is a mere error of law committed by a Court which had jurisdiction to decide the matter. O HAIDRI KHANAM v. — s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Appeal—Appellate Court setting aside ex parte decree—Sufficient cause, absence of—Revision, whether lies.

Per Curiam.—The High Court can interfere in revision with an appellate order directing the setting aside of an ex parte decree where the applicant has not shown sufficient cause under r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C.

Per Lindsay, J.—Where there is an independent proceeding arising out of a case, such as a proceeding to set aside an ex parte decree, for which the Legislature has provided an independent remedy or a different procedure, such proceeding may be a case within the meaning of s. 115 of the C. P. C. A RAM SARUP v. GAYA PRASAD, A. I. R. 1925 All. 610; L. R. 6 A. 601 Civ.; 24 A. L. J. 56 180

— s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree—Application by one of several defendants to set aside decree—Decree, whether can be set aside as against all defendants—Revision—Interference by High Court.

The general rule is that an ex parte decree should be set aside only as against the party making an application to set aside the decree. Under the proviso to r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C., however, the Court has power in a case in which the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside against the applicant only, to set it aside against all or any of the other defendants also. Where a Court acting under this proviso sets aside an ex parte decree not only against the defendant applying to set it aside but as against all the defendants, the High Court will not interfere with the order in revision.

Where a person alleging himself to be the representative of a mortgagee obtains a decree for foreclosure as against the mortgagor and also against a rival claimant to the mortgagee right, the decree against the latter being ex parte, and the decree is set aside at the instance of the latter, it should also be set aside as against the mortgagor, inasmuch as if the decree is allowed to stand as against the mortgagor but is set aside as against the rival claimant, this might result in the mortgagor being compelled to pay the amount of the mortgage twice over. O DEBI CHARAN v. The High Court can interfere on the revision side with an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., where that order proceeds on grounds other than those laid down in the rule. The words "other sufficient ground" in the rule are ejusdem generis with the grounds mentioned.

An order granting leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the ground that the plaintiff had been unable to produce sufficient evidence to prove his case within the time allowed is without jurisdiction and can be set aside in revision. L ISHAR DAS v. Court, it cannot be said to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity and its order is not open to revision. The order of the Trial Court, however, in such a case, if erroneous, may be revised by the High Court in spite of the fact that an appeal against that order has been dismissed by the Appellate Court, and if the order of the Trial Court is set aside by the High Court, the order of the Appellate Court necessarily falls to the ground with it. A BISHESHAR PRASAD v. — O. I, rr. 1, 3, O. II, r. 3—Joinder of parties and causes of action—"Same act or transaction"—Partnership—Suit for dissolution of main and branch firms—Multifariousness.

A suit for dissolution and winding up of a firm and its branch firm which consists of certain additional partners, who have no interest in the main firm, is bad for multifariousness.

Order I, rr. 1 and 3 of the C. P. C., apply to questions of joinder both of parties and causes of action.

Under the present C. P. C. a plaintiff may not only join different causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants when such defendants are jointly interested in all the causes of actions, as provided in O. II, r. 3, C. P. C., but he may also join different causes of action against different defendants, provided he is able to bring his case within the purview of O. I, r. 3, C. P. C., under which it is necessary not merely to show that a common question of law or fact would arise but that the right to relief in each case arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions.

Ordinarily in a suit for settlement of accounts of a dissolved partnership and of any sub-partnership in which there are additional partners, the act or series of acts which give rise to relief for settlement of accounts of the main partnership are not the same as those which give rise to the relief for settlement of accounts of the sub-partnership. Though some of the evidence in support of the plaintiffs' contention may be common to both the causes of action, it does not thereby follow that there is a common question of fact involved in the two causes of action. S JETHANAND v. P. C.

Where, however, the addition of a person as a party results not only in a misjoinder of parties but of causes of action as well, a Court of Revision should interfere. M MURUGAPPA CHETTIAR v. L. K. S. S. FIRM, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 135 721

A usufructuary mortgagee who had been dispossessed from the land mortgaged brought a suit for recovery of possession but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the property mortgaged was joint family property and that all the members of the family had not joined in the mortgage. It was found that the mortgage was genuine and that consideration had passed but that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage. The Court also stated in its judgment that a money-decree could not be passed in favour of the plaintiff as he had made no prayer for such a decree. Against that decree the defendants filed an appeal attacking the finding as to the genuineness of the mortgage and there was a cross-appeal by the plaintiff asking for a money-decree. The cross-appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was not sufficiently stamped and the appeal was dismissed on the ground that although no consideration had passed the appeal was not competent inasmuch as the suit had been dismissed in the lower Court. The plaintiff subsequently brought a money suit to recover the amount due under the mortgage-bond:

Held, (1) that it was open to the plaintiff in the previous suit to sue for the mortgage money under the provisions of s. 68 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and that plaintiff having failed to ask for that relief in the previous suit the present suit was barred under the provisions of O. II of r. 2 of the C. P. C.;

(2) that the finding by the Appellate Court in the previous suit that no consideration had passed in respect of the mortgage-bond operated as res judicata between the parties and that the present suit must, therefore, fail on that account also. PAT RAM AUTAR v. Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

It is well-settled that events that happen even after the filing of a suit, including those that add to the title of the plaintiff, may be taken notice of.

The discretion in allowing an amendment of a plaint ought not to be exercised when there is a change of jurisdiction, when there is a great delay in making the application or if a fresh enquiry on other facts is necessary, but when these features do not exist, the amendment ought, as a general rule, to be allowed so as to avoid multiplicity of proceedings. M VALLURU APPALASURI v. Where on the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, one out of the several defendants appears, but neither the plaintiff nor the rest of the defendants are present, and the suit is dismissed in default, the order of dismissal, so far as the defendant who is present is concerned, must be regarded as one under O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C., and as against the absentees under O. IX, r. 3. Consequently, a fresh suit on the same cause of action against the absentee defendants is not barred by provisions of O. IX, r. 9. A MAKUNDI SINGH v. PARBHU DAYAL, L. R. 6 A. 200 Rev.; 23 A. L. J. 993; A. I. R. 1926 All. 169 2

Where a petitioner has failed to appear on the date fixed for the hearing of his petition, r. 5 of O. IX of the C. P. C. has no application. Where, after an application for the adjournment of the hearing of a suit is rejected, the party's Pleader states that he has no further instruction, that is equivalent to the absence of the party from the proceeding, and the dismissal of the suit for default by the Court in such a case is a dismissal under r. 8 of O. Section 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to an application under O. IX, r. 9 of the C. P. A mortgage suit was decreed ex parte but the stipulated rate of interest was not allowed from the date of the institution of the suit. After the preliminary decree was signed the defendant applied under r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C. to have the matter reopened. The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the decree with regard to the dismissal of his claim for interest from the date of the institution of the suit. The appeal was allowed and the Appellate Court passed a fresh decree in lieu of the decree passed by the Trial Court. Thereafter the defendant's application to set aside the ex parte decree was rejected by the Trial Court on the ground that the decree sought to be set aside had ceased to exist and had merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

Held, that the defendant's application under r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C. was rightly dismissed inasmuch as there was no decree of the Trial Court in existence which could be set aside. C MURTAZA BEGUM v. JOGENDRA NATH ROY 724

In an application under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., what the Court has to find is not whether the defendant has any good defence on the merits but whether there has been proper service, and if there is proper service whether there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance. Apart from the question of limitation the defendant's knowledge of the suit after a decree is irrelevant for any other purpose.

And even for the purposes of limitation, a vague knowledge that a decree had been passed by some Court is not enough. It must be found that the defendant had knowledge that a particular decree had been passed against him in a particular Court in favour of a particular person and for a particular sum.

Where the Courts below have not considered in such a case the real question, whether sufficient cause has been shown by the defendant for non-appearance, it is an irregularity justifying the interference of the High Court in revision under s. 115, C. P. C.

Where on summons being taken out in a suit the amin went to the village of the defendants and learnt that they had gone to another place and the time of their return was not known and there was no adult male member in their families and the summonses were then affixed to the outer-doors of their houses:

— O. IX, r. 13, O. XVII, r. 3—Award in suit—Objections—Petition for time to summon witnesses, refusal of—Decree in accordance with award—Decree, whether ex parte.

Where an objection is taken by the defendant to the award submitted by the arbitrators in a suit, and on the date of hearing an application by him for time to summon his witnesses is refused, and the Court pronounces a decree in accordance with the award, the decree passed is not ex parte, where there is nothing on the record to show that the Pleader for the defendant, who applied for time, had no further instruction to appear. C RAMESH CHANDRA GUHA v. Where on an application to set aside an ex parte decree the Court considers the evidence on the record and comes to the conclusion that the applicant had no knowledge of the institution of the suit and that summonses were not served upon him and that he came to know of the decree within 30 days of the application and on these findings sets aside the ex parte decree, its order cannot be interfered with in revision inasmuch as it cannot be said that the Court has committed any error, illegality or irregularity such as to affect its jurisdiction.

Where in a proceeding to set aside an ex parte decree it appears that the heirs of a deceased plaintiff have not been made parties to the application, but the Court comes to the finding that the remaining plaintiffs represent the deceased plaintiff and that it was not necessary to bring his heirs on the record, the finding cannot be interfered with under s. 115 of the C. Per Spencer, J.—The words "such person" in r. 12 of O. XVI of the C. P. C. do not mean a person against whom a proclamation has been issued or whose property has been attached; but mean a person to whom a summons has been issued and who fails to attend under r. 10 (1).

A suit by a principal for accounts on the allegation that the defendant, his agent, has not rendered any account, has an entirely different scope from that of a suit in which a principal alleges that the defendant, his agent, has rendered accounts and prays to have them re-opened or to have liberty to surcharge and falsify them on the ground of fraud or material error. It is only in the case of settled accounts that liberty has to be obtained by a plaintiff to surcharge and falsify.

An agent cannot discharge himself from the duty of accounting, by merely delivering to his employer a set of written accounts without attending to explain them and producing vouchers by which items of disbursement are supported.

Before an order can be made for the appointment of a Commissioner to examine accounts, the examination and adjustment of accounts or the taking of accounts must be considered necessary.

The determination of the factum of the liability of an agent to account is a matter which falls entirely within the province of the Court and cannot be delegated to a Commissioner appointed for the purpose of taking accounts.

Where in a suit for accounts it is found that the defendant has delivered to the plaintiff all the papers containing the account, it lies upon the plaintiff to point out entries in the account which he alleges to be erroneous or in respect of transactions not shown in the accounts and to state what moneys have been received and not credited and the Court will have to deal with the questions thus raised between the parties treating each item separately. In such a case it is the duty of the plaintiff to produce the accounts together with a succinct statement of what they contain and what the balance is, whether in favour of the plaintiff or against him. The Court will then decide as to each particular item or series of items, giving the defendant an opportunity of explaining, supporting or accounting for the said items. If on dealing with the questions so raised it is found that the defendant is liable a preliminary decree should then be passed directing a Commissioner to be appointed to examine and adjust the accounts on the basis of the findings of the Court on the questions decided as aforesaid and special directions should be given to the Commissioner as to the scope and limits of the investigation to be held by him so as to determine the extent of the defendant's liability.

It is only to prevent a waste of public time that resort is to be had to the appointment of a Commissioner, but when it is found necessary to have recourse to the provisions of r. 16 of O. XX of the C. P. C. the Court should follow the directions contained in r. 17 of the Order and furnish the Commissioner with such part of the proceedings and such detailed instructions as appear necessary. C BHARAT CHANDRA CHAKRAVERTY v. The policy of the Legislature is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised in claim proceedings and the finding of a Court in such a proceeding is a summary decision from which the suit allowed by r. 63, O. XXI of the C. P. C., is simply a form of appeal. The object of the Legislature in prescribing a suit by way of appeal is to give the parties an opportunity of placing their respective cases before a Court, because a summary investigation might not have furnished sufficient material for a decision by an Appellate Court. N DAULAT v. — O. XXI, r. 89, s. 115—Execution sale, setting aside of—Interest in property—Title negatived previously—Locus standi of applicant—Refusal to entertain application—Revision.

Order XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C. of 1908, has wider scope than s. 310A of the old Code for which it has been substituted, and the right to make a deposit to set aside an auction sale is not now restricted to the judgment-debtor alone.

The words "owning such property" in O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C., cannot be divorced from the rest of the clause so as to read them independently of the expression "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" as if they, as also the other words "holding an interest therein," stand by themselves and are not controlled by the aforesaid expression.

The applicant under O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C., must be a person who can even at the date of his application be proved to be a person either owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title, and further the title must be a pre-existing title, that is, a title acquired before the auction sale.

If in an objection to attachment in execution of a decree preferred by a person, as also in the declaratory suit following the order therein, the title of that person to the property is negatived, he has no right to make an application to set aside the auction sale by making a deposit under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C.

An auction-purchaser is entitled to take advantage of an adjudication in the objection case, as also in the regular declaratory suit.

Where a Court refuses to entertain an application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., on the ground that the petitioner has no locus standi, it is a case where the Court fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law within the meaning of s. 115 of the Code and the High Court can interfere in revision in such a case. N ONKAR v. — O. XXII, rr. 3, 11—Appeal—Death of appellant—Respondent, whether can make application or substitution.

Rule 3 of O. XXII of the C. P. C. read with r. 11 of the Order does not confine the right to make an application to bring on the record the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or appellant to such legal representatives alone. Where a defendant or a respondent is interested in bringing on the record the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or deceased appellant it is open to him to do so by making an application for that purpose. A KEDAR NATH v. BISMILLAH BEGAM, L. R. 6 A. 614 Civ; 24 A. L. J. 67; A. I. R. 1926 All. 156 72

— O. XXII, r. 4—Pre-emption suit—Appeal by pre-emptor—Death of one of several vendee respondents—Substitution not effected within time—Abatement of appeal.

The cause of action for a pre-emption suit is one and indivisible. Therefore, where an appeal by the pre-emptor in a pre-emption suit abates as against one of several vendee respondents, on account of failure to effect substitution within time after his death, the appeal abates in its entirety. In such a case the right to sue does not survive against the remaining vendees who constitute only a part of what was for the purposes of the suit one legal unit. A SHABBAR HUSSAIN v. ABRAS ALI, 23 A. L. J. 935; L. R. 6 A. 567 Civ.; A. I. R. 1926 All. 152 324

— O. XXII, r. 4 (1), (2)—Representative of deceased respondent already on record—Appellant, whether relieved from making application—When whole appeal abates.

The mere fact that the legal representatives of a deceased respondent are already on the record does not relieve the appellant from the necessity of making an application under O. XXII, r. 4 (1), C. P. C.

Where the respondents are joint and the cause of action against them is also a joint one, the whole appeal abates if the representative of one of them is not impleaded in time. L GURDITTA MAL v. MUHAMMAD KHAN, 7 L. L. J. 544; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 37 41

The test to be applied in determining the extent of the abatement caused by reason of the death of one of the plaintiffs-respondents is whether the suit could proceed in the absence of the deceased or, whether, if the plaintiffs were appellants, the appeal could proceed in the absence of the deceased either as appellant or respondent.

An appeal arising out of a suit for possession of land to which one of the plaintiffs-respondents is not a party cannot proceed in his absence.

Rule 20 of O. XLI of the C. P. C. is ordinarily intended to apply to cases where the Court finds that it cannot proceed with the suit without the presence of a party who was not made a party to the appeal. It is not intended to override the provisions of O. XXII of the Code.

The right obtained by a respondent when the appeal abates as against him is a valuable right and should not be lightly treated.

Rule 4 of O. XLI of the C. P. C. is limited to the case of appellants and is not applicable to a case where all the respondents are not present on the record as parties to the appeal.

The provision contained in r. 33 of O. XLI of the C. P. C., is intended to cover cases where the Court may vary the decree in such a way or pass such an order as to make the party in whose favour the order of the lower Court was passed liable under the order passed by the Appellate Court. It is not intended to apply to a case in which all the necessary parties have not been brought on the record. C MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v. BHAGBATI DEVI, 30 C. W. N. 45; A. I. — O. XXII, r. 10—Assignment of interest pending suit—Assignment challenged—Substitution—Court, power of.

The Court has power to decide the question as to the validity or otherwise of an assignment of interest pending suit, when an application for substitution is made to the Court under O. XXII, r. 10 of the C. P. C. The power of the Court to effect substitution is not confined to cases where the assignment is unchallenged. C SURENDRA NARAYAN DEB v. NITYENDRA NARAIN, A. I. — O. XXIII, r. 1.—Withdrawal of suit—Leave, when can be granted—“Other sufficient grounds,” scope of.

Under r. 1 of O. XXIII of the C. P. C. a Court has power to allow a plaintiff to withdraw a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter only when the suit is bound to fail by reason of some formal defect or on other sufficient grounds. The other sufficient grounds, however, must be grounds analogous to that provided for in sub-cl. (a) of the rule.

The fact that upon the case as made in the plaint the plaintiff is bound to fail is no ground for allowing a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. PAT. JAGANNATH SAHU v. SHEOGOBIND PRASAD, A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 128 217

— O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit, application for—Refusal to grant permission to bring fresh suit—Procedure.

Where a plaintiff applying for withdrawal of suit, does not desire to withdraw from the suit unless with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court considers that such liberty should not be granted, the proper course is simply to dismiss the application. An order in such a case allowing withdrawal of suit without permission to bring a fresh suit is wrong, and must be set aside, with the restoration of the suit to the file.

A plaintiff who does not take any objection to the above course adopted by the Court cannot be deemed to have agreed to it, and to have withdrawn from the suit, it being not necessary for him to expressly take the objection before the refusal of his application. C KAMINI KUMAR ROY v. RAJENDRA NATH ROY, 42 C. L. J. 219; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 233 432

— O. XXIII, r. 1 (1)—Abandonment of part of claim at completion of trial—Sufficient grounds for abandonment—Jurisdiction—Revision—Duty of defendant.

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to permit a plaintiff at the completion of the trial to withdraw a part of his claim with leave to bring a fresh suit in respect of it, on the sole ground that the plaintiff preferred to withdraw. If such an order is made the High Court will set it aside in revision.

It is the duty of the defendant to have such an order vacated without delay. He need not wait until the suit in respect of the claim withdrawn by the plaintiff is filed and then to plead that the permission was given wrongly. M KHAJAMIYAN ROWTHER v. — O. XXIX, r. 2—Suit against Railway Company—Description of defendant—Suit filed against Agent, whether competent—Procedure.

Where a suit is brought against a registered Corporation the latter should be described in the plaint by its official name and title. In the case of an unincorporated or unregistered Company the names of the individuals constituting the Company must be given or the ordinary name by which the Company is known and under which it carries on its business should be given.

In the case of a suit against a Railway Company the proper name under which the Company should be sued is the name and the style under which it carries on its business. If a plaintiff deliberately chooses to sue not the Company but the Agent of the Company he cannot by any decree which he obtains in the suit bind the Company. If, however, upon a fair reading of the plaint it is made out that the description of the defendant is a mere error and that the Company is the real defendant then the suit may proceed against the Company. PAT RADHE LAL v. — O. XXX, r. 3—Firm, suit against, nature of—Liability of each partner—Summons, whether to be served on each partner—Firm having another firm as partner—Dissolution of former, effect of, on latter.

A firm as such has no legal existence and partners in a firm carry on business both as principals and as agents for each other within the scope of the partnership business. A firm's name is a mere expression, not a legal entity.

When a suit is instituted against a firm in the firm's name it is a suit filed against every partner of the firm and a decree against the firm has the same effect as a decree against all the partners thereof.

Where, therefore, a suit is instituted against a firm in the name of the firm and some of the partners are individually served under the provisions of O. XXX, r. 3 of the C. P. C., the suit cannot be held to be incompetent on the ground of all the partners not being individually served.

Where the partners composing a firm as one single entity form a partnership with another person the dissolution of the latter partnership does not dissolve the former partnership.

A cause of action against the partners of a firm is a joint cause of action against all partners and each one is jointly and severally liable for the whole of the claim and not only to the extent of his share in the partnership. S LAKHMICHAND CHANDAMAL v. FIRM OF GOKAL DAS RANCHORDAS 242

— O. XXXII, r. 7—Decree in favour of minor—Transfer by guardian ad litem without sanction of Court—Transfer, whether void or voidable—Third party, right of, to question validity.

Under O. XXXII, r. 7, C. P. C., the guardian ad litem of a minor is not entitled to transfer a decree in favour of the minor without the sanction of the Court. But such a transaction is not void but only voidable at the instance of the minor, that is, the minor alone can avoid the transaction on attaining majority if he thinks fit, or even earlier if some guardian on his behalf thinks fit, to establish its invalidity.

But a third party is not entitled to intervene in the transaction and to plead that it is void ab initio when neither of the parties to the transaction accept that contention. M KANCHERLA KANAKAYYA v. VENKATARAMAYYA APPARAO, 49 M. L. J. 443; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1287 1049

— O. XXXIII, r. 1, s. 115—Permission to sue in forma pauperis—Application rejected—Erroneous view of law—Revision, whether lies—"Sufficient means," scope of—Occupancy holding, whether "property."

If a Court refuses to allow a person to sue as a pauper on an erroneous view of law, the order is liable to be set aside in revision under s. 115 of the C. P. C., as by reason of such a view its decision is vitiated on the ground of illegality which led it to refuse to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law.

In order that permission to sue in forma pauperis should be granted, the law requires that the intending suitor should establish the negation of the actuality of possession of means by him and not of the chance of a contingency, much less of an expectancy, on his part, of getting in future some means sufficient to enable him to pay the prescribed fee for his plaint.

An occupancy holding of a person seeking permission to sue in forma pauperis cannot, therefore, be taken as sufficient means within the meaning of O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., as the right of occupancy is in the nature of a purely personal right and cannot be transferred or even surrendered for value without restrictions.

The price or compensation which an occupancy tenant, who has made an agreement with the landlord for surrendering his holding, but has not actually executed the surrender deed, expects to get for surrendering or dowering his lesser interest into the greater interest of the landlord, cannot be considered to be "means possessed" by him for the purposes of O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C. It is more 'in the nature of an expectant claim' under an 'inchoate' right than 'property' or 'means' of which a person may be said to be possessed. N CHANDAN SINGH v. LAXMAN, 21 N. L. R. 98; A. ——— O. XXXIV, r. 3, cl. (2)—Decree for foreclosure—Discretion to extend time—Good cause.

Under the proviso of O. XXXIV, r. 3, cl. (2), C. P. C., it is only upon good cause shown that the Court may postpone the day fixed for the payment of money under the foreclosure decree. But a very wide interpretation is to be given to those words. The fact that the judgment-debtor was not able to raise money, but could do so if time was given, is a good cause.

Judgment-debtors in decrees for foreclosure are always treated with indulgence. A mortgage is a transaction in which money is lent and immoveable property is pledged as security for re-payment. The Courts have always lent in the direction of enforcing the original contract, that is to say, the re-payment of the money, rather than the penalty, that is, the foreclosure. O BANKATESHWAR KAWAN BAHADURPAL SINGH v. The right of a mortgagor to pay the amount due under a preliminary decree for redemption is a continuous right, and can be exercised at any time until a final decree for sale is passed. The possession of the mortgagee does not become adverse if the mortgagor does not deposit the amount fixed by the preliminary decree on the due date.

A Court has no power to impose terms on a mortgagor who comes forward to make payment of money due under a preliminary decree for redemption after the due date, when the mortgagee has taken no action himself. O BHAWANI PRASAD SINGH v. In a suit on a mortgage one of the witnesses to the mortgage being dead and the other attesting witness being unable to say whether the mortgage-deed was or was not the document which he had attested, the plaintiff made an application for the issue of a commission to examine the scribe of the deed as a witness, it being alleged that the scribe was ill and was unable to attend the Court. This application was refused on the ground that it was not supported by a certificate from a recognized medical practitioner. In appeal the Appellate Court admitted in evidence the testimony of the scribe who deposed that the deed was executed in his presence:

Held, (1) that the Appellate Court had power to admit the evidence of the scribe both under cl. (a) and cl. (b) of r. 27 of O. XLI of the C. P. C.;

(2) that the evidence of the scribe was sufficient to prove the execution of the mortgage-deed. C DHIRAJ- UDDIN BEPARI v. BAHARULLA SHIEKH, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 318 630

On revision:

Held, (1) that the Court had for the reason given by it jurisdiction to extend the time;

(2) that in any event the Court had jurisdiction to extend the time upon an application for review of its judgment and that there was no reason why its order should be disturbed because it had been made upon an application for extension of time and not upon an application for review. PAT. ——— Sch. II, paras. 1, 15, 16, ss. 109, 115—Arbitration—Reference by Court—Objection, disposal of—Revision.

Under the C. P. C. of 1908 the policy of the law is to make all decisions in arbitration cases final and it is contemplated that any objection taken in respect of the validity of an award should be determined by the Court through which the reference was made, including an objection that what purports to be an award is by reason of certain events which are said to have happened prior to the reference not an award at all.

Where, therefore, in such a case an award is upheld by the Court which made the reference and a petition for revision of such order is dismissed by the High Court, an order of the Trial Court or of the High Court is not open to appeal to His Majesty in Council inasmuch as the order of the High Court being passed in revision cannot be said to have been passed "on appeal" within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 109 of the C. P. C., and cl. (c) of the section is inapplicable for want of the case being a fit one for appeal within the meaning of that clause. A. SURAJ SINGH v. PAUL KUMARI, 23 A. L. A partition suit was compromised and a decree was passed in accordance with the compromise. The compromise provided that certain preliminary matters had been settled in a certain way between the parties and that certain properties which were the subject of the suit should be treated as joint properties and should be divided among the parties by a named arbitrator according to the shares of the parties, taking into consideration the conveniences and inconveniences. The compromise also contained a clause that if the arbitrator "fails or becomes unable to make the divisions and partition of all these properties that are settled as ijmali and to adjust and settle the account relating to such of the karbars as to which accounts have to be taken, in such a case, any of the parties shall have power to enforce such divisions and partition and the taking of such accounts by executing this decree and upon such adjustment and settlement of accounts each party shall get a decree for the amounts that may be found due to him or her thereby".

Held, that the parties intended that no further steps should be taken in Court and that the arbitration should be an arbitration without the intervention of the Court and that the rules contained in the Second Schedule to the C. P. C., relating to such arbitrations were applicable to the case.

Where an arbitrator is authorised to proceed in the absence of a party who fails to appear in spite of the notice of the date of hearing being given to him, the award made by the arbitrator cannot be objected to on the ground that the arbitrator carried on an ex parte enquiry owing to the failure of one of the parties to the reference to appear before him after proper notice.

Where with reference to certain items in dispute between the parties, no material is produced before the arbitrator on which he can decide that there is any liability from one party to another, the award of the arbitrator cannot be objected to on the ground that it fails to determine some of the points in dispute between the parties. The effect of the award is that no party can make any claim against any other party in respect of such items, and the award is final for all time settling the dispute between the parties relating to such items.

Where there is direct conflict of oral evidence with regard to any point, an Appellate Court must give weight to the impression that the witnesses made on the Judge in whose presence they gave evidence. C HEM CHANDRA KUNDU v. JNANENDRA CHANDRA KUNDU, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 116 624

The fact that a Commissioner who has been appointed to ascertain the proper demarcation and site of the property in dispute in a suit has made a muddle of his enquiry should not in any way prejudice any of the parties to the suit. If the Court finds that the Commissioner's work is unsatisfactory, the proper procedure is to appoint another Commissioner who should carry out his work in accordance with the instructions of the Court. PAT MOHAMMAD SADIQ v. Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 79, 81, 213—Extraordinary general meeting of share-holders—Notice, form of—Proceedings, when liable to be upset—Special resolution—Amendment, whether may be moved—Chairman, power of—Proper amendment disallowed, effect of—Right of speech—Irregularity in proceedings—Court, whether can interfere—Fraud.

Where there is any secret agreement or any interest of the Directors in the agreement not disclosed in the circular, or in the notice, of a meeting of the Company, the Court will view with strictness any omission to refer to it in the notice or in the circular accompanying the notice; and the omission to mention any secret arrangement would constitute a serious defect in the notice. But where no secret agreement is proved or suggested and where there is no indication that there was anything to conceal, the Court will as far as possible take a liberal view of the terms of the notice and will not upset the proceedings taken on a notice for some defect, which might have been avoided, but which was not avoided on account of some honest mistake.

Where the general nature of the business to be transacted at the meeting of the share-holders is clearly indicated and sufficient details are given such as are necessary for the purpose of enabling the share-holders to consider the question, the notice is a valid and proper notice.

A clause for winding up the Company or for the appointment of liquidators may form part of a special resolution and be passed along with it.

An amendment to a special resolution may be allowed to be moved at the first meeting, but no alteration whatever of the special resolution can be allowed at the confirmatory meeting.

It must necessarily depend upon the nature of the resolution and the nature of the amendment whether it could be or should be allowed by the Chairman.

Any proper amendment which is moved by any member at a meeting should be put to the meeting for consideration, and if the Chairman rules out any such amendment, the resolution is liable to be set aside.

The majority must not refuse to listen to the speech of a member in reasonable terms for a reasonable time.

It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what should be the result where the right of speech is denied to a member in a general meeting of the share-holders.

The proper test to lay down is to consider the facts and circumstances of each case and to determine whether the denial of the right of speech is sufficient to vitiate the resolution under the circumstances of that case.

Those who refuse unnecessarily out of sheer impatience to listen for any reasonable length of time, to any arguments in support of the opposite views incur a grave risk in adopting this attitude of exposing the very resolution, which they may be anxious to adopt, to the scrutiny of the Court and to render it liable to be set aside. The very purpose which they may have in view may be defeated on account of such conduct.

The Court should incline more in favour of the validity of the proceedings than in favour of their invalidity, if the fact which would go to invalidate the proceedings is not established beyond reasonable doubt.

It is futile for any member to raise a general objection to the validity of notes, without indicating the nature of the objection, and without any attempt to particularise the votes objected to. It can only be interpreted as a sort of invitation on the part of the member to adjourn the proceedings of the meeting to examine the votes over again.

Per Fawcett, J.—Where a special resolution for the voluntary winding up of a Company has been passed, the proposed liquidators may be changed at the confirmatory meeting.

It is a well recognised rule that an amendment should be affirmative in form, and not merely negative of something already proposed, and be in such a form that a definite decision can be arrived at.

The Court should not interfere on the ground of an irregularity in the case of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of share-holders, unless the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or are ultra vires.

A case of fraud or over-bearing influence is necessary to justify interference by the Court. B PARSHURAM DATTARAM SHAMDASANI v. TATA INDUSTRIAL BANK, 26 Bom. L. R. 987; A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 49 580

Articles of Association, whether can be altered—Share-holder entering into special contract with Company, position of.

A share-holder in a Company must be taken to know that one of the incidents of membership of a Company is that the Company may, by adopting the proper method, bona fide alter its articles in a way which may prejudicially affect his interests, and, provided that the alteration in the articles is not inconsistent with the objects set out in the Memorandum of Association, and is bona fide made in the interests of the Company a share-holder in ordinary circumstances would be bound by such an alteration. The rights of a share-holder in respect of his shares, except so far as they may be protected by the Memorandum of Association, are by Statute made liable to be altered by special resolution. But the case of a contract between an outsider and the Company is entirely different and even a share-holder must be regarded as an outsider in so far as he contracts with the Company otherwise than in respect of his shares. In such a case the Company cannot by altering its articles justify a breach of contract. C HARI CHANDANA JOGA DEVA v. HINDUSTAN CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE SOCIETY, A. I. Compromise—Repudiation by one party—Other party, right of, to repudiate—Executed contract, effect of.

Where there is a compromise which finally settles the rights of the parties and nothing more has to be done to give effect to it, the conduct of one of the parties in acting in a manner inconsistent with the compromise does not justify the other party in repudiating it.

A landlord made in favour of a ryot an absolute and hereditary grant of a village on sarvamanyam tenure. After the landlord's death, his son challenged the alienation, and the matter was compromised by the ryot agreeing to pay a favourable rent on the holdings. The son thereafter repudiated the compromise and sued to set aside his father's alienation on the ground of its having been executed under undue influence. The suit was dismissed. In a subsequent suit to recover rent on foot of the compromise:

Held, that the compromise settlement was not an executory contract and the plaintiff was entitled to sue to enforce its terms and was not disqualified from so doing by having sued for a greater relief than he was entitled to in the prior suit. M KUPPUSWAMI IYER v. Construction of deed—Ijara deed, whether mortgage—Suit to recover haq ajiri—Interest, whether can be claimed—Ijaradar, rights of.

Under the terms of an ijara deed it was agreed that the ijaradar should remain in possession of the ijara property and that out of the fixed annual rent he should pay Government revenue and road-tax into the Government Treasury every year, should deduct and appropriate to himself a certain sum in lieu of interest on the zarpeshgi money and should pay the balance as haq ajiri to the owner. In a suit to recover the haq ajiri in respect of several years:

Held, (1) that the ijara deed was a deed of usufructuary mortgage and that the ijaradar held possession not as tenant but as mortgagee and that the haq ajiri was not a payment in the nature of rent and that, therefore, in the absence of a stipulation in the deed for payment of interest thereon, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any interest on the arrears of haq ajiri;

(2) that the defendant as ijaradar was not entitled to remove any portion of the soil of the land held in ijara and that, therefore, damages recovered by the plaintiff from a third person in respect of an injury done by the latter to the soil could not be claimed by the ijaradar and could not be set off against the plaintiff demand. PAT NATHAN PRASAD SHAH v. Construction of document—Agreement to execute ikararnama authorizing creditor's agent to receive cheques due to debtor, whether assignment—Decree in favour of third person—Attachment of cheques—Creditor, whether can object—Lien.

L, a P. W. D. contractor, borrowed money from B and executed two agreements in his favour on 4th September 1917 and 19th September 1919, agreeing to credit or deposit at B's shop all cheques that he may get from P. W. D. on account of the works and not to cash them, and to execute an ikararnama in the name of a servant of B whom B may appoint to authorize him to take on his (L's) behalf cheques in his name from the P. W. D. and get them credited in B's shop, and that he will have no authority to take the cheques until the satisfaction of the debt. One N, another creditor of L, obtained a decree against L and attached certain cheques of L obtained from P. W. D. B objected in execution proceeding that cheques were assigned to him. The objection was overruled. B then filed a suit for a declaration that the attachment was not valid:

Held, that the terms of the ikararnama did not constitute a present assignment of the debt due to A but an agreement to assign at future dates, and unless L authorized the P. W. D. to make over each cheque to the agent of B there was no lien acquired over it. N BALLABH DAS v. NARAIN PRASAD 323

Insurance policy—Insured taking shares in Company—Premia, balance of, to be recovered from dividends—Liability of Company.

Under a policy of an insurance the defendant Company guaranteed to the insured that if the latter paid to the Company a certain sum each year for a certain number of years the Company would pay to the insured the sum of Rs. 20,000 and would also pay at the end of the period fixed (called the endowment period) such additional sums by way of profits as according to the Society's Regulations may accrue and become payable in respect of the policy, after paying up in full all calls due and payable in respect of certain bond shares which the insured had agreed to take. One of the conditions of the policy was that in case the insured should outlive the endowment period all dividends to become payable on the shares shall be subject during the period to a lien in favour of the Society for payment of the premium payable on the policy, the total premium in each case being equal to the face value of the policy. The plaintiff continued to pay the stipulated sum each year to the Company and at the end of the endowment period sued the Company to recover the amount of Rs. 20,000 as a debt due by the Company under the policy:

Held, (1) that the true construction of the policy was that the Company had agreed at the end of the endowment period to pay the principal sum insured and that it undertook also to pay at the same time an additional sum in respect of dividends accrued on the shares after retaining thereout all calls due and payable in respect thereof and that it had agreed to pay an additional sum in respect of dividends accrued after the period had expired during which it was at liberty to allocate the dividends towards the balance of the premium;

(2) that the risk of the dividends not being sufficient to cover the balance of the premia was taken by the Company;

(3) that the plaintiff having paid the whole sum which the Company required him to pay during the endowment period under the policy, he was entitled to recover from the Company the sum of Rs. 20,000 being the principal sum insured. C HARI CHANDANA JOGA DEVA v. ——— Lease, duration of—Covenant against assignment—Receipt of rent from assignee—Estoppel.

The owner of a raiya interest demised certain premises to certain persons on a dar-raiya. The lease provided for the lessees building a house for the purpose of a shop on the land and carrying on business therein and paying the rent therein named every year to the lessor. There was a further provision in the document that if the rent was not paid in any year the lessor would be entitled to recover khas possession of the land with arrears of rent and damages by suit. The document further provided that if the lessees did not carry on business on the land then they would give up the land to the lessor and that the lessees would not be entitled to give the land to any body else. The lessees failed to pay the rent stipulated in the lease and the lessor, instead of recovering possession of the premises, brought the property to sale in execution of his rent-decree and the property was purchased by the defendants first party. The interest of the lessor was purchased by the plaintiff. Defendants first party sub-let the premises to the defendants second party and the latter put up a permanent structure upon the land of which the plaintiff was aware. Plaintiff continued to receive rent from the defendants second party after the erection of the building. Sometime afterwards the plaintiff sued to recover khas possession of the premises on the allegation that the defendants first party had parted with their possession of the premises to the defendants second party in contravention of the terms of the original lease:

Held, (1) that the original lease was one for the lives of the lessees subject to its determination if they failed to pay the stipulated rent in any year or if they failed to carry on business on the land or if they transferred the lease to a third party;

(2) that by their purchase in execution of the rent decree the defendants second party had obtained a tenancy in the terms of the original demise, that is to say, during the lives of the original lessees determinable on the grounds mentioned in the lease;

(3) that the plaintiff being aware of the sub-lease in favour of the defendants second party and of the erection of the permanent structure by them and having received rent from them with such knowledge could not eject the defendants on the ground that the defendants first party had parted with the possession of the premises to a third party in contravention of the terms of the original lease. C CHANDRA KUMAR SHAHA v. ——— Maintenance deed—Provision for payment of paddy or equivalent value—Option—Market rate, claim at, maintainability of.

Construction of document—contd.

It is not an invariable rule that where a person undertakes to pay maintenance in kind he should always pay it in kind. Where a document is clear, effect must be given to its terms.

Where a person by a deed of maintenance undertook to deliver to a maintenance holder paddy worth Rs. 39 for every year, 3 podies of paddy without moisture and chaff, and the deed further provided that "if at any time the giving of maintenance is delayed at the rate of 13 only for every pod money should be collected or sued for":

Held, that the document gave an option to the grantor to give maintenance in kind or in cash at the rate mentioned and that the maintenance holder was not entitled to insist on payment at the market rate on the date of the plaint. M CHINNAMMA NAIDU v. VENKATAMMAL, 49 M. L. J. 186; 22 L. W. 369; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1023; (1925) M. W. N. 735 996

——— Mortgage or sale—Intention of parties—Evidence of conduct, whether admissible—Inadequacy of consideration, effect of—Muhammadan parties—Practice.

It is well-known that documents are executed by Muhammadans in which they conceal, or at least try to conceal, the real nature of the transaction and attempt to make out that the transaction is an out-and-out sale although, as a matter of fact, the intention of the parties is to create a mortgage. In considering a document, therefore, of this nature where the question arises whether the document is a deed of sale or a deed of mortgage, regard must be had to this practice where the parties are Muhammadans.

In order to construe such a document intrinsic evidence afforded by the terms of the document must be taken into consideration and the Court must also take into consideration the facts which may legitimately be proved with a view to showing in what manner the language of the document is related to the existing facts and may also refer to the contrast between the value of the property and the consideration that passed in money. Evidence relating to the subsequent conduct of the parties themselves, however, is not admissible as showing their intention.

In the case of such a document the absence of any mention of a definite date by which the transferor can by re-paying the amount of the consideration claim a re-transfer of the property does not indicate that the deed is not one of mortgage, nor is the absence of any reservation to the transferee of the right to recover the money paid by him or of a stipulation authorising the transferor to sue for redemption a safe criterion for the determination of the question.

A deed of transfer ran as follows:—"I have been in the ownership and possession of land fit for erection of shops by right of my purchase within the boundaries mentioned below situated in the line to the north of the road facing westward in Bander Bazar Chak. Now for my own necessity on receipt from you of Rs. 400 in cash as the price of that shop land I sell to you the same and I and my descendants cease to have right therein. You from this day being in ownership and possession in these lands, continue to enjoy the same with the rights of transfer by gift and sale, etc. I and my successors cease to have any right thereto. I make over my kobala of purchase dated the 11th Sravan, 1287. Moreover when I or my heirs would return the purchase price to you and your heirs you shall give up the properties. And I shall get this kobala registered within the period of limitation." It was found that the consideration for the transfer was wholly inadequate :

Held, that the inadequacy of the price coupled with the mention in the deed of the need of money on the part of the vendor and the stipulation as to the return of the price to the vendee and the re-conveyance of the property indicated that the document was intended to be one of mortgage by way of conditional sale and not one of sale out-and-out. C MOHAMMAD USMAN v. ——— Sale or lease—“Moghli,” meaning of.

The term “moghli” is a word of doubtful meaning and at the best imports no more than that the rent assessed represents a proportion of the Government revenue assessed on the lands. In no sense of the term does it constitute rent.

Certain lands were conveyed by a document which was described as a khas kobala, the consideration money being arrived at by a calculation of annual profits of the land conveyed, deducting therefrom a small sum payable by the transferor as the “moghli”. The kobala recited:—“From this day forth you become fully entitled to the said lands and are empowered to sell and make a gift of the same and paying yearly Re. 1-1-0 only moghli to me and to my heirs and legal representatives from 1286 B. S. you become entitled from this day from generation to generation by cultivating the same yourself or by settlement of tenants and to that I or my heirs and representatives shall never make any objection.”

——— Usufructuary mortgage—Redemption provided after possession by mortgagee—Limitation, operation of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 148.

Where a usufructuary mortgage provides that the right of redemption would accrue only after possession is delivered to the mortgagee, limitation does not run against the mortgagor until possession is delivered to the mortgagee.

A usufructuary mortgage executed in 1854 provided that the mortgagee would retain possession of the mortgaged land and that he would realise rents, and that afterwards if the mortgagor re-paid the money, then the land would be released. The mortgagee did not get possession before December 1860. In September 1919 a suit was brought to redeem the property:

Held, that under the terms of the mortgage-deed, the right of redemption did not arise until after possession had been delivered to and enjoyed by the mortgagee, and that the suit brought well within sixty years from December 1860 was within time. C MAHAMMED ISMAIL v. SHARFATULLAH 763 neither we, the second party, nor our representatives shall raise any objection. If we do so the first party shall be competent to cancel this deed and stop the cutting of the trees in the lands specified below without waiting for the expiry of the term of this agreement.... Let it be known that we, the second party, will have to prepare 1,35,000 one lakh and thirty-five thousand sleepers of different measurements every year during the nine months from Kartik to Asarh, in accordance with the terms specified above. If, through negligence on the part of us, the second party, we fail to prepare so many sleepers no plea regarding deficiency in the number of sleepers, put forward by us, shall be entertained and we, the second party, shall be held liable to pay on demand, the price of the entire number of one lakh and thirty-five thousand sleepers to the first party.... Without paying in full the price of the sleepers that will be got ready every month and obtaining receipt therefor, the second party will not be entitled to cut trees or prepare sleepers in the succeeding month. In that case, on the expiry of the said succeeding month, I, the first party, shall be competent to bring the trees mentioned in the schedule given below in my direct possession and to stop the cutting of the trees, without waiting for the expiry of the term of this agreement.” The second party failed to cut 15,000 sleepers during the first month or to pay for them, and the first party terminated the contract. ——— ss. 15, 16, 23—Unlawful agreement—Agreement to stifle prosecution—Coercion—Threat not to withdraw prosecution—Undue influence—Relation between creditor and debtor.

In order to avoid a contract on the ground that its object was to stifle prosecution, two things must be established,

(1) that there was really a criminal case in respect of a non-compoundable offence pending at the time when the agreement was entered into, and

(2) that one of the objects for which the agreement was entered into was to stifle prosecution of the case.

A threat not to withdraw criminal proceedings, already instituted, unless a bond was executed, is not “coercion” as defined in s. 15 of the Contract Act.

The relation between a debtor and a creditor is not necessarily one in which the former is to be taken as being situated in such a position that his will is bound to be dominated by the latter.

So long as there is no agreement not to prosecute, there is nothing to prevent a creditor from taking a security for the payment of his debt, even if the debtor is induced to give the security by a threat of criminal proceedings. C RAMESHWAR MARWARI v. that there was good security given for the debt and that the interest charged is excessive is not sufficient to enable the Court to reduce the rate of interest. There must be a further finding that the mortgagee had unduly taken advantage of his position and that he was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagor and to exercise undue influence over him. Unless it can be shown that undue advantage was taken, the Court cannot interfere with the contract. C PANCHI DASI v. KSHIRODA DASI, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 171 727

Undue influence exercised by a third person over a mortgagor is no defence to the mortgagee's claim on the mortgage.

The facts that a mortgagor was a profligate young wastrel unaccustomed to the possession of any money, that on his father's death he embarked upon a career of debauchery and that the mortgagee, a professional money-lender, advanced him moneys on various documents, which debts were subsequently consolidated in the mortgage in suit, do not justify a finding of undue influence. L SARDARI MAL v. — s. 23—Chit-fund, whether lottery—Suit on pro-note passed by one chit-fund older to another, maintainability of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 294A.

Plaintiff and defendant formed a partnership to promote a "chit-fund". A capital fund of Rs. 500 was raised from 500 subscribers subscribing each one rupee per mensem. At the end of the month there was a drawing by lot and the subscriber who drew the ticket was paid Rs. 50 and his connection with the transaction forthwith ceased. This process was repeated month after month till the end of the 49th month. At the close of the 50th month each of the remaining subscribers was paid Rs. 50 and the stakeholders divided the profit and the fund was dissolved. In settlement of the accounts of the partnership, defendant executed a pro-note in favour of the plaintiff. In a suit to recover the amount of the note:

Held, (1) that the right of the subscribers to the return of their contributions not having been made a matter of risk or speculation the transaction was not a lottery and did not fall within the mischief of s. 294A of the Penal Code;

(2) that the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, maintainable.

Per Ramesam, J.—A chit-fund the main object of which is the promotion of co-operation, prudence and thrift ought to be regarded as legitimate even though there is an element of chance. If by the time a society of this kind becomes known to the public, all its members are ascertained and there is no invitation to any member of the public to join it, it cannot be said that any person keeps a lottery office, at which the public are invited to join and pay, within the meaning of s. 294A of the Penal Code.

In other words, it is not every lottery that constitutes an offence, but it is the keeping of a lottery office which is a standing invitation to the public that constitutes the offence.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—In a transaction like the one mentioned above, while chance determines the disposal of the interest earned, there is absolute certainty with reference to the distribution of the capital fund itself. The dominant feature of the transaction is that it enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift.

A transaction is not necessarily a lottery simply because a matter of whatever kind is agreed to be decided by lot. M SHANMUGA MUDALIAR v. KUMARASWAMI MUDALI, 21 L. W. 403; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 870; (1925) M. W. N. 655; 48 M. 661 420

Where there are two Courts both of which would normally have jurisdiction to try a suit relating to a dispute arising out of a contract the parties are entitled to agree among themselves that a suit relating to such a dispute should be brought in one of those Courts and not in the other. Such an agreement does not contravene the provisions of s. 28 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the plaintiff is not thereby restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of the contract by the usual legal proceedings in the ordinary Tribunals, as the restriction is only partial.

Where a contract between a vendor and purchaser of goods provided that "in all legal disputes arising out of the contract, A will be understood as the place where the cause of action arose":

Held, that the clause did not offend against s. 23 of the Contract Act as being in restraint of legal proceedings and was valid and must be given effect to. M ACHRATLAL KESAVALLAL METHA & Co. v. VIJAYAM & Co., 49 M. L. J. 189; 22 L. W. 70; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1145 1019

— s. 30—Wagering contract—Agent, whether can recover expenses or commission—Forward contracts, whether wagering contracts.

Where a plaintiff, on behalf of the defendant, has entered into gambling transactions with third parties, the defendant is bound to make good the losses incurred in those transactions to the plaintiff and pay the commission.

The fact that the defendant is a Limited Company would not disentitle the plaintiff to recover, where he has entered into the contracts under arrangement with the manager of the Company, apparently acting in exercise of the powers vested in him.

The fact that forward contracts are made in the rice trade is not one, which of itself indicates anything at all. No doubt such contracts must, in the nature of things, be speculative to a large extent. But the fact that they are speculative does not render them wagering contracts, and there can be no wagering contract where there is not an intention common to both parties that the dealing should be by way of wager or gambling in differences. R ALLY MCOLLA INDUSTRIAL COR. — s. 38—Sale of goods—Vendor, duty of—Offer of goods—Opportunity for inspection—Duty of purchaser.

Clause (3) of s. 38 of the Contract Act only requires that the promisee should have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver. The promisor is under no obligation to prove the identity of the thing offered to the promisee's satisfaction. It is the promisee's duty to take the steps necessary to satisfy himself. The promisor has only to give him an opportunity for it.

Where on an offer by the vendor to deliver the goods, the goods could have been inspected if the purchaser had applied to the vendor to enable him to do so, for the purpose of satisfying himself that the goods offered corresponded with the goods contracted for, but the purchaser took no steps for this purpose but contented himself with writing letters with a view to raise a defence subsequently; in a suit for damages by the vendor for non-acceptance of goods:

Held, that the plaintiff had done all he was bound to do under the contract and there was no default on his part and that consequently the defendant was liable in damages.

Actual physical possession of the goods by the vendor is not necessary. It will be enough if the goods are under his control and he is able and willing to deliver on the price being paid. M ARUNACHELAM CHETTY v. KRISHNA IYER, (1925) M. W. N. 324; 22 L. W. 265; 49 M. plaintiff, but that the defendant at the suit of any person might be compelled to pay.

Plaintiff purchased certain properties free of encumbrances. The plaintiff's vendor subsequently sold some other properties to the defendant, a portion of the consideration being left with the defendant to pay off a decree obtained against the vendor by one R. Defendant did not pay off this amount with the result that the properties sold to the plaintiff together with those sold to the defendant were sold by R in execution of his decree. In order to prevent the sale being confirmed plaintiff paid the decretal amount and then brought a suit to recover that sum from the defendant:

— ss. 69, 70—Contribution, suit for—Bona fide claim to property—Person depositing money, if entitled to recover—"Interested in payment of money," meaning of—Implied request, origin of—"Lawful payment," meaning of.

Where payment is made by a person who puts forward a bona fide claim to the property in dispute, he is entitled to the protection afforded under s. 69 of the Contract Act, even though it ultimately transpires, as a result of litigation, that he had no interest for the protection whereof the payment was made.

The expression "interested in the payment of the money" in s. 69, Contract Act, is comprehensive enough to include cases of apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience, and is not restricted to cases of individuals who are sure to suffer actual detriment assessable in money value.

In a suit under s. 69 of the Contract Act it is essential that there should be, firstly, a person who is bound by law to make a certain payment, secondly, another person who is interested in such payment being made, and thirdly, a payment by such last mentioned person.

A debt for money paid arises where a person has paid money for another under circumstances and upon occasions which make it just and equitable that it should be re-paid; a debt or promise to pay is then implied in law without any actual agreement to that effect.

Section 70 of the Contract Act is not limited to persons standing in particular relations to one another and except in the requirement that the act shall be lawful, no condition is prescribed as to the circumstances under which it shall be done. The section does not justify the officious interference of one man with the affairs or property of another or to impose obligations in respect of services which the person sought to be charged did not wish to have rendered.

The word "lawfully" in s. 70 is not a mere surplusage and it must be considered in each individual case whether the person who made the payment had any interest in making it, and if not, the payment cannot be said to have been made lawfully.

The existence of an interest is generally a test as to the lawful character of a payment, but even if an interest were not shown to exist, payments on account of another, if lawfully made, would generally be provided for by s. 70 of the Contract Act. C NAGENDRA NATH ROY v. A lessee who is not given possession is entitled to recover as damages the value of the possession of the premises between the time from which it ought to have been given, to the time he succeeds in obtaining other premises.

Even in respect of agreements relating to immovable property, the principles enunciated in s. 73, Contract Act, are applicable, and a plaintiff is entitled to damages which only arise in the usual course of things from the breach. In assessing such loss the amount which is expected to remedy the inconvenience caused by the non-performance of the contract must be taken into account.

Plaintiff obtained a lease of a rice mill from the defendant for a year, with option of renewal for another year. The possession, which was to be delivered shortly before the paddy season, was not given to the plaintiff, and he sued for damages. The plaintiff admitted that he made no attempt to secure another mill, but the defendant did not show that other mills were available:

Held, (1) that it may be presumed that it was not possible for the plaintiff to look for and obtain another mill in time for the paddy season of the first year, and that, therefore, he was entitled, as damages, to the profits he would have made from the mill in that year;

(2) that, however, the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages for the second year, as, in the first place, he might not have exercised the option, and, secondly, because the presumption as to his inability to obtain another mill could not be made as to the second year. R MA HNIN YI v. The Police submitted a report to a Magistrate recommending action under s. 144 followed by proceedings under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. in respect of a plot of land against certain parties. On this report the Magistrate passed an order directing that the parties should appear before him on a certain date and that in the meantime they should not commit a breach of the peace by going to the land in dispute. On the parties appearing before him the Magistrate heard the lawyers and passed an order to the effect that one of the parties was in possession of the land and that the others were forbidden to interfere with the former's possession. The order wound up by saying that in case of interference with such possession the parties guilty of interference would be proceeded against under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C., and that if they had any right they had better go to the Civil Court. On revision:

Held, that the order passed by the Magistrate was, in substance though not in form, an order under s. 145 of the Cr. P. An offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code is a non-cognizable one, and the Police are not empowered to investigate into it of their own accord, and to prefer a charge in respect of it.

Accused made a complaint to a Village Munsif of a dacoity having been committed in his house, mentioning certain persons as having taken part in it. The Police on investigation reported the case to be false, and the Sub-Magistrate to whom the papers were sent struck the case off his file. The Police then put in a charge-sheet against the accused before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code:

Held, that it was open either to the persons alleged to have taken part in the dacoity or to the Village Munsif, or to any Police Officer, to prefer a complaint against the accused under s. 190 of the Cr. P. C., in which case the Magistrate before whom the complaint was made could take the case on his file after taking a sworn statement from the complainant, but that the Police could not start proceedings of their own accord, and that, consequently, the proceedings must be quashed as illegal. M In re PERUMAL NAICK, (1925) M. complaint for the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The complainant thereupon put in a petition impugning the Police report and praying for an enquiry by a Judicial Officer. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order on this petition in the following words:—"Seven witnesses are present. To Mr. Q. for disposal." On the matter coming up before Mr. Q. the latter did not examine any of the witnesses but after looking through the papers directed the Police Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet. The Sub-Divisional Officer thereupon passed an order re-calling the case from the file of Mr. Q. and making it over to another Magistrate with certain instructions as to how he should proceed:

Held, (1) that the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer making over the case to Mr. Q. for disposal was one under s. 192 of the Cr. P. C., whereby the whole case was transferred to Mr. Q. and that it was, therefore, competent to the latter to pass an order in the case summoning the accused to appear before him;

(2) that, therefore, the Sub-Divisional Officer's subsequent order re-calling the case from the file of Mr. Q. and making it over to another Magistrate was not justified;

(3) that Mr. Q.'s order directing the Police Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet was also without authority and should be set aside, leaving it to Mr. Q. to issue process against the accused in the usual way. *PAT MAHANI DHANGAR v. Section 195 of the Cr. P. C. is a restrictive section and there is nothing in that section or in s. 476 of the Code to prevent a Court from making a complaint under the ordinary law in respect of an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code which it finds to have been committed before it.

The finding of a competent Court that a document produced before it is a forgery or that a witness has committed perjury before it, is sufficient prima facie ground for a complaint under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C., and no preliminary enquiry is necessary in such a case before making a complaint.

In making a complaint of an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, a Court should quote the passages in the statement of the accused in respect of which the complaint is made. Where the object of a conspiracy is to commit forgery there can be no prosecution for such a criminal conspiracy without the sanction of the Local Government under s. 196A of the Cr. P. C. But this is not so, where the main charge is that of cheating, in which it is not necessary at all to mention, as the object of the conspiracy, forgery committed not for its own sake but in order to cheat a person in a way, in which, if he had known the fact, he would not have parted with the money.

If cheating is carried out by means of forgery it does not follow that the provisions of s. 196A of the Cr. P. C. would apply. For a prosecution of an offence of forgery no sanction is necessary under s. 196A and no distinction can be drawn between the offence of forgery and the offence of abetment thereof. O BISHAMBHAR NATH TONDON v. — ss. 209, 210—Case triable by Sessions Court—Enquiring Magistrate, duty of—Discharge, order of, when can be passed.

In cases triable by the Court of Session only one trial is contemplated and the enquiry before the Magistrate is only in the nature of a preliminary enquiry.

Sections 209 and 210 of the Cr. P. C. speak only of there being or not being sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial. When the Legislature speaks of sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of sufficient grounds for conviction and, similarly, when the Legislature speaks of there not being sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of there not being sufficient grounds for conviction.

The intention of the Legislature is to make a distinction between grounds for conviction and grounds for committing for trial. Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction and satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial.

If the enquiring Magistrate on the evidence before him comes to the conclusion that the charge is groundless, then he should discharge and not commit for trial. For a charge being groundless, it is not necessary that there should be no evidence at all of the charge. That will be a case of there being no evidence of the charge at all and not a case of the charge being groundless.

A charge may be said to be groundless when the evidence adduced at the enquiry is such that no

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Tribunal, Judge or Jury would ever on that evidence convict the accused. If no reasonable man taking into consideration the evidence adduced in the case could possibly on such evidence conclude that the accused was guilty, then it must be taken that the charge is groundless, and in such a case the duty of the enquiring Magistrate is clear to discharge the accused.

What the enquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out but only whether there is a case for trial. There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of valuing and weighing of the evidence. M In re MANIA MANIKHA PADAYACHI, 49 M. What can be done under s. 227, Cr. P. C., is only to alter or modify the charge at any time before judgment. The section does not permit a Court to try two distinct offences, such as assault and abuse, which are in no way connected with one another, and which were committed at different times, in the same trial.

Six persons were jointly tried for the offence of waging war against the King, by attacking and looting a number of Police Stations on various dates and by attacking the forces of the Crown at various places on different occasions. It was shown that one of the accused joined the party waging war only long after some of the other accused had ceased to be members of that party. But all the accused were found to be followers of one leader animated throughout with the same motive of overthrowing the British Government :

Held, Per Spencer, Offg. C. J. and Krishnan, J., (Reilly, J., dissenting) that the various incidents which constituted the waging of war were parts of the same transaction and that the joint trial of the accused was justified under s. 239 (1) of the Cr. P. C.

Per Krishnan, J.—The question of the legality of a joint trial really depends upon the accusation made and not upon the result of the trial; provided that the accusation is a real one and not a mere excuse for a joinder of charges which cannot be otherwise joined.

The waging of war is a continuing offence beginning with the first act of war and going on till the war is ended in some manner.

The various incidents in a war may be so disconnected as to form different transactions. But the question whether they form parts of the same transaction or must necessarily be held to be different transactions has to be judged on the facts of each case.

The usual tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, unity of purpose or design and continuity of action. It is not necessary that all of them should be present to make the several incidents parts of the same transaction. Unity of place and proximity of time are not important tests at all; but the main test is unity of purpose. If the various acts are done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto, they may be treated as parts of the same transaction.

Per Spencer, Offg. C. J.—When a series of acts are so connected by community of purpose and continuity of action as to form not only one transaction but a single offence, proximity of time between the performance of the various acts composing that offence not being the sole test of the unity of the transaction, s. 235 of the Cr. P. C. authorizes persons accused of doing those acts to be charged and tried at one trial for them all. Section 239 (d) of the Cr. P. C. authorizes the trial of more persons than one on one charge and at one trial if they are accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction.

Intervals of time between the commission of a series of acts do not necessarily import want of continuity when the aims of those jointly tried have throughout been directed to one and the same objective.

The waging of war is essentially a continuing offence, in which several incidents, which may in themselves be separate offences, may be comprised.

Rebellion implies a state of being rather than the doing of any act, although for a conviction it is necessary to prove that some overt act was committed by the offender. Rebellions and wars continue until they are suppressed by capture or destruction of the rebel forces or by the rebels laying down their arms and making their submission as subjects to their Sovereign and receiving his pardon.

Per Reilly, J., (dissentiente).—The charge in a Sessions trial must be based on evidence given before the Committing Magistrate. A misjoinder of persons cannot be escaped by deliberately making the charge wider than the evidence produced to support it, in order to represent all the persons tried as accused of all the offences or incidents included, though there is no prospect nor intention of proving more than that each is guilty of some of them.

A non-continuing offence is necessarily one transaction: a continuing offence may or may not be so; persons accused of the same continuing offence may be tried together so far as their offence is confined to one transaction.

An offence cannot be treated as necessarily one transaction—merely because it is a continuing offence. On the contrary s. 239 of the Cr. P. C. implies that a continuing offence may embrace more than one transaction, but only so far as it is concerned with one transaction, can more persons than one be tried together for it. The section allows the Court to try several persons together for the same continuing offence of waging war within the limits of one transaction but not if the offence alleged covers more than one transaction. Under s. 239 (d) several persons may be charged and tried together when accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction; but "transaction" there must have the same meaning as in s. 239 (a).

The provisions of the Cr. P. C. regarding charges are designed to simplify and define within reasonable limits the charges that may be tried at one and the same time and so avoid the embarrassment of the accused.

It is very desirable that Public Prosecutors and the Courts should give full effect to the spirit of the provisions of the Cr. P. C. instead of straining them to cover doubtful cases.

The general rule is laid down in s. 233 of the Cr. P. C. that for every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge separately tried. The principle is that the accused person shall have a simple allegation to meet and the Court a clear issue to try. But to the general rule certain exceptions are made in ss. 231, 230. All these exceptions can, however, be interpreted so as not to conflict with the general principle that the accused should not be perplexed and the Court should not be confused by complicated or numerous or disconnected allegations. In interpreting these exceptions it must never be forgotten that they are exceptions to the general rule and, therefore, to be interpreted with strictness and, so far as they affect the defence of accused persons, with the utmost strictness.

It is entirely wrong to approach the interpretation of the word "transaction" in s. 235 or s. 239 of the Cr. P. C. with the idea of ascertaining how far etymologically it will extend, how far the thread of continuity implied in it can be stretched, how far its meaning can be strained without an obvious break down.

The word "transaction" in ss. 235 and 239 of the Code must not be interpreted in any special or artificial or conventional or technical way but as it is ordinarily used by men of education and common-sense. If you cannot speak of a series of events as a transaction in the ordinary sense in which that word is used, you cannot try a number of persons together in respect of those events by attributing a special and unusual meaning to the word in s. 239 of the Code.

The ordinary meaning of the word "transaction" cannot be stretched so as to make it embrace all the incidents of a long continued rebellion spread over a wide area and extending over many months. M In re GAM MALLU DORA, 48 M. — s. 250—Recording of reasons essential for awarding compensation—Policy underlying s. 250.

Section 250, Cr. P. C., requires, before an order for compensation could be made by a Magistrate, not only that he should be satisfied that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious but that the Magistrate, directing compensation to be paid, should record his reasons for making such a direction. The recording of the reasons, for ordering compensation to be paid, is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of the power and is in addition to the finding of the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious.

The reasons must go to show, why it is that the Magistrate considers the accusation against the accused, to be frivolous or vexatious and why in his opinion it is a fit case, in which an order for compensation should be made. The policy of the Legislature in requiring that in such a case the reasons should be recorded in writing is to afford an opportunity to an Appellate or Revising Tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons so recorded.

"That no case is made out against any of the accused, that some of the accused were added vexatiously, that the complainant has shown no cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation, and that, therefore, he is directed to pay compensation," is not a proper compliance with the provisions of s. 250, Cr. Ordinarily once a Magistrate has given orders that a certain witness should be called he should take such steps as may be necessary or possible to enforce the attendance of the witness. It cannot, however, be laid down that in no case is it possible for the Magistrate, if he comes to the conclusion that the attendance of the witness is not really necessary, to dispense with his attendance.

A prosecution witness was cross-examined at length before and after charge. Subsequently the accused made an application that the witness may be summoned and examined as a defence witness. The Magistrate acceded to this request and granted two adjournments for the purpose of summoning the witness, who, however, could not attend and eventually the Magistrate dispensed with the attendance of the witness on the ground that as he had been cross-examined at length his examination as defence witness was not necessary:

Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the accused as the result of the refusal of the Magistrate to summon the witness, it could not be said that the Magistrate had acted entirely without jurisdiction. Pat RAMSAKAL RAI v. EMPEROR, 26 Cr. L. J. 1627

The provisions of s. 342 of the Cr. P. Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Ch. XVIII of the Cr. P. C. for recording evidence, and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment, whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial, is evidence recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII, for the purposes of s. 288, Cr. P. C.

The evidence recorded by the Committing Magistrate, if admitted under s. 288, Cr. P. C., must be treated as evidence for all purposes even as the basis of finding or verdict and on a par with any other evidence before the Sessions Court or as a substantive evidence on which the verdict of the Jury or judgment of the Judge can be based.

Witnesses who retract in the Sessions Court their statements made before the Committing Magistrate are lying witnesses, as they must have spoken falsehood either before the Committing Magistrate or in the Sessions Court. In their case the Sessions Judge must tell the Jury in his charge that their evidence should be regarded with great caution. The jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing evidence and it is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them in estimating the evidence in the light of the observations made by learned Judges in decided cases.

Where instead of cautioning the Jury as to placing reliance on the evidence of witnesses who have retracted their statements made before the Committing Magistrate, the Judge expresses his opinion in his charge with a certain degree of assertion in the words: "It seems clear to me that these witnesses have decided to go as far as they possibly can towards altering their evidence in such a way as shall secure the acquittal of the accused," the charge is vitiated, although the Judge also tells the Jury "it is for you to say whether you feel convinced as to the truth of the Magisterial depositions to an extent which would warrant you as prudent men in acting upon them." C ABDUL GANI BHUYA v. Where in a case tried by a Jury the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury makes a reference to the High Court under s. 307 of the Cr. P. C., the question to be decided by the High Court is whether the verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong or perverse. The High Court has not to decide what would appeal to it as true or false, but has to consider whether the view taken by the Jury was such as could not be supported on any consideration of the case whatsoever.

It makes a considerable difference to listeners like a Jury whether the statement of the accused made before the Committing Magistrate is read over by the reader of the Court, or whether the accused person is carefully examined in the presence of the Jury and his answers and demeanour noted by the Jury. In a case tried with a Jury the Judge should examine the accused person with care so that the defence of the accused and its hollowness, where it is untenable, may be fully impressed on the minds of the Jury. O EMPEROR v. What is necessary for the purpose of s. 342, Cr. P. — s. 345—Composition of offence, what is—

Agreement to refer to arbitration, whether amounts to composition—Compromise of civil and criminal cases, difference between.

The compounding of an offence supposes an agreement by which the parties have settled their differences and in the more usual acceptation of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution. At any rate the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by the arbitrators and some decision arrived at by themselves or by third parties.

The mere signing of an agreement to refer the subject-matter of certain criminal proceedings to arbitration does not amount to a composition of the offence under s. 345, Cr. P. C., and does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the case.

A muchilika is only one step towards the composition of the offence between the parties. It is only if the muchilika is carried out and according to its terms an award is arrived at, that there would be a complete composition in the case. Till that is done, the mere agreement or muchilika is only a preliminary step towards composition and not the composition itself.

Criminal cases do not stand on the same footing as civil cases in the matter of settlement. A criminal case is not a matter between parties as a civil case is. A Magistrate is not bound to recognize a reference to arbitration and wait for the arbitrators to make the award though it will be reasonable to do so. If he does not choose to wait he will not be doing anything illegal. But if he chooses to wait and then there is an award, that award may amount to a compounding of the offence in question and if it is an offence compoundable under s. 345, effect will be given to such compounding. But till the actual compounding takes place the Magistrate is not bound at all to stay his hands but may go on with the trial of the case. M RAMALINGA IYER v. BUDDA VARADARAJULU IYER, 22 L. A de novo trial means a new trial from the very beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour, and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. That object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a course is not in accordance with the provisions of s. 350, Cr. P. C.

child—"In the whole," meaning of—Alimony, grant of, by English Court, whether ousts jurisdiction of Magistrate under s. 488.

Under s. 488, Cr. P. C., every wife and every legitimate child and every illegitimate child can be awarded upto Rs. 100 provided the husband or the father has the means to pay the amount. The words "Rs. 100 in the whole" in the section do not mean that a Magistrate cannot award more than Rs. 100 in all for the support of the wife and the children whatever their number. What the words mean is that only a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid and no other payment either in the shape of fees or medical expenses, etc., should be ordered to be paid.

All that has to be proved in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate under s. 488, Cr. P. C., is that the child is unable to maintain itself and that the father neglected or refused to maintain it, and in the case of the wife that the husband refused or neglected to maintain her. Even a grown up child, if unable to maintain itself, is entitled to get maintenance from the father if he has the means.

That there has been no neglect to maintain the wife and children is a question of fact. But a mere offer to maintain is not sufficient.

The existence of an order for alimony by the English Divorce Court is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate under s. 488, Cr. P. C., since a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintaining the wife. M KENT v. KENT, 49 M. L. J. 335; 26 Cr. L. J. 1597; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 59 669

— s. 497—Bail—Jurisdiction of Court to order re-arrest of accused—Principles governing grant of bail.

Under sub-s. (5) of s. 497 of the Cr. P. C. a Court has ample jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion to order the re-arrest of any person out on bail, if it feels that the circumstances warrant or demand such a course.

On an application for bail, the Court is not called upon to conduct a preliminary trial of the case and consider the probability of the accused's guilt or innocence. It would be entirely exceeding its function if it did that in any detail; but it may incidentally have to look at the weight of the evidence against the accused as a necessary part of its proper function, that is, to enquire whether the giving of the bail as opposed to the arrest of the accused might lead to a real danger of his absconding and not appearing to take his trial or whether there is any real reason to suppose that he is likely to tamper with the witnesses who would be called against him. *M SANYASAYYA NAIDU v. — ss. 539B, 145—Proceedings under s. 145—Local enquiry—Memorandum not recorded—Proceedings, whether vitiated—Prejudice.

There is no universal rule that disobedience of a mandatory provision in a Statute has the consequence of nullification of all proceedings irrespective of the question of prejudice.

Where in a proceeding under s. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate makes a local enquiry in the presence of the Pleaders of the parties, who know where the Magistrate goes and the points to which his attention is drawn, but they do not ask the Magistrate to record a memorandum as required by s. 539B of the Cr. P. C., and are content to go on to judgment without seeing the memorandum, or even ascertaining whether one has been made, it is not open to any of the parties subsequently to say that the proceedings should be set aside for this formal defect unless it is shown that prejudice has been caused. *C FORBES v. In a case where the evidence of the guilt of an accused as a thief or dacoit rests upon discovery of stolen property from his possession and which is tried by the Jury, the proper course is to direct that the Jury are entitled to take the explanation offered by the accused of his possession. It is not necessary that such claim by the accused must be proved. There may be a case in which it is impossible for the person who is in possession of the property to prove how he obtained possession of it and if he states the circumstances under which he obtained it the Jury as a Court of fact may accept it; and in that case it will be their duty to acquit the accused.

It is not the law that if the prosecution succeeds in proving possession by the accused of recently stolen goods, it is his duty to prove his innocence, and that the presumption raised of his guilt cannot be rebutted by mere denial. Such a statement of the law laid down by a Judge in his charge to the Jury amounts to a misdirection which vitiates the charge. C KARATULIA v. EMPEROR, 42 C. L. J. 212; 26 Cr. L. J. 1582; A. I. A report of a crime to the Police carries with it a qualified privilege with regard to defamation. That qualified privilege amounts to this, that it is sufficient that if the defendant had an honest belief that what he said was true. An honest belief does not, however, come to the same thing as reasonable and probable cause.

Therefore, where there is theft in the house of the defendant, and he makes a report that the plaintiff was concerned in it, in the honest belief that the plaintiff was so concerned, the plaintiff's suit for recovery of damages for defamation is not maintainable. O SAJJAD HUSAIN v. A Court should not decide that a local custom exists unless the Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application, and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or by force and that it has been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned.

Election Petition—Election rules—Voter writing candidate's name on ballot paper—Vote, validity of—Misconstruction of rule—Refusal to apply rule—Revision—Interference by High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

Election Petition—concl'd.

One of the rules regulating the conduct of elections in Madras is that the voter should only place his mark on the ballot paper against the name of the candidate for whom he wants to vote and should not write his own name or the name of the candidate on the ballot paper. A voter who writes the name of the candidate on the ballot paper against the space left for the cross-mark commits a breach of the election rules. These rules are not merely directory but mandatory and a violation of these rules nullifies the vote and such a vote should be declared invalid.

The fact that a lower Court in dealing with an election dispute has misconstrued an election rule, is not a proper ground for interference with its decision in revision. Where however, the Court has refused to apply a certain rule on the ground that the rules should not be strictly construed in the case of illiterate voters its decision is open to revision. M VENKATARAMIAH v. Estates Partition Act (VIII B. C. of 1876), s. 119

—Partition between proprietors—Proprietor holding tenure, whether affected by partition.

Where in the course of a partition proceeding under the Estates Partition Act any question arises as to the extent or otherwise of a tenure, the tenure-holder is not in any way affected by the decision which may be arrived at by the Revenue Authorities for the purposes of the partition between the proprietors, and it is immaterial that the tenure-holder happens to be one of the proprietors and is a party to the proceedings in that character.

A partition under the Estates Partition Act deals with the rights of the proprietors and so far as raiya lands are concerned they are only entitled to a distribution of the rents. It is not the intention of the Act that the rights of tenants should be conclusively determined by the Record of Rights prepared for the purposes of the partition. PAT SUBEDAR RAI v. Statements which inculcate the maker more than, or equally with, others alone can afford any satisfactory guarantee of their truth. Less weight must be attached to statements which implicate the maker in a lesser degree than others. Where the principal blame is laid on others the statement is self-serving according to the ideas of the person making it and is entirely excluded from consideration. —s. 92—Promissory note payable on demand—Agreement to show that executant was not personally liable, whether can be proved.

Where a contract is founded on consideration and the party who has received the consideration writes down and signs the terms on which he has received it, it is not open to him to raise the plea that he did not agree to those terms.

The executant of a promissory-note cannot, under the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act, be permitted to prove a separate agreement according to which the sum specified in the note is not, as expressed therein, payable on demand but represents merely a portion of the capital of a partnership into which the parties had entered for the purposes of a certain business. L HIRA LAL v. A subsequent oral agreement varying the terms of a promissory-note as regards its exigibility on demand is inadmissible in evidence and cannot be proved under s. 92 of the Evidence Act.

An acceptance of the challenge by a party to a suit on a promissory-note to make the declaration about the existence of such an agreement on oath and the making of such a declaration on oath in pursuance thereof cannot override the provisions of the Evidence Act, as the powers of the Court to record agreements under O. XXIII, r. 3, C. P. C., are restricted to lawful agreements only and cannot be extended to one which is not legally provable.

The usual import of the words "on demand" in the promissory note is that the debt is due and payable immediately.

The provisions of the Oaths Act are not intended to be utilized in such a manner as would abrogate the provisions of the Evidence Act. N JAMU v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 194 378

Where a promissory note, on the face of it, purports to be payable on demand, parol evidence is not admissible, under proviso 3 of s. 92, Evidence Act, to show that at the time of making it, it was agreed that it should not be payable till a particular event happens. M SUBRAMANIA IYER v. —s. 92, proviso (3), scope of—Post-dated cheque—Stamp, necessary—Oral agreement that cheque is not to be presented till after the happening of a certain contingency, whether can be proved.

Evidence Act—contd.

A post-dated cheque is admissible in evidence although it bears a stamp representing duty payable in respect of a cheque and not the ad valorem duty payable in respect of a Bill of Exchange.

Oral evidence to contradict or vary or alter the terms of a negotiable instrument, the execution of which and the consideration for which are admitted, cannot be adduced having regard to the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act.

The provisions of proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act are inapplicable in a case in which an obligation under the written contract has attached. If the effect of the alleged contemporaneous oral agreement is merely to suspend the performance of the obligation contained in the written contract, evidence of such oral agreement cannot be admitted. On the other hand, it is permissible to adduce evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement under which the parties to the written contract agree that until the happening of a certain event no obligation whatever under the written agreement should attach, or, in other words that until the condition precedent has been fulfilled, the written agreement should be and remain inoperative and of no effect.

Defendant gave a post-dated cheque to the plaintiff on the understanding that the cheque was not to be presented for payment until and unless a certain dispute between the parties had been decided in a certain manner. Plaintiff brought a suit to recover the amount of the cheque from the defendant without taking steps to have the dispute decided:

Held, (1) that the effect of the agreement between the parties was not to contradict or to vary the terms of the cheque but to create a condition precedent to the attachment of any obligation under the cheque which would remain inoperative until after the adjudication of the dispute had taken place;

(2) that the agreement, therefore, fell within the purview of proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act and could be proved;

(3) that consequently the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed as premature. C. WALTER MITCHEL v. A. K. TENNENT, 52 O. 677; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1007 59

The fact that a person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and a certain man is, under s. 112 of the Evidence Act, conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man, unless it is proved that the latter had no access to his wife at any time when the child could have been begotten. It is immaterial how soon after the marriage the child was born. The only question in such a case is whether his mother had no access to the man whom she married at any time when the child could have been begotten. L. KAHAN SINGH v. NATHA SINGH, A. I. The obligation of serving co-sharers with notice of the execution of a rent-decree and the sale thereunder is not sufficiently carried out by serving notices on some of them.

Where a co-sharer landlord, who is a party to a decree for rent obtained by another co-sharer, stands by and allows the purchaser at the auction-sale in execution of the decree to purchase the holding under the impression that the decree is a rent decree and that he is purchasing the holding free from encumbrances, the co-sharer who stands by is estopped from subsequently challenging the character of the decree as a rent-decree and asserting that the sale was not free from encumbrances. *G. — ss. 115, 92—Sales, two, of same property—First vendee attesting second sale-deed—Disclaimer of purchase—Estoppel—S. 92, application.

The doctrine of estoppel is that if a man either by words or by conduct has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct.

The terms of s. 115 of the Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel.

Where a vendee of property subsequently attests a sale-deed relating to the same property executed by his vendor in favour of another person, he holds out that the sale-deed in his own favour was inoperative, and that he is willing that the property should be dealt with as if it were at the absolute disposal of his vendor, and if a third person on the faith of this representation purchases that property from the vendor, the vendee making the representation is estopped from claiming title to the property.

In such a case as the above, there is no conflict between s. 92 and s. 115 of the Evidence Act. There is no question of the admission of any oral evidence to rescind the earlier sale. The question simply is whether or not there was a representation made and acted upon.

Evidence Act—concl'd.

Sections 92 and 115, Evidence Act, deal with two entirely different topics. When a party seeks to give evidence of a subsequent oral agreement modifying the terms of the written grant, he puts forward that agreement as true and relies upon the truth of that agreement. In the case of an estoppel, the party who pleads it does not profess to show that the representation made is true. On the contrary, his case very probably is that the representation is false but that the person who made it should not be allowed to show that it is false. M MUHAMMAD BATCHA SAHIB v. A week later the application was re-filed without the order of the Court having been fully complied with. The Court gave another opportunity to the applicant to remove the defects but he failed to do so. When most of the particulars had been supplied it was discovered that the application had originally been filed on the last day of limitation;

— Res judicata—Implied decision, whether binding on parties in subsequent stages—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

Section 11 of the C. P. C. does not in terms apply to execution proceedings but an order in execution may be as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory order in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. Where, therefore, a point has once been expressly decided in the execution department, the decision binds the parties in all subsequent stages of the proceeding. Where a point has not been directly decided but is such as must be deemed to have been necessarily decided before the order for execution was passed, the decision has a similar binding force.

Plaintiff obtained a decree for an injunction restraining the defendants from erecting any building on the land in dispute. Plaintiff subsequently put in an application for execution of the decree complaining that the defendants had constructed a pavement on the land in dispute and asking for its removal. The defendants objected that the parties had compromised their dispute after the decree had been passed and that the pavement had been constructed in pursuance of that compromise. There was no objection taken that the construction complained of was not in defiance of the injunction. The Execution Court after taking evidence held that no compromise had been proved and dismissed the objection and directed that the pavement should be removed. After this order was carried out the defendants filed a set of objections complaining that the pavement was not a structure of the nature the construction of which had been prohibited by the decree and that the plaintiff having wrongfully obtained the removal of the pavement should be directed either to restore the pavement or to pay damages to the defendants:

Held, that the defendants having failed to take the objection in answer to the application for execution that the pavement was not a structure the construction of which was prohibited by the decree, were estopped from raising the objection at a subsequent stage inasmuch as the order of the Execution Court directing execution must be taken to have necessarily decided that the construction of the pavement was in defiance of the decree. A DIP PRAKASH v. An auction sale like any other contract comprises an offer and acceptance. The offer is made by the Court and is advertised by the proclamation of sale. So far as the identification of the property to be offered for sale is concerned, this is the only declaration which is authorised or required. Unless, therefore, there is something to show that the Court sold something less than was advertised for sale, the sale proclamation is conclusive as to the identity of the property sold.

In granting a sale certificate, it is the duty of the Court not to determine what property is to pass by the sale, but merely to record the already accomplished fact of a transaction that has taken place and to state what has been sold. The Court has no power to do more or to alter the fact of the sale which has actually taken place. Its action in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial.

In the case of a conflict between the sale proclamation and the sale certificate subsequently granted, the property sold must be determined by reference to the terms of the sale proclamation. PAT CHRISTIAN v. Family arrangement, what amounts to.

A family arrangement is an arrangement arrived at between the members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims where there is uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute being composed by a settlement based upon the acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a bona fide dispute which has to be settled by a private family settlement without having recourse to law. The mere fact that the agreement is entered into by persons who are relations of each other does not make such an agreement a family settlement so as to be binding on persons who are not even parties thereto. A MITTAR SAIN v. Fatal Accidents Act (XIII of 1855), ss. 1, 2—Death caused by collision on Railway—Damages, suit for—Remote damages, whether can be recovered—Money carried by deceased, loss of—Railway, liability of.

The Fatal Accidents Act is primarily intended to give the legal representatives of a person whose death has been caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another person, a right to recover compensation from the latter for the pecuniary loss resulting from the death to the deceased's children or other relatives enumerated in the first section of the Act. The second section of the Statute also allows the legal representatives to include in their action a claim for "any pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased occasioned by such wrongful act, neglect or default." The Act contemplates two sorts of damages: pecuniary loss to the estate of the deceased resulting from the accident and pecuniary loss sustained by the members of his family through his death.

The cardinal principle in cases of this character is whether the damage claimed is the natural and reasonable result of the defendant's act. A damage will assume this character if it can be shown to be such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the act. The damage will be remote when, although arising out of the cause of action, it does not so immediately and necessarily flow from it that the offending party may be made responsible for it; for instance, when it results from the wrongful act of a third party such as could not be naturally contemplated as likely to spring from the defendant's conduct.

Every cause leads to an infinite sequence of effects but the author of the initial cause cannot be made responsible for all the effects in the series. He is liable only for those which immediately flow out of his wrongful act.

If any personal injury is caused to a passenger by the negligence of a Railway Company, not only the immediate pain and expense caused by the accident, but also any consequent incapacity to attend to business would be a natural sequence of the wrongful act. If any loss is caused to his business by reason of the injured man's incapacity to attend to it, it is a loss to the estate and can be recovered by the injured person if he is alive and by his representatives if he dies.

Where a person is killed as the result of a Railway collision which is due to the negligence of Railway servants, his legal representatives are entitled to recover damages caused to them or to the estate of the deceased by the death of the deceased, but they are not entitled to claim from the Railway Company a sum of money which the deceased was carrying on his person at the time of the collision and which was not found on his person after the collision, unless it can be proved that the loss of the money was due directly to the collision. L SECRETARY OF STATE v. Foreigners Act (III of 1864), s. 2—Cession of territory—Allegiance, whether affected—Election by subject, what amounts to—Common Law of England, applicability of, to India.

Under s. 2 of the Foreigners Act the burden of proving that a person alleged to be a foreigner is not a foreigner and is not subject to the provisions of the Act, lies upon such person.

Where there is a State, the ordinary idea of Constitutional Law is that there are subjects in that State who are ruled by the Sovereign and when territory is ceded the inhabitants of that territory will ordinarily become subjects of the Sovereign to whom the territory is ceded.

In the absence of an express provision in a treaty of cession regulating the future nationality of the inhabitants of the ceded territory, a relinquishment of the Government of a territory is not only a relinquishment of the right to the soil of the territory but also of the right over the inhabitants of the country.

It is open to a subject of the ceded territory, unless the treaty expressly forbids, to elect to continue his former nationality and to prove such election. The burden of proving such election, however, lies on the person who asserts that he has made such election. It is not enough for him to merely assert, when the question arises, that he has elected to remain within the allegiance of his former Sovereign, there must be conduct on his part such as leaving the ceded territory and going to reside permanently in his former Sovereign's dominions, to indicate his previous election.

The Common Law of England which was formerly administered by the Supreme Court is part of the law to be administered by the High Courts unless it is superseded by Statute or otherwise. This Common Law can only be applicable when it is properly applicable to the society and circumstances of India. There is no department of law in which the Common Law of England is more applicable than that part of Constitutional Law which governs the question of nationality and the question of the status of British subjects. B JAGARDEO RAMSUMER TEWARI v. Hindu Law—Adoption by widow—Conditions imposed on adopted son, legality of—Agreement entered into by adopted son, whether binding—Stranger, whether can enforce agreement—Trust—Charge—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 2—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100.

A Hindu widow is not entitled when making an adoption to her deceased husband to impose any conditions on the adopted son which would diminish the value of the ancestral estate in the hands of the adopted son for the benefit of the widow's relatives.

Per Sulaiman, J.—In such a case, however, the adopted son, if of age, would not be prevented from undertaking a liability upon himself for consideration. He would be bound by his agreement not because the widow has power to impose such conditions on him before adopting him but because he has himself entered into an agreement in lieu of consideration. The binding force of the agreement would be derived not from the authority of the widow to impose such conditions but from the act of the adopted son himself.

The agreement of the widow to adopt a certain person is a good consideration for an agreement entered into by the latter to hand over a portion of the estate belonging to the adoptive father to certain nominees of the widow. The nominees themselves, however, not being parties to the arrangement, would not be entitled to bring a suit against the adopted son to enforce the terms of the agreement.

Although under the Contract Act it is not necessary that the consideration for an agreement should move from the promisee himself, it is nevertheless necessary under s. 2 of the Act that the proposal should be made to the promisee and the latter should signify his assent thereto. Therefore, a stranger cannot enforce a contract to which he was himself no party, unless the agreement amounts to a family arrangement or creates a trust or creates a charge.

A Hindu widow at the time of making an adoption to her deceased husband executed a deed reciting the fact that she was about to make the adoption and stating that the adopted son would pay a certain sum of money to a person named by her and that if the money was not paid the latter would be entitled to obtain payment through Court by causing the property of the widow to be sold at auction or by any other way he liked. The adopted son also executed an agreement binding himself to abide by all the conditions specified in the deed executed by the widow:

Held, (1) that there was no trust created in favour of the nominee of the widow inasmuch as no money belonging to the widow had been expressly entrusted to the adopted son for the purpose of payment to her nominee;

(2) that there was no charge created on any portion of the estate of the widow's deceased husband inasmuch as the widow had no power to create a charge which would enure for the benefit of the chargeholder beyond her lifetime and the adopted son had merely accepted the condition laid down in the deed but had not himself purported to create any charge on the estate;

(3) that, therefore, it was not open to the nominee, who was himself a stranger to the arrangement, to sue the adopted son for the recovery of the sum mentioned in the deed. A MITTAR SAIN v. DATA RAM, 24 A. L. J. 185; A. I. R. 1926 All. 194 1000

Under the karta putra form of adoption the adopted son does not lose his status in his natural family, although he acquires a status as a son of his adoptive father. which involves the adoptee being an adult. Although such an adoptee does not lose his rights of inheritance in his natural family and takes the inheritance of his adoptive father, he does not succeed to the property of his adoptive father's father or other collateral relations nor of the wife of his adoptive father or her relations. In the case of such an adoption there is no contract that the adopted son would in all events succeed to the property of his adoptive father.

Under the Mithila School of Hindu Law a natural born son is entitled to exclude every other kind of son, including a karta putra, from sharing with him in the estate of his father. Pat KANHAIYA LAL SAHU v. SUGA KUER, 6 P. L. T. 593; 4 Pat. 824; A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 90 65

——— Custom—Succession—Stridhan property of woman married in karao form—Customary marriage, validity of—Approved form—Presumption—Burden of proof.

The rule of succession to stridhan property left by a woman married in the karao form ought, in the first instance, to be determined with reference to the particular custom of the caste. Where the incidents of such custom can be traced they must be given the force of law.

The Hindu Law recognizes custom as a matter of paramount importance, and custom if it is established can override the written law. There may, therefore, be customary forms of marriage which are perfectly valid and which do not strictly come within the definition of any of the eight forms of marriage mentioned in the Mitakshara.

When a customary form of marriage is allowed it may be in any one of the eight forms mentioned in the Mitakshara, or an approach to any one of them. It is not correct to say that unless it is shown that a customary marriage was in the asura form, it must always be conclusively presumed that it was in the brahma form. When the particulars of a customary form of marriage are known then the question of the presumption that it was in the brahma form becomes of very little importance. That presumption substantially arises only when all that is known is that a marriage did take place. In such cases the presumption is that the marriage was in the brahma form no matter what the caste of the parties be. But when the incidents and the circumstances attending the customary form of marriage are known the presumption can no longer be applied and the Court must find of what form it is. When facts are proved the question of what form the marriage is becomes a question of law.

Where re-marriage of widows is allowed by the custom of a caste such a marriage may not have any disapprobation attaching to it, on the other hand even among castes which allow the validity of widow re-marriages such marriages may be regarded as not a praiseworthy and superior form but a blameworthy and inferior form of marriage. The rule of succession to the stridhan property of a widow who had re-married ought, therefore, to vary according as the marriage is or is not blameworthy. For instance if a virgin widow has not passed out of her parent's family and is still under its control and her parents or other legal guardians in pursuance of the caste custom which allows such marriages give her away in marriage a second time as if she were a maiden the marriage though a widow marriage would undoubtedly be in the brahma form if there is no social censure attaching to it. On the other hand if a widow, who is not a virgin, herself enters into a matrimonial alliance in a form considered blameworthy by the caste, though recognised by custom as valid, and there is no gift of her by her legal guardians it may be difficult to see any analogy between such a marriage and the brahma form of marriage even though there be no consideration paid to her guardians. It may rather be an approach to the gandharba form where the marriage takes place with the mutual desire of the parties. In this latter case, it would be of an inferior form, particularly when such a marriage is looked down upon by the caste people; but if such a marriage is not considered the least blameworthy, it would be deemed to be of the brahma form.

When a particular form of marriage is recognised by custom it is to be presumed that the caste approves of it and no social censure attaches to it, unless the contrary is established. The burden lies on the person who asserts the contrary.

Per Daniels, J.—Under the Hindu Law a marriage is presumed to be in an approved form unless it is shown to be in a disapproved form. If a marriage is valid at all, the natural presumption is that it is valid in all respects and carries the full privileges and obligations of an approved marriage, and the burden of proving that its results fall short of this is on the person who asserts it. This rule applies equally to marriages which derive their validity from custom. A KISHAN DEI v. SHEO PALTAN, L. R. 6 A. 557 Civ.; 23 A. L. J. 931; A. I. R. 1926 All. 1 358 ——— Daughter succeeding to estate of father, position of—Alienation—Necessity—Alienee, whether entitled to partition.

A Hindu daughter inheriting her father's estate is a limited owner and is not entitled to alienate the property absolutely without there being legal necessity therefor. She cannot bind the inheritance for her own personal debts or private purposes as against reversioners, but she can alienate the property for her own life and effect can be given to such alienation by partition sought at the instance of the alienee. Pat SAHDEO SINGH v. The question whether an antecedent debt did or did not exist is one of fact and cannot be agitated in second appeal. The fact that the lower Appellate Court has declined to accept the recitals in the deed of transfer as evidence of the existence of an antecedent debt, does not vitiate its finding as to the existence of such a debt.

Under ordinary circumstances and apart from Statute, recitals in deeds can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under them. Such recitals cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. O BHAGWATI PRASHAD v. LALL BAHADUR, A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 33 404 ——— Decree against father for mesne profits—Sons' liability to pay such decree—Joint family property, whether liable to pay decree for mesne profits against father—Liability of sons in general for father's debts.

Under the Hindu Law the sons are bound to discharge a decree for mesne profits passed against their father and the joint family property in their hands is liable to be attached in execution of such decree.

Hindu Law—contd.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The expression "Avyavaharika," means "grossly immoral or flagrantly unjust."

The sons are not liable, where the moneys were originally obtained by the father by the commission of an offence; the son's liability is, on the other hand, recognised where, in its origin, the debt was not immoral, but there was supervening dishonest act of the father.

If the debt is in its inception not immoral, subsequent dishonesty of the father does not exempt the son.

It is not every impropriety or every lapse from the right conduct that stamps the debt as immoral. The son can claim immunity only when the father's conduct is utterly repugnant to good morals, or is grossly unjust or flagrantly dishonest.

The liability for mesne profits is not in the nature of "danda" or fine.

The word "rina" as used in the texts has a much wider application than a mere debt or loan, and the obligation to pay mesne profits is in the nature of a "rina."

The conduct of the father in remaining in unlawful possession of another's property cannot be said to be honest but at the same time it cannot be characterised to be so grossly unjust or immoral, or so flagrantly dishonest as to make the debt "Avyavaharika" within the meaning of the Hindu Law.

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—Under the Hindu Law the liability of a son to pay the father's debt rests upon the well-known pious obligation on the part of the son to relieve his father from punishment in a future state, for the non-discharge of debts. The general rule is that the son should discharge his father's debts unless the debts fall within the well-recognised exceptions.

An examination of the nature of the debt, at its inception, is a necessary condition, for finding out whether a particular debt is an immoral debt.

A debt, which is not immoral at its inception, is binding on the son, though subsequently it may be tainted by dishonesty and immorality.

Improper, imprudent, unreasonable, or dishonest debts are not necessarily immoral.

The son's liability arising by the commission of offences by the father has been always held to be immoral; and the test of benefit to the estate is not a material question for consideration as "the liability of the son depends upon the nature of the act."

The term "rina", strictly understood, means "what is taken under a promise to re-pay," namely, a debt or a loan. But in view of the judicial decisions, it is impossible to give the term this restricted significance.

A decree for mesne profits is in the nature of a "debt" as understood in Hindu Law.

Decree for mesne profits is not in the nature of "danda" or fine. M RAMASUBRAMANJA PILLAI v. SIVAKAMI AMMAL, 21 L. W. 656; (1925) M. W. N. 371; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 841 165

Where a Hindu father appropriates money belonging to another person under circumstances which do not render the taking of the money itself a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge his sons from their liability arising out of their pious obligation to satisfy the debt. But the position is different if the money is taken by the father and misappropriated under circumstances which render the taking itself a criminal offence.

One J was plaintiff's patwari and owed the plaintiff a sum of money in respect of the collections made by him on behalf of the plaintiff and being unable to pay the amount he arranged with A that the latter should execute a mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiff to discharge the debt. After A's death plaintiff brought a suit to enforce the mortgage-bond against A's son:

Held, (1) that it was J's duty to account for the money which had come into his hands to the plaintiff and his failure to do so involved on his part a breach of civil duty and that even if he had misappropriated the money it was a subsequent act which did not render the original taking of the money by J a criminal offence and that, therefore, J's debt in discharge of which A had executed the mortgage-bond in suit was not tainted with illegality or immorality, and A's son was under a pious obligation to discharge the debt secured by the mortgage-bond;

(2) that the plaintiff was not, however, entitled to a mortgage-decree inasmuch as the debt was not incurred by A for the benefit of the family;

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to a simple money-decree for the amount of the mortgage-bond with interest and could recover the amount of the decree out of the entire ancestral property in the hands of A's son. *PAT RAMESHWAR SINGH BAHADUR v. ——— Son's liability to pay father's debt—Antecedent debt.

Under Hindu Law a son is bound to satisfy the debts of his father out of the ancestral property provided they are neither illegal nor immoral and a son cannot avoid this liability on the ground that there was no necessity for borrowing or that the transactions were reckless and extravagant in that the money could have been borrowed at a cheaper rate of interest.

The sons are liable not only to pay their fathers' debt upon a mortgage but also the interest due thereon.

A person who holds a mortgage decree against a deceased Hindu has two remedies open to him. He may either bring a fresh suit for enforcement of his charge against the interest of the sons in the property or he may seek out execution against the property of the deceased in the hand of the sons and leave it to them to take whatever objections they choose to take.

Obiter.—The doctrine of "antecedent debt" is a compromise between the rule that the father cannot alienate ancestral property for his own purposes and the rule that the son is under a pious obligation to discharge his father's debts. *PAT GAYAN NATH SAHI v. —Inheritance—Daughter's grandson, whether heir—Test—Dayabhaga—Spiritual benefit.

The foundation of the theory of inheritance as propounded in the Dayabhaga proceeds on the doctrine that only those can inherit who can confer spiritual benefit on the owner whose property they claim to inherit.

A daughter's grandson, being unable to confer spiritual benefit, is not an heir under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law. Nor does he become heir on the ground of propinquity, even if there is nobody alive who can confer spiritual benefit on the deceased owner. C NEPALDAS MUKHERJEE v. PROBHAS CHANDRA MUKHERJEE, 42 C. —Alienation—Necessity, proof of—Extent of money required for necessity—Knowledge of lender—Money spent on building house required for education of children, whether spent on necessary purpose.

Where money is borrowed on the security of family property for a necessary purpose it is difficult for the lender to know the exact extent of the legal necessity in respect of which he advances the money, and where it is found that all the facts were not within the lender's knowledge the test to be applied to his case must necessarily be less strict than that which would be applicable if all the facts surrounding the alienation and of the necessity therefor were within his knowledge.

Money spent on erecting a house, the building of which is necessitated by the educational requirements of the children of the alienor, cannot be said to have been spent for legal necessity. C JOGESH CHANDRA GHOSH v. CHAPALA SUNDARI BASU; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 383 594

Money required for the purpose of effecting repairs to the family dwelling house is required for a necessary purpose which would justify an alienation of family property. —Joint family—Alienation—Mortgage by father—Necessity—Enquiry by mortgagee—Mortgagee, whether bound to see to application of money—Loan not sufficient to meet necessity, effect of—Appeal, second—Necessity, whether question of fact or law.

A person who lends money on the security of joint family property is bound to enquire into the necessity for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. If he does so enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge. Under such circumstances he is not bound to see to the application of the money lent by him.

A finding as to the existence of necessity is a finding of fact. When a Court finds in favour of the existence of family necessity for a loan but holds that the lender is not protected on the ground that he did not see to the application of the money, the finding becomes a ground of law and a second appeal is maintainable.

A lender is not obliged to ascertain that the amount of money which he advances is equal in amount to the entire debt which constitutes the family necessity. If there exists a necessity which would justify the use of the whole money borrowed, the lender is then justified in making the advance whether or not other funds will be necessary for the same purpose.

The fact that the interest on a mortgage is higher than the Court interest on the decree for payment of which the mortgage is executed does not vitiate the mortgage, nor does the fact that the amount of the property mortgaged is larger than the amount which was about to be sold under the decree. *O SHEO BEHARI v. A term of 40 years fixed for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage executed by the manager of a Hindu joint family is one that on the face of it calls for proof of necessity.

In a redemption suit the omission of the plaintiff to expressly deny the accuracy of the accounts filed by the mortgagee does not justify the inference that the accounts are admitted. It is the mortgagee's duty to support his accounts by evidence.

——— Joint family—Alienation—Mortgage by manager—Interest, high rate of—Necessity—Burden of proof—Finding by Trial Court—Appellate Court, interference by.

The manager of a Hindu joint family, whether the father or not, is not entitled in law to borrow money at an exorbitant rate of interest unless there is necessity for such a rate, and, if the rate of interest is excessive, the onus will be on the lender to show that there was necessity for such an onerous rate; that is, where the rate is shown to be onerous, it must be shown that there was pressing necessity at the time of the loan for such an onerous rate. The actual result brought about by the mounting of interest, if not paid, to a crushing figure cannot affect the principle. A Court is not entitled to presume that any particular rate of interest is onerous. A rate prima facie harsh may, considering the nature of the security offered, its dubious title or its exigious nature, be perfectly reasonable when the facts are known. Those attacking the transaction must first show prima facie that the rate of interest is unnecessarily high for the circumstances of the case, although in certain cases the rate may be prima facie so excessive that proof is practically unnecessary.

Where the Trying Court has not considered it necessary to call on the lender to explain the rate of interest, and no issue has been framed, therefore, a Court of Appeal should not interfere without giving an opportunity to the party affected to explain it, unless the rate is so monstrous as to be unconscionable in any conceivable set of circumstances.

The question is not really so much one of the legal relationship between a man and a woman as of equity that a woman who has been kept for a number of years and given a position almost equal to that of a wife should not be left to starve after the death of the man who kept her. Thus it is a matter not of a contract during the lifetime of the parties but of obligations arising out of the personal law of Hindus as defined by their religious texts.

——— Religious endowment—Charitable trust created by Will—Undivided sons appointed trustees—Sons, whether take as joint tenants or tenants-in-common—Will, construction of.

When a Hindu father makes a gift of self-acquired property to his sons who are members of a joint family, unless a tenancy-in-common is inferred from the grant, the presumption is that the sons take as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. This principle applies with greater force to cases where the father creates a trust and appoints his sons as trustees with hereditary rights, since the presumption is that in cases of trust property, trustees are to be ordinarily treated as joint tenants.

A Hindu by his Will bequeathed certain properties to charity and appointed his two sons who were members of a joint family as trustees thereof. The Will provided that "the lands mentioned herein as relating to the said charities should not in any way be alienated by the above-mentioned two persons or their heirs by means of sale, etc., but they should enjoy them hereditarily and conduct the above-mentioned charities," etc. There was a partition by the brothers later by which the management of the trust properties was to continue as before:

The power of a mohunt to alienate debutter property is limited to cases of unavoidable necessity.

A person deriving title from the holder of a limited interest in property is bound to prove the authority of the limited owner to make the alienation and ordinarily the onus would be on him to prove the validity of the transaction.

A mohunt is incompetent to create any interest in respect of the muth property to endure beyond his lifetime. The tenant or transferee acquires a right similarly limited.

If the successor of a mohunt permits the tenant to continue in possession and receives rent from him during his life, the tenancy thus created will be a new tenancy created by himself for his lifetime.

It is within the power of every successive trustee to continue the tenancy during his lifetime and consequently the possession of the tenant never becomes adverse to the successor of the last mohunt. C BEHARI LAL MANNA v. MURALI DHAR, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 287 567

——— Co-widows—Nature of estate—Partition, right of—Survivorship—Alienation by one widow—Necessity—Reversioner, whether bound—Amendment of plaint.

One of two Hindu co-widows who have inherited the properties of their husband cannot alienate the share of the other even for purposes beneficial to the estate without the consent of such other.

The estate of co-widows or other co-heiresses in Hindu Law is a joint estate, but, unlike other joint estates, it cannot be divided so as to create separate estates, such that each sharer is the owner of her share and at her death, the reversioner's estate falls in.

Such partition as is permissible is merely for the convenience of enjoyment by the widows; and may be of two kinds (a) so as to last during the lifetime of both the widows, (b) so as to bind them until the death of all of them. In the latter case if one of the widows dies before the other without alienating the property, it passes to the heirs of her private property and not to the other co-widow or their reversioners.

There can be no survivorship if the partition is of the second kind. But if it is of the first kind, it cannot affect the right of survivorship of the other.

One of the co-widows can alienate her share which may be defined or undefined according as there is a partition or not. If the alienor dies before the co-widow, the alienation ceases to be operative if there is no partition or if the partition is of the first kind, the property goes to the co-widow by survivorship. But if the partition is of the second kind, the property continues to be enjoyed by the alienee until the other co-widow dies.

Except in the case of an alienation for the limited purposes mentioned above, i.e., during the lifetime of the alienee, in a partition of the first kind, or during the lifetime of all the co-widows, in a partition of the second kind, there can be no alienation by a widow of her interest and whether there is necessity or not, an alienation by one co-widow cannot bind the reversioners.

If an alienation for necessity is to bind the reversioners, all the co-widows must join in it.

—Surrender—Bona fides, finding as to.

A surrender by a Hindu widow of her estate to the nearest reversioner of her husband is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that some provision is made for the benefit of the surrenderer.

A surrender by a Hindu widow to be valid must be bona fide and not merely a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. A finding that the transaction was not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner, does not necessarily involve the conclusion that the surrender was bona fide, since want of good faith may be evidenced by other circumstances. M SIVA SUBRAMANIA PILLAI v. The word "malik" is not a term of art and does not, when used in a Will, necessarily define the quality of the estate taken by a devisee.

Held, that the testator intended to confer on the devisee not an absolute estate but the estate of a Hindu woman subject to a power of alienation only in the event of legal necessity. PAT SHEO DANI KUER v. RAMJI UPADHYA, A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 76 757

The value to be placed at a given moment on a plot of land, which is not in the market or the subject of bargain and sale, but owes a large part of any value it possesses to the prospective results of development work, to be undertaken thereafter at an uncertain time and at an estimated cost, is not only in its essence a question of fact but is one upon which, almost above any other, opinions will differ, without its being possible to give irrefragable reasons for any particular conclusion.

The Privy Council will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon a question of valuation. Where their Lordships have neither the materials nor the experience on which to found an opinion of their own, in a matter where the opinions of competent Courts in India differ (and a fortiori where they concur), it is not their practice to interfere as an Appellate Tribunal, unless there appears to be some error in law or miscarriage of justice. P O NOWROJI RUSTOMJI WADIA v. Whether the claim made is one for enhanced rent, or a claim for rent for excess land taken in occupation by the tenant, the principle is the same, that the question must not be at the mercy of one sharer, but it must be decided between the tenant and the whole body of the sharers entitled to claim rent as landlords. B VAGHA JESANG v. — Co-sharers—Suit by one co-sharer to recover rent of entire holding, maintainability of—Person interested in particular area of holding, whether co-sharer.

A holding cannot be split up or sub-divided without the consent of the tenant and a tenant has a right to insist that his holding should be kept intact in the state in which it was first created. There is, however, nothing to prevent a co-sharer landlord from bringing a suit for the entire rent of the holding with a prayer that out of the entire rent decreed he may be allowed to recover his share of the rent, provided he makes the other co-sharers parties to the suit.

So far as a tenant is concerned he is liable to pay rent for the entire holding to the persons who have got the superior interest, although as between themselves the co-sharers are entitled to make a division of area and of the rent.

A person who has got an undivided share in the holding as well as a person who has become interested in a particular area of the holding are both co-sharers in the holding and are entitled to maintain a suit to recover the entire rent of the holding making the other co-sharers parties to the suit. C MOHINI MOHAN SAHA CHOWDHURY v. — Dispossession of tenant from portion of holding—Rent, suit for, whether maintainable.

Where a tenant has never been put in possession of the whole area comprised in the demise but has taken possession of a portion thereof, the Court has power to fix a rate of rent for the area actually taken possession of by the tenant, to be paid by the tenant, on the ground that although he has contracted for the whole area he has elected to go into possession of a portion only of the area. Where, therefore, under circumstances over which the landlord had no control the tenant has not been given possession of the whole area, the Courts have decreed the rent in proportion to the area of the land of which the tenant has obtained possession.

Where, however, a tenant has been in possession of the whole demised area and has subsequently been deprived of a portion thereof by the action of the landlord, it is not open to the landlord to come to Court and ask the Court to fix the rent for the portion of the area which remains in the possession of the tenant. In such a case the landlord is not entitled, after dispossessing the tenant from a portion of the demised area, to sue for rent in respect of the whole or of any portion thereof, where the rent is fixed for the whole holding and not at so much per bigha. C SURESH CHANDRA SAMADDAR v. ——— Rent suit, whether maintainable against some heirs of deceased tenant—Liability to pay rent—Tenants-in-common, rights and liabilities of—Joint and several liability—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 43, applicability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, rr. 6, 9, 10 (2)—Court's duty—Amendment—Dismissal.

By the Full Bench (C. C. Ghose and Mukerji, JJ. dissenting):—A suit for rent is maintainable against some of the heirs or successors-in-interest of a deceased tenant without bringing all the heirs and successors-in-interest on the record.

The liability of a tenant to pay rent arises from the fact of possession of the land as a tenant, where there is no express contract, and all persons in possession of land as tenants are under an implied obligation to pay the rent for the land to the landlord, whether they get into possession by right of succession or assignment.

The heirs of a deceased tenant do not take the tenancy as an entire body forming as it were a partnership or a corporation, the individual members of which have no definite interest. They take as tenants-in-common, each having a definite share in the whole.

A tenant-in-common is entitled to possession of every part of the estate and there is a privity of estate between him and the landlord in the whole of the leasehold. Again, as, on the basis of the privity of estate a tenant-in-common is liable for all covenants running with the land and as his estate is an estate in the whole of the leasehold, he is liable for the entire rent.

Whether a contract is implied for payment of rent by all tenants-in-common in possession of a leasehold, or whether the law be held to impose the liability for payment of rent by reason of privity of estate, any one of such tenants may be sued for entire rent due to the landlord. This may be either in accordance with the provisions of s. 43 of the Contract Act, or under general law based on privity of estate.

A decree in such a suit will not have the effect of a decree for rent under Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Per Mukerji, J.—Section 43 of the Contract Act has no application except in the case of original lessees or persons who were party to the contract and it makes, as far as the liability under a contract is concerned, all joint contracts joint and several.

Persons who are under a joint liability to pay rent are necessary parties in a suit for rent. But a decree obtained in the absence of some of the cotenants is not necessarily a nullity. It is a valid decree but is effective only as a decree for money. If, however, objection is taken at the right moment to the maintainability of the suit, the Court must proceed under O. I, r. 10 (2), O. P. C., to make an order for the addition of such of the persons as are not already on the record as defendants and it is only in the event of the necessary amendments not being made that the suit is liable to be dismissed. C KAILASH CHANDRA MITRA v. ——— Suit by landlord against tenants as trespassers—Occupancy rights, plea of—Burden of proof—Appeal, second—Finding of fact.

Where in a suit by the landlord to eject a tenant from the lands held by him, the tenant sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such right lies upon the tenant.

In the Presidency of Madras when a tenancy commences under a terminable contract there is nothing to prevent the landlord from ejecting the tenant at the end of the term from the lands which have been let to him.

Where in a suit for damages for use and occupation by a landlord, on the footing that the defendants were holding over and were trespassers in law, the latter plead permanent rights of occupancy, the burden of making out occupancy rights lies on the defendants.

Where the tenants by muchilikas undertook to surrender the lands at the end of the term, and there was constant change of tenants and enhancement of rent, and alienations by the tenants were few in number and of recent times:

Held, that a finding that the tenants had no occupancy rights was justified and that the High Court would not in second appeal interfere with the finding. M ANNAMDEVULA TATA v. AHAMADULLA KHAN SAHIB BAHADUR, 48 M. L. J. 701; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 890; 22 L. W. 528 401 ——— Transfer by tenant, effect of—Suit for ejectment against transferee—Defendant, whether can set up another transfer.

In answer to a landlord's suit for ejectment against a transferee on the ground that a particular transfer of an absolute occupancy holding is voidable for want of consent, it is open to the defendant to contend in the alternative, that even if the transfer sought to be avoided, be voidable, he is entitled to retain possession under another transfer which is binding as against the landlord.

Ordinarily, the tenant-right, as between the tenant mortgagor and his transferee becomes transferred absolutely to the latter the moment the final decree for foreclosure is passed, and nothing remains which the tenant can claim to be his own.

If the mortgage on the basis of which such foreclosure is obtained, is a legal, or a consented or ratified mortgage, then, the transferee's position is secure, not only against the tenant, but also against the landlord.

But if the mortgage is neither legal nor consented to by the landlord, nor subsequently ratified by the acceptance of rent by the landlord from the transferee as such the latter's position is nothing better than that of a mere trespasser liable to be ejected by the landlord.

By consenting to a mortgage the landlord consents to a foreclosure also provided it takes place so long as the tenant-right is subsisting. The consent does not enure for the benefit of the transferee if he has not worked out his rights under the transfer so long as the tenant-right subsisted.

If the tenancy is determined by forfeiture the mortgage even if valid as against the landlord is also determined. N SHEOBUX v. JAGANNATH, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 184 364

The condition against alienation in a hereditary non-transferable lease in Oudh is inserted for the benefit of the superior proprietor and it is not competent to the transferor of the interest, in a suit between himself and the transferee, to raise the plea that the transfer is void. Where, however, an attempt is made to sell the interest of the lessee in execution of a money-decree against him, not only the lessee can raise the objection that his interest under the lease is not transferable but he is bound to do so. ————— Two leases, grant of, to same person—Implication of surrender of first—Indian and English Law, difference between.

The rule of English Law that the acceptance of a new lease operates as a surrender of a prior lease to the same person of the same property is applicable only in cases where there is such incompatibility between the enjoyment under the new lease and the enjoyment under the prior lease that the second will involve a surrender of the first.

The plaintiff, a landlord, leased to the defendant a large plot of land for purposes of coffee cultivation for a period of 91 years. Less than 20 years thereafter, the plaintiff again granted 20 acres out of the same area to the same person on lease for gold washing purposes for a period of 36 years. The lessee specifically agreed to pay rent on both the leases without any abatement. On the expiry of the period of the second lease, in a suit by the landlord for damages for use and occupation in respect of the 20 acres of land and for value of buildings and machinery alleged to have been wrongly carried away:

Held, (1) that the grant of the second lease was not inconsistent with the continuation of the first;

(2) that the plaintiff was not, during the existence of the first and the longer lease, entitled to ask for relief on the ground of expiry of the second lease.

Per Ramesam, J.—Under the Indian Law, where there are two leases to the same person, a surrender of the first lease need not necessarily be implied from the grant of the second.

Even where the leases are of the same kind and they are overlapping and the terms of the second are somewhat inconsistent with the terms of the first, all that is necessary to imply is a cancellation of the first only for a period which is overlapped by the second.

Unlike under the English Law, delivery of possession by the lessor to the lessee is not a necessary

Letters Patent (Lah.), cl. 12—“Suit for land,” what is—Suit for management of trust, whether suit for land.

A suit for the accounts of the management of a trust and for its administration is not a “suit for land” within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of the Madras High Court, though the whole of the immoveable property belonging to the trust may be outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court in its Original Side.

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—The expression “suit for land” must be construed as an action the primary object of which is to establish claims regarding title to property or possession of property and no suit can be described as a “suit for land” as the result of the decision in which the title to, or possession of, immoveable property will not in any manner or measure be directly affected. M KRISHNADOSS VITTALDOSS v. Letters Patent (Ran.), cl. 13—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 5, order under, wheher “judgment” — Appealable order, whether “judgment.”

An order under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, C. P. C., requiring an appellant to give security, is not a “judgment” within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent (Rangoon), because it is merely an interlocutory order which does not affect the merits of the dispute between the parties by determining some right or liability which is in controversy between them in the suit.

Semble.—Where an appeal against an order actually is given by the C. P. C., it might well be argued that the order ought to be regarded as a “judgment” within the meaning of the Letters Patent. R MENGHA SINGH v. SUCHA SINGH, A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 267; 3 R. 307; 4 Bur. L. J. 108 995

The suit contemplated in r. 103 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of property purchased in execution of a decree and claims possession under his auction-purchase. The rule does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person, apart from his character as auction-purchaser, may have against the defendant. If a suit is brought under r. 103 within the statutory period, the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. But if he has any other cause of action against the defendant it cannot be said that the rule bars his suit based on such cause of action.

Plaintiff obtained a rent-decree against a tenant and in execution of that decree purchased and obtained possession of the holding of the judgment-debtor. Defendant thereupon made an application under r. 100 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. alleging dis-possession in execution of the decree and praying for restoration of possession. This application was allowed and more than a year after the date of the order allowing the application plaintiff brought a suit for possession of the holding on the allegation that his tenant having parted with the holding wrongfully, the plaintiff was entitled to re-enter:

Held, that plaintiff's suit was not one under the provisions of r. 103 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. but was based on an entirely different cause of action and that, therefore, it was not governed by Art. 11A of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and was consequently not barred by time. C AMBIKA CHARAN BHAKTA v. RAM PROSAD CHATTERJEE, 30 C. W. N. 163; 42 C. L. J. 578; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 377 575

The heir of the deceased subsequently appeared and filed an objection but his claim was rejected and an order was passed that he should go to the Civil Court and that if he succeeded in establishing his claim he would be entitled to get possession of his land. Shortly thereafter the heir who had filed the objection died and his sons filed a suit for a

— Art. 95—Decree obtained by fraud, whether void or voidable—Sale held in execution of fraudulent decree—Suit to set aside decree and sale—Limitation.

A transaction tainted with fraud is voidable and not void. A decree obtained by fraud, collusion or any other unlawful means, is a pronouncement of a Court of Justice and cannot be treated as waste paper. The only objection that can be made to a decree as being void or a nullity must be on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction. Where a decree is passed by a Court which had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, a plaintiff will not succeed in obtaining any relief in respect of it unless he gets it vacated.

A sale held in execution of a fraudulent decree is not a void but a voidable sale, till vacated by an appropriate proceeding; the rights created thereby are effective. Consequently where the right to have a decree set aside as fraudulent has become barred by limitation, no decree can be passed setting aside the sale only as made in execution of a fraudulent decree.

A suit for a declaration that a decree and an auction sale thereunder are not binding on the plaintiff, is not a mere declaratory suit but in substance a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud and is governed by Art. 95 of Sch. Where a mortgage-bond provides for the payment of the mortgage-money by instalments and there is a condition attached that if default is made in payment of any one of the instalments the mortgagee would be entitled to demand the full amount secured by the bond with interest, the mortgagee has the option to demand the entire amount if there is default in payment of any one of the instalments. It is, however, open to the mortgagee to avail himself of this right or to waive it. He can exercise his option and demand payment of the entire amount on default of any one of the instalments or he can, under the terms of the bond, wait until the last instalment falls due. It is not obligatory for the mortgagee to bring a suit for realization of the entire amount as soon as any one of the instalments falls due. Sch. I, Art. 134—Mortgage—Transfer by mortgagee—Suit by mortgagor to recover possession of mortgaged property—Limitation, commencement of—Mortgagee put in possession—Allegation of absolute transfer in favour of mortgagee—Burden of proof.

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act cannot be pleaded in defence to a suit to recover possession of mortgaged property unless the person pleading it has had 12 years' possession of the property in suit. The Article refers to cases in which the subsequent transfer has been with possession and applies only to suits to recover possession of immoveable property.

Where land is mortgaged without possession and possession of it subsequently passes to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transfer in which possession was given was an outright sale lies on the person alleging it. R A. T. A. R. M. M. CHETTY FIRM v. MAHOMED KASIM, 3 R. 367; A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 377 1011

Art. 144—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 105, 111 (g)—Landlord and tenant—Tenant-at-will—Adverse possession, ingredients of—Limitation, commencement of.

It is possible for a tenant-at-will without first surrendering his tenancy and without effecting a new forcible entry on the land to set up a claim to hold by efflux of time so that his claim so to do may be ultimately uncontestable. To such cases the period of limitation applicable is that provided in Art. 144 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and the time from which the period of limitation begins to run is the date when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff.

As a general rule failure to pay rent by a tenant-at-will is apt to be regarded as the starting point of limitation, because that in itself amounts to a forfeiture of the tenure and if the tenant refuses to pay the rent the landlord has unmistakably notice and an opportunity if he wishes to eject the tenant and if he does not eject the tenant and allows him to remain in possession limitation begins to run against him. Mere failure, however, on the part of the landlord to exact from the tenant the rent due would not enable the tenant to assert that he was holding adversely. In a case in which the tenant is by virtue of his agreement with the landlord not liable to pay any rent, the mere failure to pay rent cannot form the starting point of limitation.

The fact that a tenant-at-will has made structural alterations on the land of his tenancy to the knowledge of the owner does not convert the possession of the tenant into adverse possession, inasmuch as such construction or alteration by even a tenant-at-will is not necessarily wholly incompatible with his position as a tenant.

Limitation Act—contd.

The entry of the name of a tenant as owner of the land of his tenancy in the Municipal records is not necessarily by itself such a proceeding as to amount to clear manifestation of the intention of the tenant to set up his own title to the land. Such an entry might well be made with the permission of the landlord on grounds of convenience.

An assertion in a public circular, however, by a person in permissive occupation of land and not paying rent or rendering services to the landlord, to the effect that the land belongs to him amounts to an assertion of adverse title and converts his possession into adverse possession and limitation begins to run against the landlord from the date of such assertion.

Per Aston, A. J. C.—Section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to a permissive tenancy which does not fall within the purview of s. 105 of the Act.

In the case of a monthly tenant or a tenant from year to year something more than a mere assertion of adversity would be required to determine the tenancy. Such an assertion merely gives the landlord the option to evict the tenant and the tenant must still prove some act on the part of the landlord indicating that the tenancy has been determined before he can claim that his possession was not that of a tenant but was adverse.

In the case of a permissive tenancy or a tenancy-at-will, however, it is an ingredient of the tenancy that it is terminable on the will either of the landlord or the tenant and in such a case the possession of the tenant becomes adverse to the landlord when he sets up a title of ownership in the property. S SIDIK HAJI YACUB v. P. C., and does not render the application altogether invalid for the purposes of extending limitation.

Limitation Act—contd.

Where in such an application the name of the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor is not correctly given under a bona fide mistake, the application is nevertheless one to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and operates to extend limitation. L BEGUM BIBI v. BULAQI SHAH & SONS, 2 L. C. 121; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 34 1050

— Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Application asking for attachment and sale of property outside jurisdiction of Court—Good faith—Extension of limitation—“For execution,” “step-in-aid of execution,” meaning of.

The words “for execution” and “step-in-aid of execution” in cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act mean “for the purpose of obtaining execution” and “step taken for the purpose of obtaining execution” respectively.

The bona fides or mala fides of an earlier application for execution is an important ingredient in determining whether that application is effective for the purpose of saving limitation under cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act for a later application, though the bona fides or mala fides of the later application cannot be judged at the time when it is presented from anything that has gone before and, therefore, cannot at the time of presentation be entered into.

An application for execution which asks the Court for a relief which the Court cannot grant, for instance the attachment and sale of property outside the jurisdiction of the Court, is not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and does not operate to extend limitation under that clause. A SHEO PRASAD v. NARAINIBAI, A. I. R. 1926 All. 95; 24 A. L. J. 137 938

An execution application is one made in accordance with the law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of Sch. I to the Limitation Act if the particulars required by rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI, of the C. P. C. are mentioned in the application. The mere fact that the application is made by one of several joint decree-holders does not take it out of the purview of cl. (5) of Art. 182.

Even where an application for execution is not one in accordance with the law a notice issued under r. 22 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. upon such application would be a step which would give a fresh start for limitation under cl. (6) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. PAT JOGENDRA PRASAD NARAYAN SINHA v. to proceed as for a money-decree. On 19th November 1923 some property belonging to the appellant-judgment-debtor was sold. The sale was confirmed on 20th December and the case was dismissed on full satisfaction. On the same day the appellant put in a petition to set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C., and the sale was eventually set aside on the 8th March 1924. On 24th March 1924 respondent applied once more to execute his decree as a rent-decree.

Held, (1) that the second application for execution was one in continuation of the first application inasmuch as the prayer in both the applications made by the respondent was that the decree should be executed as a rent-decree;

(2) that in any case the sale in execution of the first decree having been set aside, the respondent's right to execute the decree revived and the second application having been made within three years of the date on which the sale had been set aside was not barred by limitation. PAT DEONARAYAN SINGH v. — Sch. I, Art. 183—Execution of decree—Decree-holder, death of—Legal representative, substitution of, whether necessary—“Payment,” whether must be by judgment-debtor or his agent—Limitation.

On the death of a decree-holder, it is not necessary that his legal representative should bring himself on the record in the place of the deceased before applying to execute the decree. No such process is contemplated by the procedure laid down either in the Procedure Code or in the rules on the Original Side. All that is necessary is that the person who becomes by operation of law entitled to have execution should make an application for execution.

A payment to save limitation and give rise to a fresh starting point under Art. 183 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act must be for the judgment-debtor or on his account. It is not necessary that it should be either by the debtor himself or by some person acting on his behalf.

—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190 (1) (b)—Sale of arrack in contravention of Collector's order and terms of license—Offence—Abkari Inspector's report, absence of, effect of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take cognizance—Conviction—Procedure.

A person selling arrack in his shop at an hour in contravention of an order promulgated by the District Collector does not commit an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. In such a case there is no question of causing or tending to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any one, and it does not follow, as a matter of course, that selling drinks will lead to riots or disturbance.

The Madras Abkari Act is not self-contained in the matter of the procedure for the investigation of offences under s. 55 of the Act. In such a case the procedure to be followed is laid down in s. 5 (2) of the Cr. P. C. to be under that Code. There is nothing in the Act to indicate what is the procedure to be followed when an offender is sent under s. 31 of the Act direct to a Magistrate, nor is there a provision at all for a case where the offender is not placed under arrest.

Where in a prosecution under s. 31 of the Abkari Act the accused is neither arrested nor bailed out before the trial begins, the Police has authority to send him direct before a Magistrate. It is, therefore, a case to which s. 190 (1) (b) of the Cr. P. C. will apply. The absence of a report by an Abkari Inspector in such a case does not debar a Magistrate from taking cognizance of an offence under s. 55 of the Act and a conviction by him is not open to objection.

Where a case investigated by a Police Officer includes in addition to an offence under s. 55 of the Abkari Act a non-cognizable offence under the Penal Code, the Police Officer would be correct in taking up the more serious offence as the principal offence, that is, the one in which he could arrest without a warrant, namely, under s. 55 of the Abkari Act, and following the provisions of that Act, so far as it can be done, rather than of the Cr. P. C., and, if he can follow the provisions of both by ensuring that the accused should appear before a Magistrate, it is obviously his duty to do so. The same procedure will be the proper procedure for a Police Officer to adopt when he is confronted with an offender whose offences are both under s. 55 of the Abkari Act and a cognizable offence under the Penal Code. M In re YERLAGADDA VENKANNA, 48 M. Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) —Rules for decision of disputes as to validity of elections, r. 11—Validity of vote—Returning Officer, whether final authority—Election Court, jurisdiction of—Ballot paper, marks on, effect of—Electoral Roll—Two persons corresponding to description—Voting by one, validity of—Revision.

Rule 11 of the rules under the Madras District Municipalities Act of 1920 gives the Election Court jurisdiction to decide for itself whether the Returning Officer's rejection or refusal of a vote was proper, and, if it was not proper, and the result of the election has been materially affected thereby, it may set aside the election and order a fresh one, or, if the result of the scrutiny is to give a majority to another candidate, it may declare that candidate duly elected.

In the matter of a decision as to the validity of a vote, the Election Court and not the Returning Officer is the final authority.

The right point of view from which the question of the validity of a vote by ballot is to be considered by the Polling Officer is to see whether any reasonable ground has been shown for concluding that by the marks on the voting paper, the voters might be identified.

Where on a ballot paper, besides the cross mark against the name of one of the candidates, there were lines scoring out the names of the other candidates and the Election Court held that the vote was valid:

Held, on revision, that the decision on the question of the validity of the vote was within the jurisdiction of the Election Court, and that there was neither lack of jurisdiction nor irregular exercise of it, which would give the High Court authority to interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C.

Where the description of a voter on an Electoral Roll was "Murugesan, fitter" and a person who corresponded to the description presented himself for voting and was allowed to do so but on an election petition it was sought to be shown that there was another person who corresponded to the description in the Electoral Roll and, therefore, the vote as recorded was invalid, but the Election Court held the vote to be valid:

Held, that there was no irregularity and that in the absence of proof that the person who voted was not the voter mentioned in the Electoral Roll, there was no ground for interference in revision. M MAMUNDI KONAR v. Rules for decision of election disputes, r. 12

—Disqualified candidate elected—Objection petition—Next candidate, whether can be declared elected.

Under r. 12 of the Rules for the decision of disputes as to the validity of an election under the Madras District Municipalities Act—contd.

Madras District Municipalities Act, if the candidate obtaining the largest number of votes at an election is unseated on the ground that he is interested in a Municipal contract and is, therefore, disqualified from sitting, the candidate obtaining the next largest number of votes cannot be declared elected in the absence of an allegation and proof that the disqualification under which the successful candidate is ultimately found to labour was known to the voters who cast their votes for him.

If a voter throws away a vote by ignoring something which he could have known and which would have told him that he was throwing away his vote because he was giving it for a person who could never succeed in the election, then his vote is to be taken as wiped out of the election and the man who has the next highest number of votes can be declared duly elected; but, if the votes were given in ignorance of the disqualification under which the candidate of his choice was in fact labouring, then it would be inequitable to allow the votes to be thrown away for that reason and the only proper course is to order re-election. *M. s. 4 (a)—Rules for conduct of Elections, rr. 4, 32—Rules for decision of election disputes, r. 11—Vice-Chairman of Municipality acting as Chairman and passing his own nomination paper—Breach of rule—Election, validity of—Result of election, whether materially affected—"Vice-Chairman," whether "officer"—Erroneous interpretation of rule—Revision—Interference by High Court.

Under the rules framed under the Madras District Municipalities Act, relating to the decision of election disputes, a breach of the Election Rules will not in itself justify an Election Court holding that the election is invalid. It must be further proved that the breach of the rules has materially affected the result of the election.

The result of the election must be affected in some other way than by the mere breach of the rule; the breach must have resulted in and produced some other result which has in itself the effect of invalidating a candidature or a nomination or an election.

The Vice-Chairman of a Municipality is not an "officer" within the meaning of s. 4 (a) of the Madras District Municipalities Act and is not incompetent to stand for election to the Municipal Council.

Where a Vice Chairman of a Municipality, who was acting as Chairman during the temporary absence of the Chairman, himself scrutinised and passed his own nomination paper in the matter of nomination of candidates for a vacancy in his Municipal ward:

Held, that r. 32 of the rules for the conduct of elections was thereby broken but such breach would not invalidate the subsequent election unless it was proved that the result of the election was materially affected by such breach.

Where a finding by a Court that the result of an election was materially affected by a breach of the Election Rules is based on no evidence and is contrary to a rule governing the conduct of elections, the Court must be held to have exercised its jurisdiction with material irregularity so as to warrant interference by the High Court in revision. But a mere erroneous interpretation of a rule by a subordinate Court unless it is unreasonable or perverse is a matter quite within (d), 189—Shrotriendar, suit by, for rent—Shrotriem, whether estate—Grant of melvaram only to person not owning kudivaram—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Appeal, second—Mixed question of fact and law.

Where in a suit instituted in the Civil Court for arrears of rent by a shrotriendar, the tenants raise the plea of want of jurisdiction of the Civil Court, on the ground that the shrotriem is an estate, the point for decision is whether at the time of the grant the shrotriendar had not the kudivaram right also. In other words whether it is proved by evidence that at the time of the grant there were any tenants in the village holding lands with any right of occupancy by custom or otherwise. It is immaterial that at the date of suit the shrotriendar may have only the melvaram right.

If the shrotriendar was originally the kudivaramdar and the melvaram also was granted to him, but he subsequently divested himself of the kudivaram right, the village is not an "estate" since on a proper construction of s. 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the words "to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof" refer to the time when the inam was granted.

Under the Madras Estates Land Act not all shrotriendars and inamdars are landholders but only those who at the time of the grant did not own the kudivaram, in other words, the share of a tenant with a right of occupancy.

The question whether a grant was of the melvaram only to a person not owning the kudivaram within the meaning of s. 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act is a mixed question of fact and law. M. CHAKIRI SUBAYYA v. YERADODDI MAL REDDY, 21 L. W. 694; 49 M. L. J. 126; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1081

If the members of a tavazhi think that the circumstances of their family warrant claim to enhanced maintenance it is not open to them to have the benefit of an allotment for maintenance to their tavazhi already made and also seek to add to it a separate allotment for each individual ignoring the benefits which they are already receiving. M KUNHAHOMED v. — Nambudri Illom—Family karar providing for management of properties—Karnavan, restrictions on rights of, validity of—Suit against Anandravan for acts of misconduct—Defendant becoming Karnavan during pendency of suit—Suit, whether can proceed.

An agreement by an anandravan under a family karar to have his rights as karnavan restricted when he succeeds to the latter office is valid and effective, but the agreement must be clearly expressed.

Ordinarily a suit for the recovery of tarwad property must be brought by the karnavan and an anandravan cannot sue unless the karnavan is under some disability. Where, however, a suit is brought to recover tarwad property from the karnavan himself and for the removal of the latter from his office, the suit must in the nature of things be brought by persons other than the karnavan.

Where a defendant is charged with mis-conduct as an anandravan the fact that he has become karnavan since the institution of the suit cannot absolve him from his liability for such misconduct. The mere fact of his becoming a karnavan cannot do away with his responsibility for all his previous acts.

The members of a nambudri illom entered into a karar by which provision was made for the management of the illom. The first plaintiff, who was the karnavan, gave up practically all his rights as such. The defendant who was then the senior anandravan was appointed manager of one set of properties and the third plaintiff was appointed manager of another set of properties. The karar provided in detail for the various acts of management and for succession to the managership. One of the conditions of the karar was that it should remain in force until it was set aside by means of a registered document executed by all the adult members of the illom. After the defendant had been managing the properties allotted to him for sometime, the first plaintiff and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, who were the only adult males in the illom, being dissatisfied with the management of the properties by the defendant called upon him to explain his conduct. He failed to do so and thereupon in accordance with the procedure laid down in the karar, the plaintiffs dismissed him from his office and brought a suit for a declaration that the defendant was no longer entitled to manage the properties and for an account and other reliefs. After the suit was filed the first plaintiff died and the defendant became the karnavan of the illom. He thereupon contended that the suit could not proceed against him:

Held, (1) that the karar to which the defendant was party was still binding upon him and had not come to an end merely by the death of the previous karnavan;

(3) that consequently the suit could proceed against the defendant in accordance with the terms of the karar. M SANKARAN v. VATAKKIMYEDATH KIRANCHAT, 48 M. L. J. 691; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 894; 23 L. W. 205

— Tarwad—Karnavan, powers of, to demise land on kanom and grant melcharth—Family with small property—Property held by junior members for maintenance—Demise, whether prudent.

The demising of lands on kanom in a Malabar tarwad is in the ordinary course of management by the karnavans of well-to-do families, and the karnavan of a tarwad or tavazhi has ordinarily full power to demise lands belonging to the tarwad or tavazhi on kanom, and, after the expiry of the period of kanom, to give melcharth.

But where the family property is small and consists of very few items, which are actually in the possession of the junior members of the family under arrangement with the karnavan for maintenance and out of the income of which they maintain themselves and the karnavan has no other property with which to maintain them, it is not a prudent act on the part of the karnavan to grant the properties on kanom to a stranger and thereby dispossess them of the lands. Such a demise is not binding on the members affected. M CHAMBU v. PAZANI, 21 L. W. 78; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 740

—Guardian ad litem—Gross negligence, test of—Negligence, meaning of—Due care, standard of.

Minor—concl.

A minor has a remedy either by application for review of judgment or by separate suit when either "gross" laches or fraud or collusion is found in the next friend or the guardian ad litem, but the negligence or laches of the guardian which entitles the minor to avoid the decree must be of a gross character. The test is whether or not there has been a culpable negligence of the interests of the minor. Has there been in the conduct of the suit any act or omission on the part of the next friend or the guardian ad litem, which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor's interests? That is what is meant by the expression "gross" negligence or laches when used in this context.

Negligence is the breach of a legal duty to take care and unless it is known what that duty is in a particular case it is not possible to predicate whether there has been negligence or not.

The standard of due care in all cases in which a duty to take care exists is the care which would be taken in the same circumstances by an ordinary careful man. The test is the conduct of the average man in like circumstances, with like knowledge and means of knowledge and the amount of care will be different in different cases. A BRIJ RAJ v. RAM SARUP, L. Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Suit by prior mortgagee—Puisne mortgagee not made party—Sale in execution of mortgage-decree—Surplus proceeds after discharging prior mortgagee's claims—Puisne mortgagee, right of, whether confined to sale of property—Right to surplus proceeds in prior mortgagee's suit—Attaching creditor, rights of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 1, 13.

Where a prior mortgagee makes a puisne mortgagee a party to his suit and brings the property to sale, the puisne mortgagee can only proceed against the balance of the sale-proceeds in Court after satisfying the claim of the prior mortgagee. His right of suit against the mortgagor is taken away by his being made a party to the suit of the prior mortgagee. But where a puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the suit, a sale in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree cannot affect his title. In such a case he has an option either to proceed against the mortgaged property by bringing it to sale or to proceed against the sale-proceeds in Court in the prior mortgagee's suit after satisfying the claims of the prior mortgagee.

Although r. 1 of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. requires all puisne mortgagees to be brought on the record in a prior mortgagee's suit, r. 13 of the Order does not restrict the right of a puisne mortgagee, not made a party to the suit, to claim any amount in Court on the ground that he has an interest in the mortgaged property.

The right of a subsequent mortgagee to the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property is only subject to that of the prior encumbrancer, but he has a prior claim over any simple money creditor and the mortgagor. A simple money creditor who attaches the money in Court attaches it as the property of the mortgagor and the mortgagor certainly is not entitled to the money in Court in preference to the mortgagee whose debt he is liable to discharge. *M KRISHNASWAMI BHAGAVATHAR v. more than his own share—Redemption suit—Parties necessary.

Where the integrity of a mortgage has been broken up, a mortgagor is not entitled to claim redemption of more than his own share of the mortgaged property, the reason being that the integrity of a mortgage is necessary for the benefit of the mortgagee alone, and where that has been broken and a redemption has to be allowed, there is no equity in favour of one of the mortgagors to possess the remaining property where it is more than his own legitimate share.

In all redemption cases, which are properly framed, not only the redeeming co-sharers should be made parties but also the mortgagors who have not so far joined in the suit for redemption. The necessity of impleading co-mortgagors is this that the share and the right to redeem of the plaintiff cannot be determined behind the back of the non-redeeming mortgagors. A AHMAD HUSAIN v. ——— Redemption postponed for long term, whether clog on equity of redemption—Transaction, nature of.

The postponement of redemption for a long time does not by itself operate as a clog on the equity of redemption.

The true test in such a case is: was the transaction in its essence an advancement of a loan on one side and furnishing of a security for the same on the other? If the answer is in the affirmative, postponing the right to redeem to an inordinate length of time may reasonably lead to the inference that the intention was to kill that right and this will not be permitted by law. If, on the other hand, the transaction is in its reality more than or different from a pure transaction of a loan or security, the equitable doctrine of relief against a clog on the right to redeem has no application. O NARAIN DAS v. A mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee would be entitled to appropriate the profits arising out of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest on a portion of the mortgage-money and that the payment of the balance along with interest at a certain rate shall be compulsory at the time of redemption:

Held, (1) that the agreement with regard to the payment of interest on the balance of the mortgage-money did not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption;

(2) that the intention of the parties was that no redemption should take place without payment of the entire mortgage-money plus interest at the rate provided for in the deed on that portion of the mortgage-money which carried interest.

Obiter.—Where money is borrowed on the security of property which is already mortgaged to the same creditor and there is a stipulation in the subsequent deed that without payment of the two sums the property is not to be redeemed the effect of the clause is to create a further mortgage and to make the property security for the additional debt. A JEET KOERI v. Mortgage—concl'd.

——— usufructuary—Term fixed for redemption—Mortgagee, failure of, to carry out terms of mortgage—Redemption before expiry of term, whether can be allowed—Accounts, basis of.

Where under the terms of a mortgage the mortgagee is asked to pay himself the principal and interest out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, he is entitled to remain in possession till the mortgage-debt is wiped off from the rents and profits of the property.

When a term is fixed in a usufructuary mortgage-deed and possession is given to the mortgagee, unless there be a clause in the mortgage-deed itself enabling the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage at any time he chooses, the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession till the close of the term. In such a case it cannot be said that the term fixed in the mortgage-deed is only for the benefit of the mortgagor, it is equally for the benefit of the mortgagee as well as the mortgagor.

The presumption is that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose arise at the same time and where a date is fixed for the payment of the mortgage-debt and the mortgagee cannot foreclose earlier, the mortgagor also cannot redeem before the appointed time.

Where a mortgagee undertakes to pay out of the rents and profits of the land mortgaged to him a certain amount for the expenses of the mortgagor he is bound to carry out the term of the contract and when he undertakes to pay beriz on the land, his failure to pay it would amount to a breach of the contract as it would thereby expose the land to be attached and sold for arrears of beriz. In such a case if the mortgage-deed fixes a term for redemption, a Court of Equity will grant relief to the mortgagor and allow him to redeem the property before the expiry of the term.

A mortgagee is not bound to accept the mortgage amount from the mortgagor if the latter tenders it before the expiry of the term fixed for redemption. But where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, and unless there is a stipulation that all the rents and profits should be applied towards interest, whatever remains over and above the interest due on the mortgage amount is bound to be applied towards the reduction of the principal.

In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage the plaintiff is entitled to have an account taken of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. No question of limitation arises in such a case. So long as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists, the mortgagee who is in possession of the mortgaged property is bound to account for the rents and profits of the land. But in taking the account, sums which the mortgagee should have paid to the mortgagor but has not paid, must be applied towards the reduction of the mortgage amount. M DRONAMRAJU LAKSHMI v. Muhammadan Law—Divorce pronounced under compulsion, legality of—Pronouncement of divorce contained in compromise deed, validity of—Hanafi School.

According to the Hanafi School of Muhammadan Law a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid even when contained in a written document, provided that the document is addressed to the party to be divorced and provided it actually pronounces the divorce and is not merely an acknowledgment of something agreed to under compulsion.

A criminal proceeding was compromised and the compromise deed contained the following clause:—"I release you Akhtar Khatoon from the marital bond by giving you three talqs according to the Muhammadan scriptures." The compromise was signed by the husband who pronounced the divorce and by the wife who was divorced and was addressed by the husband to the wife:

Held, that the compromise deed contained not merely an acknowledgment of divorce but an actual pronouncement of divorce and operated as a valid divorce under Muhammadan Law. C JORINA AKTAR KHATON v. HAFEZUDDIN KHAN, 30 C. W. N. 178; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 242

Gift to daughter-in-law of residential house —Actual transfer of physical possession, whether necessary.

The fact that a Muhammadan, after making a gift to his daughter-in-law of a house in which both reside, by a registered deed, which recites that possession of the house has been delivered to the donee, continues to live in the same house with the donee for about a month after the date of the gift till his death, does not show that possession was not given to the donee as expressly stated in the deed, and the gift is not invalid on that account.

Actual transfer of physical possession is not necessary to complete the gift in such a case. L RAHMAT ALI v. DAULAT BIBI, A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 501; 7 L. L. J. 301

Where a person entitled to claim pre-emption under the Muhammadan Law joins with himself as co-plaintiff a person who has no such right, he forfeits his own pre-emptive right and the suit must be dismissed as against both.

Where, however, several persons who join as plaintiffs in a suit for pre-emption have an equal right of pre-emption, but some of them have qualified themselves under the Muhammadan Law to enforce such right and the others have not, the suit is maintainable at the instance of the former and is not liable to dismissal merely because some of the plaintiffs have not so qualified themselves.

Where a dominant tenement is sold the owner of the servient tenement has a right to pre-empt the sale under the Muhammadan Law as a shafi-i-khalit. The talab-i-ishtishhaad required by the Muhammadan Muhammadan Law—concl'd.

Law of Pre-emption must be made with the least practicable delay and the question whether that formality has been duly and sufficiently observed with regard to the time at which it should have been observed is a question to be decided in each case by the Court which has to deal with the facts.

Unless the purchase price is known to the person entitled to pre-emption, he has not all the facts before him to enable him to decide whether he will exercise his right of pre-emption. He must, however, take immediate steps to ascertain the price and then make the talab-i-ishtishhaad forthwith and any unreasonable delay in ascertaining the particulars or in making the demand would operate as a forfeiture of his claim.

Wakf—Marz-ul-maut, what is—Death illness—Paralysis—Possession of senses—Apprehension of death—Mutwalli's misfeasance, whether affects validity of wakf.

An old Muhammadan was attacked in February 1895 by paralysis of the lower limbs rendering him a helpless invalid, permanently confined to his bed. In March he executed a waqfnama and died in the following November:

Held, that the doctrine of marz-ul-maut applied and that the waqf was valid only to the extent of one-third of the waqif's assets.

Per Mukerji, J.—The limit of one year in cases of marz-ul-maut does not constitute a hard and fast rule.

In order to make the doctrine of marz-ul-maut applicable there must be (1) illness, (2) expectation of a fatal issue, and (3) certain physical incapacities which indicate the degree of illness.

Death illness is illness in which death is highly probable whether incapacities exist or not.

The question to be considered in cases of marz-ul-maut is whether the donor executed the deed of gift under apprehension of death.

Possession of one's senses and mental faculties is no index of the pressure of sense of imminent death.

Misfeasance or misfeasance of a mutwalli does not invalidate a waqf which at its creation was a valid one. C KARIMAN NISSA BIBI v. HAMEDULLAH, 30 C. W. N. 129; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 401

Mutwalli, if can grant permanent lease—Lessee if can acquire adverse possession—"Istimrari mokarrari," meaning of—Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenure—Burden of proof.

A mutwalli of a wakf estate cannot create a leasehold interest to endure beyond his life unless authorised by the Kazi.

The lessee of a mutwalli acquires no title by adverse possession against the succeeding mutwalli, and if the latter recognizes the interest of the lessee, a new tenancy is thereby created.

Where a tenancy created by a mutwalli is not challenged for over 70 years and the rent remains unchanged, applications for enhancement having failed, the Court can presume the grant to be of lawful origin and of a permanent and heritable nature.

The words 'istimrari mokarrari' do not necessarily mean permanent and heritable. The nature of an istimrari mokarrari grant is to be determined from the circumstances of the case.

When the relation of landlord and tenant is admitted, the onus of proving a permanent tenure at a fixed rent is on the tenant. C JABEDA KHATUN v. MAHOMMAD MOZAFFAR ALI, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 322

Per Krishnan, J.—Partial failure of consideration in respect of a negotiable instrument is a defence pro tanto against an immediate party when the failure is an ascertained and liquidated amount, but not otherwise, that is, when a collateral enquiry becomes necessary for the purpose. Where a bill is drawn for the price of two bales and only one is delivered, the defence that consideration has failed to the extent of one half is available. Where a hundi amount represents the advance price paid for a number of bales, the advance towards each bale being definite and fixed, the consideration for the hundi can be pleaded to have failed with reference to the undelivered bales and that is a sum that can be computed without any inquiry. Notice sent to person in occupation of land not to cultivate it—Damages, suit for—Malice—Burden of proof.

The law encourages persons who have bona fide rights to give notice to other persons who are likely to be affected by such rights, and it is not the policy of the law to presume either malice or mala fides in such cases on the part of the person who gives such notice, but to require clear proof of the same.

Where in consequence of such a notice warning the person to whom the notice is sent to desist from cultivating the land without the permission of the person sending the notice, the person to whom the notice is sent ceases to cultivate the land, he cannot claim damages from the person who sent the notice unless he proves actual malice on his part. If the defendant in such a case proves that he sent the notice in the bona fide assertion of his own right, real or supposed, to the property, the action will not lie. R MAUNG PO KA v. Oaths Act (X of 1873), scope of. See EVIDENCE ACT, 1872, s. 92 378

—s. 11—Agreement to be bound by oath—Failure to take oath, effect of—Procedure.

Under s. 11 of the Oaths Act, the evidence given on oath is, as against a person who offered to be bound, conclusive proof of the matters stated. But if the party who agrees to take an oath declines afterwards or fails to take the oath, the Court may only take that circumstance into consideration in deciding the case. The absence of an oath or refusal to take the oath would not import into the case evidence which was not otherwise adduced before it.

On an application by the defendant in a suit, to set aside an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, the plaintiff agreed to abide by the oath of the defendant that he was not aware of the institution of the suit. The oath, however, was not taken on account of plaintiff's default to be present to hear the oath. The Court, thereupon, dismissed the application:

Held, that the Court ought to have called upon the defendant to prove his allegations by oral evidence that on his declining to do so, it should have dismissed the application for want of evidence, and that it was improper to dismiss the application without affording the defendant such opportunity. (2) or sub-s. (3) of s. 13A—Registration, form of—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 35, 42, 48.

C., dissenting).—A Will made by a taluqdar of an estate entered in List II of the Lists prepared under s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, where the succession is governed by s. 22 of the Act, in favour of an agnate who is not the nearest agnate of the testator at the time of the testator's death, is governed by sub-s. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act, as amended by the Oudh Estates Amendment Act of 1910 and, therefore, a Will in favour of such a person duly executed and attested more than three months before the testator's death and registered under ss. 42 and 43 of the Registration Act is, in all respects, a good and valid one.

Per Dalal, A. J. C.—The plain meaning of cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is that it includes every kind of heir mentioned in the amended s. 22 of the Act and no one else. Clause (10) of s. 22 provides only for the nearest male agnate and where a person is not such male agnate at the time of the testator's death when the bequest takes effect he does not come under that clause.

In interpreting cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act, the Court has to look for possible heirs at the time of the taluqdar's death and in cl. (10) of s. 22 the only possible heir can be the nearest male agnate.

Per Daniels, J. C.—The words "in the absence of other heirs" in cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act apply just as much to the absence of heirs who might take in priority under cl. (10) as to the absence of other heirs falling under cls. (1) to (9) of s. 22 of the Act.

The classification introduced by s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is a perfectly natural and intelligible one, namely, first the immediate heir and one or two persons who are grouped with him, then the remote heir, and lastly the person who is not a possible heir at all, and there is nothing either absurd or improbable in the Legislature enacting that when the estate is bequeathed to a kinsman of the testator it should continue to be governed by the Act, whereas if it passes to a stranger it should not be so governed.

The difference between cls. (2) and (3) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is that in the case of cl. (2) the Will may be registered by deposit with the Registrar in a sealed cover with the name of the testator and a statement of the nature of the document, whereas in the case of a person falling under the third clause there must be what may be called open registration, that is to say, the document must be registered with the same formalities as any ordinary deed. There is this further difference that by ss. 14 and 15 of the Act a Will in favour of any of the persons mentioned in cls. (1) and (2) of the section leaves the estate still subject to the provisions of the Act, whereas a Will in favour of a person under cl. (3), except where it is in favour of another taluqdar, takes the estate out of the Act and brings it under the operation of the ordinary law of succession. O ACHAL SINGH v. When the plaintiff in a suit under Ch. Plaintiff brought a suit to recover arrears of rent from the defendant on the allegation that the defendant held the land under a kabuliyat executed by him. It was further alleged that even if the kabuliyat was not proved, the defendant had been paying rent to the plaintiff and that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. The defendant set up a quasi-proprietary title to the land. He did not admit that he was a tenant of the plaintiff at all and denied the kabuliyat and the payments of rent alleged by the plaintiff. It was found that the kabuliyat was fictitious and that the defendant had never paid rent to the plaintiff. Plaintiff also failed to show that the defendant was not entitled to possession of the land:

Held, that the plaintiff's suit must fail inasmuch as (a) he could set up no case under s. 32 A of the Oudh Rent Act as it had been found that defendant had never agreed to pay rent to him; (b) he could not proceed under s. 32 B of the Oudh Rent Act as he had failed to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between him and the defendant; (c) he could not succeed under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act as he had failed to show that the defendant was a person not entitled to the possession of the land. O TAWAKKUL KHAN v. Section 4 of the Partition Act requires the presence of 3 conditions before the Court can take action under it: (i) the dwelling house should belong to an undivided family; (ii) a share thereof should have been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family, and (iii) the transferee should sue for partition.

The operation of s. 4 of the Partition Act comes into play after the Court has found that the stranger transferee is entitled to partition. In fact no order can be passed under the Partition Act before the Court has found that such a transferee has succeeded in establishing his claim for a partition of the undivided homestead.

A Court of Appeal is as much entitled to pass an order under s. 4 of the Partition Act as the Trial Court. The word "Court" in the section is not confined to the Trial Court, and the power conferred by the section may be exercised even by an Appellate Court.

The right conferred by s. 4 may be exercised at any time before the final allotments take place. The section does not indicate as to when the willingness

In a partition suit by a purchaser from a co-sharer, the Appellate Court finding the purchaser's title as proved, sent back the record of the case to the Trial Court for effecting partition. After the latter Court had taken steps towards the appointment of a Commissioner for partition, the Appellate Court, on an application being made to it, passed an order under s. 4 of the Partition Act:

Held, that the Appellate Court had not lost its jurisdiction to pass the order it did merely because it had sent back the record to the Trial Court and that Court had taken some action in the matter.

A document, which upon certain evidence being given may be held to be invalid, but on the face of it creates or purports to create a right in immoveable property, although a decree could not be passed upon it, falls within the purview of the definition of "valuable security" in s. 30 of the Penal Code. A RAM HARAKH PATHAK v. Section 99 of the Penal Code has no application to a case where the initial proceeding and the power under which a public servant purports to act are altogether without jurisdiction and entirely ultra vires.

A Police Officer noticing one H. going about at night time armed with a long handled hatchet asked him to hand over the hatchet, but H. refused to give it up whereupon the Police Officer laid his hands on the hatchet in order to snatch it from H. The latter resented this and shouted out, on which certain persons came up to his assistance and assaulted the Police Officer causing grievous hurt to him. H. and his companions were tried and convicted of an offence under s. 325 of the Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the act of the Police Officer in trying to snatch away the hatchet from H. was wholly without jurisdiction and that, therefore, s. 99 of the Penal Code was not applicable to the case;

(2) that, however, the accused had no right to assault the Police Officer as they knew that he was not trying to commit a theft of the hatchet nor had they any reason to fear that the Police Officer would cause hurt to H. and that, therefore, they had been rightly convicted. L HAQ DAD v. The Police attempted to arrest those present and a fight ensued but the accused were eventually secured and taken to the Police Station. They were subsequently charged with and convicted of an offence under s. 147 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the Police had no justification for attempting to arrest the accused and that consequently in resisting the arrest the accused were not guilty of the offence of rioting.

Where a certain sum is fixed for the repair of an article and there is nothing to indicate that the repairer would be entitled to receive remuneration for a part of the repair, he has no right to retain the article until he receives his remuneration for the amount of work done.

A person who is entrusted to repair a certain article is not entitled to claim lien or to refuse to part with it after doing a certain amount of work which makes no improvement thereupon, and the owner is entitled to recover it from him without paying for such work.

The owner of a kettle gave it to a workman for repairing it within 6 or 7 days for Rs. 6. After 11 or 12 days when the owner demanded return of the kettle the workman said that he had not completed repairs but that he would return the kettle if he was paid Rs. 5 for the part of the work he had already done. The owner refused to pay the amount, took away the kettle from the almirah and walked out of the shop:

Held, (1) that s. 170 of the Contract Act had no application to the case and that the workman had no lien over the kettle;

(2) that even if the owner acted improperly in demanding and taking back the kettle, he was not guilty of an offence under s. 380, Penal Code, as his object was not to cause wrongful loss to the workman or wrongful gain to himself but to recover his kettle after the lapse of reasonable time. C JUDAH v. — ss. 463, 467—"Intent to defraud," meaning of—Signature, forgery of, as attesting witness—Valuable security, forgery of.

Penal Code—contd.

The expression "intent to defraud" as it occurs in s. 463, Penal Code, implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived, that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property.

The signature of an attesting witness does not fix that witness with knowledge of the contents of the document or with any liability under its terms. Therefore, a forgery of the signature of the owner of a property as an attesting witness on an instrument granting a sub-lease of that property, purporting to be executed by the forger as the owner's lessee, does not fall under the definition of the offence under s. 467, Penal Code. C AHMED ALI v. • ——— ss. 499, 500—Defamation—Imputations concerning conduct of members of Police force—Individual member, whether defamed—Truth of imputations, plea of, proof of—Good faith, plea of—Defamatory statement, strict proof of.

Complainant was the principal officer in charge of a certain Police force which was stationed at a certain place for the purpose of investigating a certain occurrence. There were some complaints against the conduct of the members of the Police force and the accused, after making some enquiries from the villagers, made two speeches at two different places as a consequence of which he was charged and tried at the instance of the complainant for offences under s. 500 of the Penal Code. The charge with regard to the first speech alleged that the accused had stated that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and the chaukidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct, and the charge with regard to the second speech alleged that the accused had stated that the Police force had bitten off the nipple of the breast of a woman and had bitten the cheek of a woman nine months pregnant. In his defence the accused sought to prove the notes taken by him of the statements made to him by the villagers of the ill-treatment accorded to them by members of the Police force, but the notes of statements of those persons who were not called as witnesses at the trial were not admitted in evidence.

Held, (Per Newbould, J.)—(1) that the statement by the accused that the members of the Police force were beasts and pigs in their conduct was defamatory of the complainant who was a member of the Police force and that the imputation having been made against the Police force as a whole employed under the complainant the accused was guilty of the offence of defamation in respect of that statement;

(2) that so far as the second charge was concerned it related to definite acts of brutality by individual members of the Police force and inasmuch as the complainant personally was not accused of the brutal conduct alleged, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under s. 500 of the Penal Code in respect of the second charge.

Per Ghose, J.—(1) that the accused was entitled to prove the notes of the statements made to him by the villagers as evidence of his good faith and that the notes were relevant on the question, although the persons who had made the statements were not examined as witnesses;

(2) that the words in the first charge that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and chaukidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct were too wide to admit of the construction that any particular Police Officer was defamed;

(3) that the second charge related to specific acts of brutality of which the Police force as a body could not have been guilty and that the statement, therefore, referred to the personal conduct of some of the constables and had no reference to the complainant;

(4) that, therefore, the petitioner could not be convicted of an offence under s. 500 of the Penal Code on either charge;

(5) that as the evidence showed that the Police force had been guilty of acts of misconduct, oppression and persecution the accused had reasonable grounds for believing in the truth of the allegations made to him and that the case was, therefore, covered by the 9th Exception to s. 499 of the Penal Code and that on that ground also the accused was entitled to an acquittal.

Per Buckland, J.—that there was confusion in the charges between the complainant and the Police force of which he was in charge in relation to the various ingredients of the charges and that consequently there had been no proper trial of the accused and that the accused must, therefore, be re-tried on charges properly framed.

Per Ghose, J.—To speak of a person that he is a beast and a pig in his conduct is defamatory.

In a prosecution under s. 500 of the Penal Code the words complained of as constituting the offence must be set out in the charge and proved before the accused can be convicted. When there is a denial the evidence in support of the prosecution must be scrutinized.

When spoken words are alleged to have constituted the offence of defamation, a very slight alteration of a word may give quite a different meaning to the whole statement.

Where the words ascribed to the accused are differently stated by each witness and the petition of complaint also puts them differently it cannot be said to have been proved that the accused spoke the words stated in the charge, and it would not be correct to say that the words given in the different versions have the same meaning.

If a person complains that he has been defamed as a member of a class he must satisfy the Court that the imputation complained of is against him personally and that he is the person aimed at, before he can maintain a prosecution for defamation.

All circumstances which were apparent to the by-standers at the time the words were uttered should be put in evidence so as to place the Court as much as possible in the position of such by-standers, and then it is for the Court to say what meaning such words would fairly have conveyed to their minds.

Where the defamation imputes a crime to the complainant and the accused pleads justification there must be the same strictness of proof as on a trial for such crime.

Per Buckland, J.—In a case in which Explanation II to s. 499 of the Penal Code is properly called into use the identity of the company or association or collection of persons must be maintained throughout with reference to the imputation said to have been made concerning them as such with the intention of harming their reputation so that thereby they are defamed. An imputation concerning a company or association of persons as such cannot by virtue of this Explanation justify a charge of defaming an individual and a charge cannot combine the Explanation with the definition for such a purpose.

The offence of defamation consists in using language which others knowing the circumstances would reasonably think to be defamatory of the person complaining of and injured by it. It may be that an individual is as much defamed by words apparently only of more general application as by words referring to him by name.

The question for the consideration of the Court is whether it thinks that the libel designates the complainant in such a way as to let those who know him understand that he is the person meant. It is not necessary that all the world should understand the libel: it is sufficient if those who know the complainant can make out that he is the person meant. *C PRATAP CHANDRA GUHA ROY v. For a charge of conspiracy only an agreement between the conspirators is sufficient, and an accused person can be tried of all other offences committed in the course of the conspiracy even if those offences are more than three.

The expression "former part" in the direction at the end of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C., that "the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges" means the part under the heading "form of charge" prior to the part headed "joinder of charges." Section 234, therefore, will not control the provisions of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C.

In deciding whether a particular series of events do or do not form one transaction within the meaning of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C., the real and substantial test is whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. Each event must be a link in the chain, and there must be no hiatus or rupture in the sequence. O BISHAMBHAR NATH TONDON v. EMPEROR, 26 Cr. L. J. 1602; 2 O. W. N. 760; A. I. The Cr. P. C. being silent as to whether two counter-criminal cases should be tried simultaneously or one after the other, no absolute rule of law can be laid down and each case must be decided according to its requirements.

If the complainant in one of the two counter-cases wishes that his case may be taken up after the case against him has been decided, on the ground that in the case against him a large number of witnesses have been examined and he does not want to be subjected to his adversary's cross-examination in the other case in which he is the complainant, it will serve the ends of justice if the case against him is disposed of first, as it is not fair to force him, so long as he is the accused in one case, to throw himself open to cross-examination in the case in which he is the complainant. *C MAKHAN MAPA v. A District Munsif's Court in executing a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court in respect of immoveable property exercises its powers not as a Small Cause Court, but as a Court of original jurisdiction, and the rules applicable to proceedings in execution of an original decree are applicable to the execution proceedings of the small cause decree so transferred to the original side of the Court. M PONNAPPA REDDI v. ss. 23, 30 (2)—Insolvency—Composition agreed to by majority of creditors—Annulment of adjudication—Secured creditor not party to composition, whether bound—Right of suit, whether barred.

Under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, a composition in the course of the insolvency proceedings agreed to by the prescribed statutory majority of creditors is binding on all creditors of the insolvent whether they were parties to the composition or not, but such composition takes effect and operates to discharge the insolvent from his liability in respect of a debt only if the compensation agreed to is paid or else a scheme is outstanding under which the creditor is required to proceed and obtain relief.

Where a scheme of composition has been approved the insolvent debtor is bound to pay to all his creditors, including secured creditors, whose debts are provable in insolvency, the amount of the balance of their debts according to the composition and the right to enforce such payment can be enforced in the ordinary Courts.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act—concl'd.

Clause (2) of s. 30 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is merely enabling in its nature and provides only for a summary remedy and does not exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts. It is applicable only to cases where there is something in the provisions of the composition or scheme which is capable of being enforced in the Bankruptcy Court.

A composition was agreed to by the statutory majority of the creditors of an insolvent and the adjudication was annulled. One of the secured creditors got no notice of the adjudication and had not yet proved his debt when it was annulled. There was no provision in the scheme of composition capable of enforcement under cl. (2) of s. 30 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. In a suit by the secured creditor to recover the balance of what was due to him after deducting the value of his security since realised :

Held, (1) that s. 30, cl. (2) of the Act did not operate as a bar to the maintainability of the suit ;

(2) that the plaintiff was, however, bound by the terms of the composition and could only recover that proportion of the balance of his debt which had been paid to the other creditors.

Per Spencer, J.—In India the position of an insolvent whose adjudication has been annulled is not the same as that of a discharged insolvent.

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—A composition in the course of the insolvency agreed to by the prescribed statutory majority of the creditors is binding on all creditors of the insolvent whether they were parties to the composition or not.

In the absence of express statutory provision excluding the jurisdiction of the ordinary Tribunals no right of action can be deemed to have been taken away. M GOVINDAS CHATURBHUJAS v. RAMADOSS, 48 M. L. J. 252; (1925) M. W. N. 148; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 593; 21 L. W. 733; 48 M. 521

Where in such a case all the packages in the consignment are delivered to the consignee, the fact that the contents of some of the packages are lost does not make the Railway Company liable under the terms of the Risk-Note.

In a suit to recover damages from a Railway Company in respect of the loss of goods consigned to the Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B," in order to make the Risk Note applicable, it is sufficient that the plaintiff pleads loss to himself, it is not necessary for the Company to give evidence that the goods have been lost to it also. If the plaintiff admits the loss then all that the Company has to do in its written statement is to plead the contract. It is not required to bring any evidence to support its plea.

"Neglect" means the omission to perform a duty and implies that a person does something which ought either to be done in a different manner or not at all or that he omits to do something which ought to be done. But wilful neglect goes further than this and implies that the person charged with such neglect knew that he should do a particular act or that he should refrain from doing a particular act and that he deliberately abstained from doing it or deliberately did it. In order to prove wilful neglect it must be shown that the neglect was not accidental and that the person charged with such neglect knew that mischief would result from his conduct or that there was an indifference to his duty to ascertain whether such conduct was mischievous or not. Pat EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. — Carriage of goods—Risk Note Form "B"—Suit to recover damages for loss of goods—Negligence—Burden of proof.

In a suit to recover damages for the loss of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" the onus of proving negligence of the Company lies on the plaintiff; the Company is not bound in law to assist the plaintiff in fastening liability on itself. The mere assertion by the plaintiff that the Company's servants must have been negligent because the Company had failed to deliver the goods is by itself of no value as proof of negligence. In such a case it is quite unnecessary for the Company to do anything more than to prove or admit the loss of the goods; having done that the onus of proving that the loss was occasioned under one of the exceptions contained in the Risk Note lies upon the plaintiff.

Receiver, position of—Payment made by Receiver, whether payment made by owner.

The nature of the office of a Receiver is simply this, that he is an impartial person appointed by the Court to collect and receive pending the proceedings the rents, issues and profits of land or personal estate or other things in question which it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should collect or receive. The object sought by the appointment of a Receiver is the safeguarding of property for the benefit of those entitled to it. His possession is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed, and is the possession of all the said parties according to their titles. The property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. The title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or principle by his appointment. He collects and receives the rents, issues and profits not upon his own title but upon the title of some persons, parties to the action. One of the main incidents of his duties is to preserve and protect the property which is put into his possession and from this it necessarily follows that where a Receiver is appointed in respect of lease-holds, upon him devolves the performance of the obligations imposed by the possession of land and consequently he must out of the sub-rents discharge the head rents payable in respect of the lease-holds.

A payment made by the Receiver of an estate of the rents justly due, out of the funds in his hands, is equivalent in law to a payment made by the owner himself. C EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO. v. MOHAMMAD FAZLUL KARIM, 41 C. L. J. 571; 52 C. 914; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 385 851

Where a money suit is filed against the heirs of a deceased person, whose estate is in the hands of a Receiver, the Receiver has nothing to do with the satisfaction of the claim, and all that the Court can do is to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, as the legal representatives of the deceased. The fact that the plaintiff has obtained an order from the Court which appointed the Receiver granting him leave to add the Receiver as a party to the suit does in no way affect the question whether the Court which hears the suit can grant relief against the Receiver. If the decree obtained by the plaintiff against the heirs of the deceased is not satisfied and the plaintiff wishes to execute it against the estate of the deceased, he must go to the Court which appointed the Receiver for permission to attach the estate of the deceased in the hands of the Receiver. The Receiver is not a necessary party in a suit to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled against the legal representatives of the deceased to recover money which he had advanced to the deceased in his lifetime. B MOOS v. — — — Suit for rent—Appointment of Receiver—Direction to sell press installed in leased premises—Sale—Prior mortgagee of press, acquiescence of, in Receiver's management, effect of—Expenditure incurred by Receiver—Priority over mortgagee's claim.

In execution of a decree for arrears of rent and for ejectment of a tenant, a Receiver was appointed who was directed by the Court to sell a press and machinery installed in the leased premises for the best price obtainable and meanwhile to keep it running as a going concern and to pay the rent due to the landlord. A mortgagee of the press and machinery, though not a party to the suit, acquiesced by his acts and conduct in the employment of and management by the Receiver for the benefit of all parties. The press and machinery when sold fetched a price less than the amount due under the mortgage.

Held, that the mortgagee was not entitled to the sale-proceeds without paying thereout the rent due to the landlord, wages of the workmen employed in running the press and the Receiver's remunerations which items were entitled to priority over the mortgagee's claim.

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—When property is placed in custodia legis by the appointment of a Receiver all the orders passed by the Court for the management of such property will be binding on all persons who, if not actual parties to the suit have so conducted themselves either with regard to the litigation or with regard to the management of the property under the directions of the Court, as to make themselves virtually or constructively parties to the suit or have otherwise submitted themselves to such management by the Court. M RAJA-GOPALA CHARIAR v. — s. 17 (1) (b)—Family arrangement—Petition of compromise addressed to Court—Antecedent title, recognition of—Registration, whether necessary.

Where a bona fide dispute between the parties is eventually composed, each party recognizing an antecedent title in the other and the parties address a petition to the Court stating the terms of the agreement arrived at between them, there is no necessity to have the petition registered. Such a petition does not purport to create, assign, limit, extinguish or declare any rights in immovable property within the meaning of s. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act. It is merely a recital of facts by which the Court is informed that the parties have come to an arrangement.

Per Sulaiman, J.—Division of property by way of family settlement does not amount to a transfer by one party to the other, nor does any party to such settlement derive title through the other. The settlement merely recognizes the right of the other party and accepts it in part. Not being a transfer, gift or exchange from one party to the other the transaction does not fall under any of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act which require registration.

Even in the absence of a registered document it is open to either party to a family settlement to prove that there has been a family settlement which was acted upon.

Where, however, a compromise is reduced to writing, then if the document is sought to be used as a document of title purporting to create or declare rights in immovable property worth more than Rs. 100 the deed would require registration. If the document does not purport to be a document of title creating or declaring such right but contains a mere recital of a previous settlement arrived at between the parties, the document may be used in evidence in proof of that previous settlement, even though not registered. A BAKHTAWAR v. The extinction of a mortgage-debt must be distinguished from the extinction of the mortgage itself, and a receipt which purports to be merely a receipt in full of the mortgage-debt is admissible in evidence without registration.

The Law of Registration in the case of a receipt of mortgage-money does not enquire how the receipt operates, but merely what it purports to do.

A receipt granted on behalf of a mortgagee to the mortgagor was in the following terms:—"Received from S the sum of Rs. 6,000 only in full satisfaction of the amount due from him under a mortgage-deed of his share in village B executed by him in favour of the late K, who had obtained a decree for possession of the mortgaged property."

Plaintiffs were the owners of a certain mahal. Their agent addressed them a proposal in writing for granting a lease of the mahal on certain terms to certain persons who had approached him for such lease. Plaintiffs authorized their agent to grant the lease and to issue a parwana to the lessees. A parwana was eventually issued to the defendants purporting to grant them a lease of the mahal on the terms accepted by the plaintiffs for a period of five years and the defendants were put in possession of the mahal. Plaintiffs subsequently brought a suit to eject the defendants from the mahal on the allegation that the

Held, that the doctrine of part performance applied to the case and that the plaintiffs were bound by the terms of the lease which they had authorized and could not eject the defendant from the mahal. PAT PEARI DAI v. A division settlement karar between members of a family by which certain immoveable properties are exclusively given to one member for his enjoyment and certain other properties are awarded to other members creates rights in immoveable property and is inadmissible in evidence without registration.

The doctrine of part-performance is irrelevant in considering the question of admissibility of documents.

Three Hindu brothers constituting a joint family lived as one family with a Christian relation who owned considerable property. The brothers managed the property of the Christian relation along with the family properties and fresh acquisitions were made to the family from the income of the properties and by the joint labour and skill of all the members :

Held, (1) that although the parties had combined their properties, labour and skill, the combination did not go beyond the mere stage of co-ownership, and did not amount to a partnership within the meaning of s. 239 of the Contract Act ;

(2) that even if the parties constituted a partnership their relationship would be regulated by the provisions of s. 253 of the Contract Act only in the absence of a contract to the contrary ;

(3) that the fact that all the properties were treated as the common property of the whole family implied an agreement among the members that they were all to share the properties alike. M PEDDI REDDI JOGI REDDI v. PANEEN CHINNABIREDDI, 22 L. W. 116; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1195 1016

Then followed a clause as to the way in which the expenses for repairs were to be met. It was then laid down that after the accounts had been made up and the amount of money expended on the repairs totalled, there would be a fresh deed and that on re-payment of the debt incurred by the owner in respect of the repairs the owner would be able to make a new settlement of the land according to his wish. Then followed certain conditions as to the maintenance of boundaries, payment of damages for injuries to the ghar not caused by accident, keeping the house in repair by the owner, etc.:

— ss. 17 (1) (d), 49—Lease, agricultural—Oral lease, validity of—Document containing admission of oral lease—Registration, whether necessary—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106.

Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act excludes agricultural leases from the operation of its own provisions and allows such leases or agreements to lease to be made without a written instrument.

The Registration Act only comes into operation when a written document has been executed either because the transaction cannot legally be carried out without one or because the parties choose to have one though it is not compulsory.

In proof of an oral lease granted by the defendant to the plaintiffs the latter produced a document executed by the defendant which ran as follows :—

"Of the annual rent for the two years 1918-19 and 1919-20 for the field of which I had given you a lease for five years, you have to-day paid me Rs. 65 as the rent for the current year, and you have already paid me the rent for last year and taken a receipt for it, leaving the rent for the next three years which I will take from you in each of those three years with a rent note :"

Held, that the document contained nothing more than a mention of an oral agreement made previously and did not require registration, but could be used as evidence of an admission by the defendant, just as if he had casually mentioned the agreement in the course of a private letter. N MAHADEO v. Riparian owners, rights of—Artificial and natural watercourses—Law in Burma same as in England—Lower owner damming channel—Damage caused to higher owner's property—Liability of lower owner.

In the case of a natural stream or water-course, each of the riparian owners is entitled to the unimpeded flow of water in its natural course and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land as a natural incident of the ownership of his land; while in the case of an artificial water-course, any right of the owner to the flow of water-course must rest on prescription or grant from or contract with the owner of the land from which the water is artificially brought.

Riparian owners—concl.

A water-course originally artificial may have been made under such circumstances, and have been used in such a way, that an owner of land situate on its bank will have all the rights over it that a riparian owner would have if it had been a natural stream.

The law applicable in lower Burma to the flow of and flooding by fresh-water rivers or water-courses, whether they be natural or artificial, or trespasses on the bed or soil of such rivers and streams, is not different from the law as applied to similar subjects in England.

A raised road or bund ran transversely across a depressed ground through which flowed a channel of water, and was properly provided with a gap for the flow and a bridge over the channel. The bund thus provided with an eye and a bridge to permit the inflow and out-flow of water, was interfered with by the owner of the land lower down who filled up the eye and channel course thereat and converted an innocuous bund into a dam, which dammed back the water on to the owner of the land higher up:

Held, (1) that the owner of the land lower down was responsible for the damage thus caused to the property of the higher owner;

(2) that it was wholly irrelevant who the body or person was which or who had actually formed the channel. P. C. MAUNG BYA v. MAUNG KYI NYO, 42 C. L. J. 156; 49 M. L. J. 282; A. I. R. 1925 P. it appeared that the provision for payment of damages could not be treated otherwise than as one for furnishing security for performance of the contract:

Held, that the breach of contract to sell could not be adequately relieved by compensation in money and a decree for specific performance was the appropriate relief.

The Court which actually passes a decree for specific performance, whether it is the Trial Court or the Court of Appeal, has power to make any stipulations it thinks fit with reference to the performance including the power to extend the time fixed for payment of the purchase-money by a party.

In considering whether extension of time should be granted, the delay need not be explained so minutely in a case of this sort as under the Limitation Act where it is sought to excuse a bar of limitation, but must be looked at more leniently.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff was not aware of the provisions of the decree until the time for payment had passed, and that the main cause of the delay was the inordinate time taken by the Court in granting a copy of its decree:

s. 26—Agreement that female holding estate shall not effect transfer without consent of male claimants—Death of some male claimants—Transfer with consent of surviving claimant, validity of—"Substantial compliance" with condition, what amounts to.

An agreement, arrived at between a female claimant to an estate on the one hand and three male claimants on the other, provided that the female should remain in possession of the estate during her lifetime and should pay the debts due from the estate out of the income of the property, appropriating the balance of the income to her own use but that she would not transfer any portion of the property without the consent of the male claimants, and that on her death the latter would get the property. It was further provided that should any of the male claimants die before the death of the female, his share would descend to his heirs. After the death of two of the male claimants, who had died leaving heirs, the female executed a mortgage in respect of property comprised in the estate with the consent of the surviving male claimant. The mortgage was also consented to by the majority of the heirs of the deceased claimants, but one of them who had not consented to the mortgage brought a suit to recover possession of his share of the estate on the allegation that he was not bound by the mortgage:

Held, (1) that on a proper construction of the agreement arrived at between the claimants the consent of the heirs of a male claimant who should happen to die during the lifetime of the female was not necessary to validate a transfer by the female;

(2) (Per Mukerji J., Boys, J. dissenting)—that the consent of the surviving male claimant did not amount to a "substantial compliance" with the condition laid down in the agreement and that the mortgage could not, therefore, be held to be binding on the plaintiff;

Per Mukerji, J.—Broadly speaking till the majority of at least one-half of the persons whose consent is necessary to a transaction give such consent, it cannot be said that there has been a "substantial compliance" with the condition within the meaning of s. 26 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Where one person by a mis-statement of fact intended to operate upon the mind of another induces a certain belief in the latter upon which he has acted, the person who has made the representation is estopped from subsequently denying its truth.

Where a person attests a deed of transfer of immoveable property in token of the fact that the property belongs to the transferor and that he is competent to transfer it, he is estopped by the provisions of s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act from subsequently contending that the property did not belong to the transferor but belonged to himself. *O MOHAMMAD MAZHAR-UD-DIN HASAN v. — s. 55—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Vendor and purchaser—Covenant against encumbrances, operation of—Suit based on breach of covenant, when maintainable—Rent due for period prior to sale—Purchaser, whether liable—Payment made by purchaser—Suit to recover the amount paid, whether maintainable.

In order to justify a suit based on the breach of a covenant against encumbrances contained in a conveyance it is requisite that an actual interruption, claim or demand be made on the purchaser; some hindrance or prevention of enjoyment proved; for, the chance of his being disturbed, and his liability to satisfy claimants, or, in other words, the mere existence of outstanding encumbrances, unless they prevent entry and enjoyment, will not constitute an immediate breach of the covenant.

Under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, a purchaser of immoveable property is not liable for rent due to the landlord for a period prior to the date of the sale.

Per Mukerji, J.—Where a purchaser discovers defects in the property before conveyance, he can either rescind the contract or successfully oppose a suit for specific performance; but if he discovers material defects after the conveyance he must make out a case of fraud in order to set aside the sale.

The mere existence of an encumbrance on the property conveyed does not give the purchaser a right to sue as on a breach of the covenant against encumbrances. In a suit of this description the plaintiff must allege the facts constituting the disturbance and that the disturbance was lawful, with sufficient particularity to show the breach of the covenant.

Where in order to save the property purchased from being proceeded against for the recovery of rents due to the landlord in respect of a period prior to the date of the sale, the rents are paid out of the estate of the purchaser and the purchaser subsequently brings a suit against the vendor to recover the amount of the payment, the suit is not one based on a breach of the covenant against encumbrances contained in the sale-deed but is one under s. 69 of the Contract Act.

In a suit under s. 69 of the Contract Act it is essential that there should be, first, a person who is bound by law to make a certain payment, secondly, another person who is interested in such payment being made, and thirdly, a payment by such last mentioned person. If these circumstances exist, the fiction of an implied request from the defendant to the plaintiff to make the payment may be properly imported into the case so as to bring it within the section.

The words "interest in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" in s. 69 of the Contract Act include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience or of any detriment capable of being assessed in money. — ss. 60, 61, 62—Mortgages, several—Redemption—Consolidation—Burden of proof.

The principle established by ss. 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act is that redemption of every separate mortgage should be permitted unless there is clear and unequivocal evidence to prove a contract between the parties to the contrary. There is a heavy burden cast on a mortgagee who wishes to prove a contract between him and the mortgagor to prevent such a redemption enjoined by law.

There is no authority for the proposition that a mortgagor not otherwise bound by contract, cannot redeem one or two or more mortgages held by his mortgagee over the same property without redeeming another or the others. If the mortgagee wishes to lend money or to make further advances on the term that of the mortgage of the property shall not be redeemed until the money due on another mortgage is paid he should effect that object by making it expressly part of his contract with the mortgagor. O BUNYAD SINGH v. An agreement executed by a tenant only, agreeing to cultivate land and to pay rent is not a "lease" under s. 105, Transfer of Property Act, because the document, being not executed by the lessor, the land owner, cannot transfer any right in the property within the definition as given in the section.

Direction 46 (d) (i) in the Burma Registration Directions has no application to such a document as the above. The document, however, is a "lease" within the wider definition given in s. 2 of the Registration Act, and is compulsorily registrable if it falls under s. 17 of the Act. R U THA NYO v. MG. When the owner of a land grants a perpetual lease of it in consideration of rent to be paid, as well as a premium, he gets no charge on the leasehold that he thus creates for the premium so payable.

There is a fundamental distinction under the Transfer of Property Act between a transfer of immoveable property and a transfer of the right to the enjoyment of immoveable property. A lease in perpetuity is merely a transfer of the right to enjoy property.

The only charge, valid in the Indian Law, on landed property is to be found in s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act which is confined to cases which deal with the transfer of the property itself.

After a trustee has taken possession of properties as trustee and dealt with them in the capacity of a trustee, he is estopped from disputing the validity of the trust.

A trustee for sale cannot purchase. A trustee, even if he be not a trustee for sale, can buy only subject to certain limitations.

When purchase is made through a trustee or in the name of a trustee, though for the benefit of a third person, it is as bad as the purchase by the trustee himself.

A partner of a trustee or any person from whom he may directly or indirectly derive benefit by reason of the purchase, cannot purchase a trust property from the trustee.

If the shares of two purchasers of property are not defined, the presumption is that they have one-half share each.

If property is purchased by two persons, one of whom owing to some inherent incapacity in him or owing to his original relation with the property is incapable of acquiring any title to it, the title of the other purchaser is not affected by reason of the incapacity of his co-purchaser. Therefore, if a purchase is made by a bona fide purchaser jointly with a trustee, the purchase is invalid and inoperative only in respect of half share of the trustee. C PRIA NATH CHATTERJEE v. Vendor and purchaser—Agreement of sale—Date fixed for completion of sale—Time, whether of essence of contract—Purchaser, when entitled to possession—Earnest money—Forfeiture—Defect of title discovered subsequently, whether entitles purchaser to recover money forfeited.

In the absence of an express stipulation to that effect and of circumstances implying such an intention, the date fixed for the completion of a sale of immoveable property in the agreement for sale cannot be regarded as of the essence of the contract. It may, however, be made so by either party giving proper notice to the other to complete within a reasonable time, provided that at the time of the notice there has been some default or unreasonable delay by that other.

There is an implied repudiation if the purchaser fails to complete the sale on the day he is bound to complete under the contract, otherwise, if the purchaser is in default the vendor can make time of the essence of the contract by giving the purchaser notice to complete at a reasonable date and threatening forfeiture of the deposit on non-completion on that date.

Where the stipulation in the agreement is that possession would be given by evicting tenants, on completion of the conveyance, the purchaser's right to possession is coincident with the right to the execution of the conveyance by vendor.

A deposit paid under a contract of sale serves two purposes; if the sale is carried out it goes against the purchase-money but primarily it is a security for the performance of the contract. Even if there is no express provision in the agreement for sale to that effect the vendor would be entitled to retain the deposit as forfeited when the contract goes off by the default of the purchaser.

If the purchaser has, by his default in completion after he has accepted the title, given the vendor the right to rescind the contract and retain the deposit as forfeited and such right has been exercised the forfeiture is final. A subsequent discovery of any defect in the vendor's title does not confer on the purchaser the right to recover the deposit. C FAZLE AHMED v. RAJENDRA NATH ROY CHOUDHURI, A. I. In order that there may be an effectual waiver of any stipulation in an agreement, it must be intentional and based upon full knowledge of the circumstances.

If the purchaser enters into possession or pays the whole or part of the purchase-money, or does other acts, which a purchaser is not bound to do until a good title has been made, he may be deemed to have waived objections to the title.

The question as to whether the objection as to title is waived, is one of fact, and it may be that under certain circumstances the payment of purchase-money may indicate a waiver on the purchaser's part.

Where there is an agreement for sale, and where there has been transfer of possession in pursuance of that agreement to the purchaser and the contract price has been received by the vendor, the vendor cannot recover back the possession, but must be prepared to fulfil the contract by executing a conveyance. B MEGHJI MOORJI v. — Contract for sale of goods—Time, whether of essence of contract—Breach by buyer—Supply of goods by seller—Subsequent breach by seller—Buyer, whether entitled to damages.

Plaintiff, a ruling Prince, entered into a contract with the defendant Company whereby the latter agreed to supply a certain number of goods wagons to be used for the purposes of the plaintiff's Railway on condition that one-third of the price was to be paid along with the order, another third at the time when the under-frames of the wagons should be wheeled and the balance on delivery. The wagons were required for a metre gauge Railway and delivery was to be made within six months from the date of the order. One-third of the price of the wagons was paid along with the order but there was considerable delay in the construction of the wagons due to war conditions and when the defendant Company called upon the plaintiff to pay the second instalment of the price of the wagons on the under-frames being wheeled, the plaintiff made default and failed to make the payment in accordance with the terms of the contract. The defendant Company thereafter completed the construction of the wagons and delivered a certain number of wagons to the plaintiff, and refused to deliver the remaining wagons until the whole of the price was paid by the plaintiff. As the plaintiff in spite of the repeated demands of the defendant failed to pay the balance of the price the defendant Company disposed of the remaining wagons elsewhere. Thereupon the plaintiff sent the defendant Company a cheque for the second instalment of the price of the wagons and called upon the Company to deliver the remaining wagons and receive the balance of the price. On the failure of the Company to comply with this demand plaintiff filed a suit against the Company to recover damages for non-delivery of the remaining wagons:

Held, (1) that having regard to the times when the three instalments of the contract price were according to the contract to become payable, and to the fact that the manufacture of the wagons involved considerable expenditure by the defendant Company in providing materials for their construction, and in the payment of men who would necessarily be employed in constructing them, and to the fact that it might be difficult to enforce, in a British Court or, in a Court of the State of which the plaintiff was the ruler, payment by the plaintiff of the contract price, it must have been the intention of the parties when the contract was made that time should be of the essence of the contract as to the times when the three instalments of the contract price should be paid;

(2) that when plaintiff had, after he had notice that the under-frames of the wagons had been wheeled, made default in payment of the second instalment of the price, which, in fact, was a refusal by him to perform the contract in its entirety, the defendant Company was entitled to treat the contract as void and to rescind it;

(3) that the defendant Company by delivering some of the wagons to the plaintiff treated the contract as a subsisting contract and that, inasmuch as the contract price was not payable until all the wagons had been delivered, the defendant Company was not justified in refusing to deliver the remaining wagons till the whole of the price was paid;

(4) that, therefore, the defendant Company had committed a breach of the contract and were liable to the plaintiff in damages. P C BURN & Co. v. LUKHDIRJI OF MORVI STATE, 23 A. L. J. 806; A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 188; L. R. 6 A. (P. C.) 147; 30 C. W. N. 145 52

Plaintiff sold certain land to the defendant and a portion of the purchase-money was left in deposit with the defendant for payment to certain mortgagees of land other than that sold to the defendant. Defendant failed to redeem those mortgages and the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to recover damages from him on the allegation that his failure to redeem the mortgages had caused loss to the plaintiff:

Held, that inasmuch as the defendant was not himself entitled to sue for redemption of the mortgages, it was the duty of the plaintiff to take steps to redeem the mortgages or to ask the defendant to refund the portion of the purchase-money which had been left with him, and that, not having done so, plaintiff was not entitled to recover any damages from the defendant. L SANSARI v. Plaintiff purchased certain goods from the defendant at Calcutta and it was agreed that delivery of the goods should be taken from the defendant's warehouse at Calcutta but that if the plaintiff so desired the defendant would forward the goods to Lucknow. Plaintiff asked the defendant to despatch the goods to Lucknow, which the defendant did, but instead of forwarding the Railway receipt to the plaintiff, the defendant sent it to a Bank in Lucknow with the instructions that it was to be handed over to the plaintiff only on payment of the price of the goods. Plaintiff paid the price of the goods and on taking delivery of the goods found that there was a shortage of goods and that out of those goods which had been despatched from Calcutta a considerable portion had been badly damaged either in transit or before they were despatched. The plaintiff, therefore, sued the defendant for a return of the price of the goods which had not been delivered in safe condition to the former plus proportionate freight:

Held, (1) that delivery having been agreed to be taken at the defendant's warehouse at Calcutta, the property in the goods had passed to the plaintiff and that thereafter the defendant was only the plaintiff's agent for the purpose of forwarding the goods to Lucknow;

(2) but that the defendant having imposed a condition upon the plaintiff that he must pay for the price of the goods before he would be able to take delivery of them at Lucknow, a condition which had not been agreed upon between the plaintiff and the defendant as his agent, had altered the terms of the Plaintiff agreed to purchase 50 bales of yarn of a particular brand from the defendants from out of a lot which the latter had agreed to buy from L & Sons who in their turn had agreed to buy from S & Sons. Defendants gave intimation to the plaintiffs of the arrival of "two bales out of the bales mentioned in the contract letter," but the latter ignored the intimation. Reminders were sent by the defendants stating that L & Sons had intimated to them that the terms of the contract would be enforced and that the defendants were giving intimation to the plaintiffs accordingly. In a suit by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the amount of the advance paid by the former in respect of the contract:

Held, (1) that the description of the goods mentioned in the letter of intimation sent by the plaintiffs was sufficiently definite and must be presumed to correspond to that in the contract;

(2) that it was not a condition precedent to delivery by defendants to plaintiffs that there should have been actual delivery to each of the prior purchasers in turn, and that the tender by the defendants was, therefore, good and valid and plaintiffs committed a breach of the contract by failing to take delivery;

(3) that the plaintiffs' breach of contract as to the lots tendered amounted to a repudiation of the whole contract and the defendants were not bound to tender the rest of the goods under the contract;

(4) That the plaintiffs' suit must fail inasmuch as the amount of damages which the defendants could have claimed was in excess of the amount of the advance claimed by the plaintiff. M LAKSHMANA v. RAMALINGA MUDALIAR, 48 M. L. J. 522; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 888. 206

—, construction of—Principles applicable—Equest, vested or contingent—Gift over, effect of—De feasance.

The first principle to be borne in mind in regard to the construction of a Will is that as far as possible, the real intentions of the testator as expressed in the Will should be gathered and ascertained and given effect to. The so-called rules of construction are merely aids to enable the Court to discern or discover the real intentions of the testator.

In construing a Will by an Englishman in the English language drawn up by a Solicitor and bristling with highly technical expressions and clauses, it must be assumed that the technical expressions employed were employed with the meaning and significance generally understood to attach to them in the particular branch of the law.

A bequest to a person for life and after his death to his children, becomes vested in each child as and when he or she is born and the vesting is not postponed till the death of the life-tenant. The expression "after the death" is taken to indicate merely the time when the gift over becomes reduced to session and not the time when the right to possession vests. The principle underlying this rule is that no contingency is imported by the fact that the legacy is given after a life-estate in the property bequeathed. As nothing is more certain than that every person who lives must die, the death of a life-tenant is an event not contingent but certain; and therefore, a gift on the death of a life-tenant is a bequest to take effect not on a contingency but on an event certain to happen; and, therefore, the donees of the gift are held to obtain a vested interest in it as and when they come into being. But if from the words of the bequest the intention of the testator is clear that the persons taking should be only such persons as survive or are alive on the death of the life-tenant, then it is a contingent bequest contingent upon the donee surviving the life-tenant. In such a case till such contingency is fulfilled, there can be no vesting. The principle underlying this rule of construction is that though the death of the life-tenant is certain, still it is by no means certain that the donee will survive the life-tenant.

The law does not favour the divesting of an estate already vested and in any case the condition for divesting and the intention to divest should be clearly made out. If, however, from a gift over clause the intention of the testator is to be clearly gathered that any estate that may have vested previously should be divested on the contingency referred to in the gift over clause then such intention should be given effect to and not otherwise.

A testator made a bequest to his daughter as follows:—"As to the sum of Rs. 30,000, unto my daughter Alice Gray for her life for her sole and separate use and after her death in trust for the lawful children or any lawful child of the said Alice Gray who being sons or son shall attain the age of 21 years." A later clause provided: "If the said Alice Gray shall die leaving no child living at her death who being a son shall attain the age of 21 years, then after her death and such default or failure of children, I bequeath the said monies and investments, or so much thereof as shall not have become vested, unto my son Campbell Gray whom I hereby appoint as my residuary legatee." Alice Gray died leaving no issue living, her only son having predeceased her after attaining 21 years of age. On her death the widow and the representative of Campbell Gray, the son and residuary legatee, claimed the monies on the ground that there was no vesting in the deceased son and that in any case there was a defeasance, while the father and representative of the deceased son of Alice Gray claimed that the estate had vested in her son on his attaining 21 years of age:

Held, on a construction of the Will, (1) that the contingent bequest in favour of Alice Gray's son became vested in him on his attaining 21 years of age, without reference to the death of his mother;

(2) that the intention of the testator in the gift over clause was that it should not affect any interest already vested and that the clause did not operate to divest Alice Gray's son of the estate which had vested in him;

(3) that, therefore, the father and legal representative of Alice Gray's deceased son was entitled to the
